ANDHRA STATE

By

K. S. SANKARA AIYAR, Advocate, Madras.

On division, Madras State will continue as before, but with territory diminished, and the Andhra State will be formed under Article 3 (a) by separation from the Madras State of the Andhra Districts. On separation, Andhra State may be either a Part A State or Part C State. If the former, it must have a Governor and a High Court. If the latter, it will be governed by the President acting through Chief Commissioner, or Lieut. Governor or the Governor of a neighbouring State ; if administered through Chief Commissioner or Lieut. Governor, it will have a Legislature or Council of advisers or both, and a High Court created for it or any Court in that State declared to be High Court. The Parliament may extend the jurisdiction of the High Court of Part A State to Part C State, in which case the jurisdiction of the Madras High Court may be extended to Andhra State also. But Andhras will not consent to have their State a Part C State.

If it is a Part A State, it must have a Governor and a High Court. Part VI of the Constitution applies to Part A States. It contains Article 153 which provides that there shall be a Governor for each State and Article 214 which provides that there shall be a High Court for each State. The specific provision excludes the possibility of one Governor and one High Court for two Part A States ; for then each will not have a Governor and a High Court. The analogy of British Crown cannot apply, for there the Sovereign occupies a unique position as the Constitutional Head of many Governments. Can a single person occupy the position of Governor of two States ? Article 158 (2) provides that the Governor shall not occupy any other office of profit. The Governor of Madras State will occupy an office of profit if he accepts the Governorship of Andhra State also. Under the Constitution the Executive power of the State vests in the Governor. If the Executive power of two States should vest in a single Governor it will give rise to a confusion in the exercise of those powers. Such Executive power extends to all matters with respect to which the Legislature of the State has power to make Laws. Each Legislature can make Laws only for itself and not for the other. If one Legislature made some Laws and the other did not, or the other made Laws to the contrary, what is the Government to do ? The Governor is to be advised by a Council of Ministers. Where their interest conflicted, if the Ministers of one State advised one way, and the Ministers of the other the other way, what is the Governor to do ? Under Article 168 (1), the Governor is a component part of the Legislature. When the Legislatures are different for the two States, can they have a single Governor as the component part. If one Legislature passed one Bill and another Legislature passed a different Bill, is the same Governor to assent to both ? If one Legislature sat and the other did not, can the Governor promulgate any Ordinance ? Is he to play the part of Jekyll and Hyde ? The above are a few of the considerations which clearly demonstrate that having a single Governor for two States is inconsistent with the Constitution.

The provision that there shall be a High Court for each State rules out the possibility of a single High Court for two Part A States. But Article 230 contains provisions which allow a High Court of one State to exercise jurisdiction over another State and Article 232 makes provision for such a contingency. The consequence is that the Governor of the State in which the High Court has its principal seat shall have the powers conferred on him by part V and the consolidated fund with reference to such High Court with such extended jurisdiction will be the consolidated fund of the State in which that High Court has its principal seat. In the present case as the High Court will have its principal seat in the Madras City, the State of Madras will have the power to be consulted as to the appointment of District Judges of the Andhra State and to exercise control over Subordinate Courts of the Andhra State. It is not likely that Andhras will consent to this. The said Articles are intended to cover cases such as East Punjab and Delhi where a High Court of a Part A or Part B State has jurisdiction over the Courts of a Part C State.

If for Andhra there should be a separate Governor and a separate High Court can they be located at Madras? If so located, the Governor and Judges would be amenable to the jurisdiction of the Madras State as its subjects which will be anomalous. Will the Andhra High Court have no original jurisdiction? Unless they are specifically excluded, the Courts in Madras will have jurisdiction over them. Art. 227 vests in the High Court powers of Superintendence over all courts and tribunals throughout the territories in relation to which it exercises jurisdiction. The fiat of the one court will be available over the other. Where will be the principal seat of the Andhra High Court and how will Articles 230 and 232 affect the powers and jurisdiction of the State of Madras and its Governor over such a High Court?

The problem will not be solved by converting the Madras City into a Part C State, but on the other hand it will become more complicated, for then, instead of two States having a single capital it will be three States having a single capital. A Part C State will be administered by the President and Madras and Andhra States by their respective Governors. If all of them were to be located in the same city, the confusion will become all the greater. If the State of Madras were to have another capital in Tamil Nad, and the Andhra State to have its own capital in the Andhra State and Madras City be constituted into a Commissioner's Province, the result may only be that the city will be shorn of its importance, but it will solve no problem nor do good to anyone, but, on the other hand, it may do infinite harm to South India.

If Madras City can be the seat of Madras and Andhra States, why should not Hyderabad, which the Andhras expect may become their future capital, be now made the seat of its present capital?

VILLAGE OFFICES IN THE STATE OF MADRAS—SEX IF A DISQUALIFICATION.

By

P. VENKATARAMANAMURTHY, Advocate, Ramachandrapuram, East Godavari District.

The earliest provision in the Madras State as to village officers was the Madras Karnams Regulation (XXIX of 1802).

Section 7 of that Regulation provided as follows :—

“In filling vacancies of the office of Karnam the heirs of the preceding Karnam shall be chosen by the landholders concerned except in the case of incapacity on proof of which before the Judge of the Zilla the said landholders shall be free to exercise their discretion in the nomination of persons to fill vacancies.”

This Regulation XXIX of 1802 ceased to be in force after the passing of the Madras Hereditary Village Offices Act and the Madras Proprietary Estates Village Service Act. These two Acts repealed the Madras Regulation (VI of 1831) which was the law governing the village officers in the Madras State formerly. Regulation VI of 1831 did not prohibit the appointment of women to any hereditary village office.

The Board's Standing Order 154 (24) runs as follows :—“Appointments made under Regulation VI of 1831—Appointments to village offices properly made prior to the introduction of the Madras Proprietary Estates Village Service Act (II of 1894) or the Madras Hereditary Village Offices Act (III of 1895) can be questioned only on the ground of inferior title and not on that of sex or other disability for the first time removed or created by those Acts.”

The oldest reported decision regarding women as village officers is *Alymalammal v. Venkataramanayya*¹, wherein it is held that women were not entitled to the office of Karnam, though they have been, and sometimes are allowed to fill the office nominally.

In *Venkataramamma v. Ramanujasami*², their Lordships of the Madras High Court followed the above decision and held that sex has been regarded as incapacitating women from office. Their Lordships were not prepared to reverse the above decision so long regarded as authoritative and so obviously reasonable and expedient on public grounds.

1. S.D.A. Decisions (Madras), 1844, page 85.

2. (1880) I.L.R. 2 Mad. 312.

The two above decisions were confirmed by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court in *Venkata v. Rama*¹ in a case under Regulation VI of 1831 and Madras Act IV of 1866. Referring to *Venkataratnam v. Ramanujasami*², the Chief Justice observed that it must be taken until those decisions are overruled, that in the case of permanently settled estates inability by reason of age or sex to discharge personally the duties of the office is a sufficient disqualification. The Board of Revenue properly considered that hereditary claims should be recognized to the extent to which Regulation XXIX of 1802 had allowed them.

In *Chandramma v. Venkataraju*³, a case under section 7 of Regulation XXIX of 1802, their Lordships followed *Venkataratnam v. Ramanujasami*² and *Venkata v. Rama*¹. Their Lordships held in this case that a woman could not hold the office of a Karnam and that when the immediate heir was incapacitated the nearest Sapinda of the deceased Karnam was entitled to succeed to the office.

*Abdukuri Venkataramadas v. Pachigolla Gavarraju*⁴ is an authority for the proposition that enfranchisement of service inams in the name of a widow makes those inams her Stridhana property. This decision is important for the reason it throws much light on the question of women as village officers.

Regulation VI of 1831 did not actually prohibit the appointment of women. But the Board's Standing Orders which guide the proceedings of Collectors in making a proper selection declared that females should be excluded from the succession on the ground that they were obviously incapable of performing those duties. But they did not exclude persons claiming through females.

According to sections 10 and 11 of the Madras Hereditary Village Offices Act, no person is eligible for a village office of Class I if such person is not of the male sex.

The President of India exercised his powers under Article 372 (2) of the Constitution of India and passed the Adaptation of Laws (Amendment) Order, 1950, dated 5th June, 1950, in his Constitution Order, No. 17 whereby the words "is not of the male sex" in sections 10 and 11 of the Act were omitted with retrospective effect from the 26th January, 1950. Thus there has been no sex disability since the 26th January, 1950, for a woman to hold a village office of Class I.

The Board of Revenue ought to have amended the relevant Standing Orders and issued necessary instructions to the Revenue Courts and Revenue Officers to implement the above fundamental right of women.

But the Board of Revenue seems to have taken the view that women are still barred from succeeding to such offices on account of section 10 (2) of the Act—

"The succession shall devolve on a single heir according to the general custom and rule of primogeniture governing succession to impartible Zamindari in South India."

Though Articles 14 and 15 of the Constitution recognise the right of equality and prohibit discrimination on the ground of sex, this discrimination is still continuing in the Law of impartible estates, and consequently under this Act also, in spite of the above, Constitution Order.

If two sections of the same Act are repugnant to each other the cardinal principle of interpretation of statutes is to give a harmonious construction of both the sections, but the present case is not such.

Hence it may be pointed out that the Legislature should amend section 10 (2) of the Act suitably at a very early date so as to give full effect to this fundamental right of women. Until then the remedy of aggrieved women is only by way of petitions to the High Court under Article 226 of the Constitution.

LEGAL PRACTICE BY EX-JUDGES.

By

P. N. SUBRAHMANYA AYYAR, M.A., B.L., Advocate, Tiruchirappalli.

The recent resolution by the Executive Committee of the Provincial Bar Federation that the Judges should not be allowed to practice in any of the Courts after their tenure of office is quite welcome and would, I hope, be properly appreciated by all concerned. To allow the Judges to practice again in the Courts after their tenure of office, would not only militate against the high dignity of office of a Judge, but would also embarrass the other Judges and the members of the Bar, and I fear, the retired Judge himself may not feel his position very happy and comfortable and may have to form a category by himself. If the principle is to attract the best talent from the Bar, this would be a poor solace. Best talent would always be available if it is flavoured with a sense of sacrifice and service to the country, and if the age limit is extended to sixty five years and if the dignity of the office is well maintained. Many of our revered leaders are between sixty and seventy years and they are serving our country, most efficiently and with youthful vigour. It looks as though they become young again after sixty. There can be no objection therefore to the age limit being extended to sixty-five years.

REVISION AGAINST AN ORDER OF DISCHARGE—WHEN TO BE MOVED.

By

S. N. PATNAIK, M.A.; Assistant Public Prosecutor, Srikakulam District.

In the latest decision on the subject by His Lordship Justice Govinda Menon the desirability is suggested of waiting till the final disposal of the case, in the matter of moving a revision against what may be called a partial discharge. The said pronouncement of the Madras High Court in the case reported in *Jayaram, In re*¹, is a short one, and at the relevant parts of the dictum His Lordship has laid down thus: " In my opinion, the proper time at which the propriety of a discharge like the one in question here, can be agitated in revision is only after the Court of enquiry or trial has finally disposed of the matter "

" As a matter of practice and convenience it would always be better if the applications by the prosecution for setting aside orders of discharge in cases where charges have been framed against some of the accused alone, or against all the accused under some sections alone, were made only after the Court finally disposes of the matter " How far this suggestion can be supported in law, and the consequence, in practice of following the suggestion may be worth while to be considered on a few out of several aspects of the matter.

(1) This suggestion is not supported by any reasoning to show that it is made or given in accordance with the existing law of Criminal Procedure or in the interests of justice according to law. Yet it seems to lay down what it could not have done except by means of or with the help of an express provision of law to that effect. It provides on the one hand a legal basis or authority for the delay—that could not have been otherwise condoned—, of a varying period for each case, in filing a revision petition with regard to a specified class of criminal cases as distinguished and discriminated from the others, while all are subject to the same procedure in law. On the other hand it also provides a legal authority or basis for an objection—that could not otherwise be raised—against filing a revision petition during the pendency of the rest of the case or of the case against the rest of the accused.

(2) This ruling relies on a former pronouncement of the same High Court in *Govindaraju v. Emperor*¹. That former decision however had only considered about the need of reasons for an order at the stage of discharging some of the accused or omitting to frame some of the charges against them. The legal necessity or desirability for the prosecution to wait till the final disposal of the case, in questioning such a discharge order, was not considered by his Lordship Justice Venkataramanarao in that decision.

(3) The relevant provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code—sections 435 to 437—do not prohibit, and no other provision in the Code is calculated to discourage, moving a revision against a discharge order—or of any order of a subordinate Criminal Court—as soon as it is passed. On the other hand the revision by the District Courts has been specifically and specially—I think, in a safe and salutary manner—provided for, in respect of discharge and dismissal orders passed by the Courts subordinate to them. Even the Court of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate under section 435, Criminal Procedure Code, is empowered to call for the records of any proceeding before a Court subordinate to it in order to satisfy itself as to the correctness, legality or propriety of any finding, sentence or order recorded or passed and as to the regularity of any proceedings of such inferior Court. The nature and extent of relief that may be ordered by the District Magistrate, or Sessions Judge in such matters with respect to cases pending in lower Courts is clearly stated in sections 436 and 437, Criminal Procedure Code, only to be availed of, asked for and obtained. There is no need or desirability indicated in law to wait for the final disposal of the case, in order to move for the kind of relief that may be suitable or proper to obtain, during pendency of the proceedings in the lower Court. The relief to be effective, just and useful for the State or the party concerned in the criminal proceedings, has got to be sought and obtained not only properly and legally, but also promptly and at proper time.

(4) In waiting for the result of the rest of the case or the case against the rest of the accused, the accused who is (or are) discharged, and the prosecution too are needlessly left in suspense about the prospects of that part of the case ending in discharge. The accused so discharged is likely to be prejudiced for no fault of his if prosecuted after the case against the other accused is finally disposed of, not only on account of the needless delay, but also due to the competence of his co-accused then to depose against him as witnesses, and fixing up of further evidence for prosecution in his absence so as to be of some use or abuse against him later on—as would not have been normally available—when further inquiry may be ordered in respect of the discharge order, passed by the lower Court in his favour. On the other hand the prosecution has the disadvantage of allowing such accused the competence of his co-accused to depose in his favour, and the time as well as material that would not have been available for him in the normal course if his discharge order was set aside in time, and proceedings continued along with him.

(5) Even considering the interests of the accused who is so discharged while his co-accused continue to be tried, it would be unfair to him that the discharge order remains to be considered and may be revised only after the rest of the case is (or accused are) conclusively dealt with. This may be clear when such an accused is sought to be examined for prosecution or for defence or by Court—and nothing in law prevents such examination—during the rest of the proceedings in the case continued against the other accused. It would place him in an unenviable position of deposing on oath as a witness in a matter which may be judicially considered, later on, against him when he appears as an accused.

(6) The difficulty may also arise of having to ignore the legal advantage (or disadvantage) of a joint trial (as effected by sections 10, 30 of the Indian Evidence Act, etc.) in suitable cases, for no fault of the parties concerned, and entirely on account of this suggested desirability of waiting.

(7) In cases wherein section 437, Criminal Procedure Code is applicable this suggestion to wait would expect the Sessions Court also to wait for its own disposal in the rest of the case, which naturally leads to prejudice—not intended in law or fact—in the hearing of the revision petition and in the commitment that may have to be ordered in respect of the accused improperly discharged.

(8) In effect, again the ruling seems now to deprive the prosecution of its former freedom and facility or to restrict its responsibility, of being guided by its own good sense and best interests in accordance with law in the matter of moving a revision against a discharge order.

In waiting for the result of the rest of the case, therefore, there is no sanction or support of law, while there is possibility of acquiring anomalous and prejudicial attributes for the further proceedings of the case. On the other hand the free and timely access, for what it is worth, to a competent Court may not be discouraged by means of a weighty pronouncement of the High Court, which naturally exercises much legal authority for influencing the filing and disposal of revision petitions under sections 436 and 437, Criminal Procedure Code. It is so, even as a desirability of procedure suggested by the High Court for our guidance, in addition to and apart from the concerned provisions of law. It is humbly submitted therefore that the pronouncement in question in *Jayaram In re*¹ requires reconsideration.

BOOK REVIEWS.

MULLA'S INDIAN CONTRACT ACT (Students' edition) Fifth Edition, 1953 : Published by N. M. Tripathi, Ltd., Bombay. Price Rs. 10.

This excellent little commentary on the Indian Contract Act needs no introduction to those in law and commerce. In a short compass the law relating to contracts is expounded so clearly and well and in such an analytical fashion that its utility to students (and lawyers too to a certain extent) cannot be over-emphasised. Though the present edition does not contain the commentaries on the Sale of Goods Act and the Partnership Act, it is exhaustive on the Contract Act. It is well also that the two Acts are separately published as they are now independent Acts and no longer part of the Contract Act.

The paragraph heading is quite useful. The table of cases and index are exhaustive. Printing and get-up is all that is desirable. The synopsis is an useful addition.

CONVEYANCING—PRECEDENTS AND FORMS (WITH NOTES) by Shiva Gopal, M.Sc., LL.B., Advocate. Published by Eastern Book Company, Lucknow. Price Rs. 8.

The utility of a book of forms and precedents to a practitioner needs no introduction. Troublesome questions of interpretation of doubtful terms and the intention of parties are avoided by a proper drafting of a deed at the inception. Such precise drafting is attained by conforming to standard forms and precedents which have stood the test of time and have been subject to judicial scrutiny.

This little book contains over two hundred and fifty model forms, arranged under proper subject headings divided into several chapters. A chapter is added giving forms of certain petitions before courts in respect of proceedings arising under Writs, Divorce, Guardian and wards, Insolvency, etc. Though strictly speaking these forms are not part of a book on Conveyancing, still their inclusion will be found a useful guide to beginners in the profession. The inclusion of the schedule to the Stamp Act, may not be of lasting value as the book itself, as the stamp duties are often subject to variation in the states.

But it must be added that the value of a book of Forms and Precedents in Conveyancing lies, not in its condensation but in its exhaustiveness. As a guide to students and beginners the book is a useful addition to the existing works on the subject.

PREM'S LAW OF CRIMINAL APPEALS AND REVISIONS by Daulat Ram Prem, Senior Advocate, Supreme Court of India. Arora Law House, Simla. Price Rs. 20.

The author is known to the profession by a number of his publications already in the field. Some of his previous publications have received the good opinion of eminent Advocates and Judges. The present book is without a preface and leaves undisclosed the author's mind in bringing out the book or the back-ground on which it is set.

The first two chapters are obviously intended to be an introduction to the subject dealt with in the book. The remarks of the author on a wide range of a variety of subjects are not beyond controversy. Their utility in a book relating to Criminal Appeal and Revision is not also clear.

Be it as it may, the body of the book relating to Appeals and Revisions in criminal cases are divided into several convenient chapters. The subject dealt with in each chapter is divided into several headings and the relevant case-law is also cited under each subject. The printing and get-up of the book is excellent. Though the subject dealt with in this book is nothing new and is covered by any standard commentary on Criminal Procedure, still the present book as a separate handy volume will be of use to practitioners on this branch of the law.

SUMMARY OF ENGLISH CASES.

GENERAL CLEANING CONTRACTORS, LTD. v. CHRISTMAS, (1952) 2 All E.R. 1110 (H.L.).

Master and Servant—Duty to provide safe system of working—Scope of.

If employers employ men on dangerous work for their own profit, they must take proper steps to protect them, even if they are expensive. If they cannot afford to provide adequate safeguards, they should not ask them to do the work at all.

It is the duty of an employer to give such general safety instructions as a reasonably careful employer who has considered the problem presented by the work would give to his workmen.

Common law demands that employers should take reasonable care to lay down a reasonably safe system of work. Employers are not exempted from this duty by the fact that their men are experienced and might, if they were in the position of an employer, be able to lay down a reasonably safe system of work themselves. Workmen are not in the position of employers. Their duties are not performed in the calm atmosphere of a board room with the advice of experts.

The problem is one for the employer to solve and should not be left to the workman. It can be solved by general orders and the provision of appropriate appliances. (Earl Jowitt, Lord Oaksey, Lord Reid and Lord Tucker).

PROHIBITION : CONSTITUTIONAL POSITION REGARDING.

BY

K. VENKOBA RAO, M.L., Advocate, Madras.

Of late, there has been a spate of pronouncements and writings from diverse sources regarding the validity of scrapping prohibition, and the object of the present note is to present the data on the subject and sum up the pros and cons of the question; which it may be pointed out, are so nicely balanced that it is somewhat difficult to be dogmatic about the conclusion which can reasonably be reached therefrom.

To appreciate the controversy in its true perspective, it is necessary to some extent to go into the history of the matter. As settled by the Constituent Assembly, Part IV, of the Constitution of India (1950) is headed 'Directive Principles of State Policy' and Article 36 lays down that "In this Part, unless the context otherwise requires, 'the State' has the same meaning as in Part III."

That is 'State' includes Parliament, State Legislatures, Union and State Governments and Local authorities, etc. Article 37 says:

"The provisions contained in this Part shall not be enforceable by any Court, but the principles therein laid down are nevertheless fundamental in the governance of the country and it shall be the duty of the state to apply these principles in making laws."

Article 47 lays down that the State shall regard the raising of the level of nutrition, etc., as among its primary duties and goes on to say that

"in particular, the State shall endeavour to bring about prohibition of the consumption, except for medicinal purposes, of intoxicating drinks and of drugs which are injurious to health."

One has to go back to the Supplementary Report of the Advisory Committee on the subject of Fundamental Rights (presided over by Sardar Patel and presented on 30th August, 1947) to locate the source of the present articles. The heading of the part in that Report was 'Fundamental Principles of Governance' and Article 1 of the Report laid down that the "principles of policy set forth in this part are intended for the guidance of the State, while these principles are not cognisable by any Court, they are nevertheless fundamental in the governance of the country and their application in the making of laws shall be the duty of the State."

Article 10 of the Report dealing with nutrition, contains no reference to the prohibition of the consumption of intoxicating drinks. In the Draft Constitution the present Article 37 was Article 29 and Article 47 was Article 38. The heading of the Report had been changed into the present heading, as also the phraseology of Article 1 of the Report so as to conform to the phraseology of present Article 37. The rider as to prohibition was added to Article 38 (in the draft) during the discussion of that Article by the Constituent Assembly.

Because these principles are not justiciable, the argument has been advanced that they can be disregarded with impunity by a Legislature in enacting laws. Whether this is the true position can only be answered with reference to the pronouncements of important members of the Drafting Committee in the Constituent Assembly during the discussion on Article 28 (present Article 36). Dr. Ambedkar pointed out that it was the intention of the Constituent Assembly that in future both the Legislature and the Executive should not merely pay lip service to these principles but that they should be made the basis of all executive and legislative action that may be taken hereafter in the matter of the governance of the country. Mr. Alladi Krishnaswami Ayyar said on the 23rd November, 1949, in the Constituent Assembly :

"Having regard to the wide nature of the subjects dealt with in these articles and the obvious difficulty in making the subjects dealt with by these articles justiciable, they have been classed as directive principles of state policy. . . . No ministry responsible to the people can afford lightly to ignore the provisions in Part IV of the Constitution."

The Supreme Court in *The State of Madras v. Champakam Dorairajan*¹ while concerned with the somewhat different though cognate question as to whether directive principles can override the provisions of Part III have remarked that so long as there is no infringement of fundamental rights there can be no objection to the State acting in accordance with the directive principles. This language is not capable of the interpretation that laws violating directive principles are invalid. In view of the above pronouncement of the highest tribunal the views of Somasundaram, J., in *Champakam Dorairajan v. The State of Madras*² and of Kapur and Falshaw, JJ., in *Om Parkash v. State*³, that the articles in Part III must be read with the directive principles, assume a subsidiary and academic importance. Viswanatha Sastri, J. in *Champakam Dorairajan v. The State of Madras*² opines that discrimination which is prohibited by Part III cannot be admitted by the backdoor of Part IV. The absence of an article similar to Article 13 (which invalidates laws violating Part III) in Part IV, and the language of Article 37 with its reference to the 'duty' and not 'obligation' of the State to make laws consistent with Part IV, militate against the invalidation of laws offending Part IV. But the question arises, if Part IV made no difference to the validity of laws enacted in defiance of the principles contained therein, what was the object in enacting Part IV? This is a somewhat difficult question to answer and one can only guess the intention of the Drafting Committee in putting Part IV from the circumstances under which the Constitution was framed. Having regard to entry 8 of List II (intoxicating liquors, that is to say, the production, manufacture, possession, transport, purchase and sale of intoxicating liquors), entry 19 of list III (drugs and poisons), entry 51 list II (duties of excise on alcoholic liquors for human consumption manufactured in the State) and Article 246 dealing with the subject-matter of laws made by Parliament and State Legislatures, the validity of liquor excise legislation would appear to be beyond doubt. Having regard to Article 372 which deals with continuance of existing laws it would appear that repeal of prohibition laws could be brought about by the competent Legislature contemplated by that Article. But as pointed out above, the crucial question still remains to be answered, what purpose does Part IV serve if it is nothing more than a charter of pious platitudes, or a leaf torn from a tome enshrining political manifestos? To answer this question one must go to the very foundations on which our constitutional edifice has been reared and a reference to the Constitution of the United States of America thus becomes inevitable. The American Constitution is based on judicial supremacy, judicial veto, due process, and such cognate doctrines. Our Constitution has plumped for Parliamentary Supremacy and has no particular liking for American due process. The process of jettisoning American due process began with the enactment of Article 21 and culminated with *A. K. Gopalan v. The State of Madras*⁴ where the Supreme Court was averse to converting itself into a third chamber of the Legislature. In my opinion, Part IV was intended by the Drafting Committee to be some sort of compensation for the omission of, and a substitute for, due process. While our Supreme Court was under the terms of our Constitution debarred from importing into the interpretation of the Constitution some fundamental principles which were

1. 1951 S.C.J. 313 : (1951) 1 M.L.J. 621 (S.C.).

2. (1950) 2 M.L.J. 404 (F.B.).

3. A.I.R. (1951) Punj. 93.

4. (1950) S.C.J. 174 : 1950 S.C.R. 88 : (1950) 2 M.L.J. 42 (S.C.).

above all laws the Drafting Committee was loath to conferment of judicial blessings on each and every law whose only merit was that it conformed to the Seventh Schedule. The principles of Part IV were to be pressed into aid in interpreting the Seventh Schedule and other portions of the Constitution and after paying due regard to administrative and financial considerations, balance of convenience, etc., laws not fitting into Part IV could be invalidated. That appears to me to be the meaning of the expressions 'strive' (which occurs six times), 'take steps', 'promote with special care', etc., occurring in Part IV. Part IV therefore represents not the rigid, inexorable and merciless American due process under whose lash the law-making body cowers, but a kindly, flexible and discretionary due process which invalidates laws only when there is no other way out. Part IV is not the blueprint of any particular political party but enshrines a mixed political ideology which might aspire to some hopes of permanence notwithstanding violent fluctuations due to changes of party politics, and aims at continuity of legislation and legislative policies in spite of change of Governments and of the political complexion of Legislatures.

It is not just therefore to describe Part IV as containing New Year resolutions (as it was described by Mr. Naziruddin Ahmed in the Constituent Assembly), or as being in the nature of a cheque on a bank payable when able, that is, only if the resources of the bank permitted, which was the analogy suggested by Professor K.T. Shah. Part IV is intended to keep Legislatures on the right track without at the same time embarrassing them with tall and impracticable orders. The Courts are by the language (careful and well chosen and cautious) used in Part IV constituted the arbiters to decide the time, manner and pace of the wholesome objectives placed by the Constitution before the Legislature.

REVIVAL OF THE WIDOW'S POWER OF ADOPTION UNDER HINDU LAW

BY

K. V. V. L. NARASIMHACHARY, M.A., B.L., Advocate, Guntur.

Certain observations of Justice Saryanarayanarao in the case of *Aravamudha Ayyangar v. Ramaswami Bhattar*¹, have been pointed out as being in conflict with the decision of the Privy Council in the case of *Amarendramansing v. Sanatansing*². But the observations of the learned Judge of the Madras High Court are more in accordance with the genius of Hindu Law than the pronouncement of the Privy Council in *Amarendra's case*². Justice Satyanarayanarao observed :

"The full legal capacity to continue the line means continuance of the line in one of two ways, i.e., either by leaving a natural or adopted son or a widow capable of bringing into existence a son by adoption. The test is to find out whether these conditions existed at the time of the son's death. If they did not exist the power did not terminate. If they existed the power came to an end and in certain circumstances, e.g., if the son's widow dies without making an adoption, the mother's power may be revived. If the object of adoption is the religious one of perpetuating the line with a view to make a permanent arrangement for the administration of the spiritual wants of the deceased, the object is not achieved when the continuance of the line came to a standstill. There must be some power somewhere to continue the line, and if the person lower down dies without providing for the continuance of the line, the power of the person higher up revives and continues."

It is said that this theory of revival of power does not receive any countenance from the observations of the Privy Council in *Amarendra's case*². But it is reiterated that this theory is in accordance with the genius of Hindu Law. It was held in *Amarendra's case*² that the power of adoption would be extinguished on the son's death by the survival of either a grandson or the son's widow. It is argued that since the power is extinguished it can never be revived. But it may pertinently be asked whether the power is actually extinguished or only suspended. There is no text of Hindu Law which says that the power is extinguished and certain decisions of the Nagpur and Lucknow High Courts³ support the theory of revival. When the son and his widow passed away without providing for the continuance of the line, the duty of providing for the continuance of the line by adoption is cast upon the mother. The mother's right of adoption is only suspended in the meantime and not extinguished. Moreover there is distress (apat) here in the form of the extinction of the family. Once the obstacle to the exercise of her right is removed the mother can adopt.

Sri K. R. Ramaswami Ayyangar in his essay—"Posthumous Adoption"—published in 1949 (2) M.L.J. at page 55 writes thus—

"Since the power of the widow exhausts only when there is an adoption and that person beget a son or leaves a widow competent in the way of law to beget a child by adoption it may be necessary that this limitation should be there not only for the first time she adopts but during each time she has power to exercise the authority, the period of limitation starting from the date of revival of the power of the widow to adopt."

These observations presume the possibility of revival.

The power of the mother is never extinguished but only kept in abeyance by the presence of counter-circumstances. Moreover the son and his widow being dead there is no reason why the mother-widow should not adopt with the consent of the sapindas, because the son adopted by her is equally efficient in conferring spiritual benefit on ancestors as a son adopted by the son's widow. In this way the religious purpose of adoption also would be served. To take an example from the Purvamimamsa—when the somalata is not available putika can be substituted in its place. So also when the person primarily entitled to adopt is not available, the next rightful person may adopt. Such person's right is only kept in abeyance by the existence of the holder of a superior title but is not extinguished. As long as there is the daughter-in-law of course she would be primarily entitled to adopt. But when she is not in existence why should not the mother-widow be allowed to adopt with the consent of the sapindas? Nandapandita in his Dattakamimamsa authorises a person, whose son is dead, to adopt. When the son and daughter-in-law have died without providing for the continuance of the line, the mother is left in the category contemplated by Nandapandita. Hence she is entitled to adopt. Thus the general principles of the law of adoption also support the theory of revival.

In *Amarendra's case*¹ itself the Privy Council warned

"that great caution should be observed in shutting the door upon any authorised adoption by the widow of a sonless man".

The widowed mother-in-law, bereft of her son and daughter-in-law, both of whom died without providing for the continuance of the line, is left precisely in the same position as is contemplated by the Privy Council.

The genius and spirit of Hindu Law of adoption is best expressed by Manu in the following verses: The spiritual efficacy of a son is thus described:

क्षेत्रजादीन् सुतानेतानेकादशयथोदितान् ।

पुत्रप्रतिनिधीनाहुः क्रियालोपान्मनीषिणः ॥ (ch. 9. v. 180)

पुंनाम्नो नरकाद्यस्मात्तायते पितरं सुतः ।

तस्मात् पुत्रः इति प्रोक्तः स्वयमेवस्वयमुवा ॥ (ch. 9. v. 138)

पुत्रेण लोकान् जयति पौत्रेणानन्त्यमश्नुते ।

अथ पुत्रस्य पौत्रेण ब्रह्मस्याप्नोति विष्टपम् ॥ (ch. 9. v. 137)

यस्मिन्पुत्रं संनयति येन चानन्त्यमश्नुते ।

स एव धर्मजः पुत्रः कामजानितरान् विदुः ॥ (ch. 9. v. 107)

In the case of the widowed mother, whose son and daughter-in-law died without leaving a son and without adopting, the essential condition of adoption, namely, the absence of a son who can confer spiritual benefit and perpetuate the lineage, is present. Hence it is but proper that she should adopt.

Even the great poet Kalidasa voices the spiritual efficacy of a son in his Raghuvamsa and Sakuntala thus :

नूनं मत्तः परं वंश्याः पिण्डविच्छेददर्शिनः ।

न प्रकामभुजश्राद्धे स्वधासंप्रहतत्पराः ॥ Raghuvamsa (1—66)

मत्परं दुर्लभं मत्वा नूनमावर्जितं मया ।

पयः पूर्वैः सनिश्चासैः कवोष्णमुपभुज्यते ॥ Raghuvamsa (1—67)

राजा—अहो ! दुष्यंतस्य संशयमारूढाः पिण्डभाजः ॥

अस्मात्परं वत यथाश्रुतिसंभृतानि

को नः कुले निवपनानि करिष्यतीति ।

नूनं प्रसूनिविकलेन मया प्रसिक्तम्

धौताश्रुशेषयुदकं पितरः पिबन्ति ॥ (Act 6—v 25 Sakuntala)

In the Bengal case of *Manikchand v. Jagatsettaini*¹ it was held that if the estate is once more vested in the mother, after the death of the son and his widow without issue, or adoption, her right of adoption revives. According to the custom obtaining among the Nattukottai Chetties of Madras the power to adopt does not come to an end, where the son has died leaving a widow. (*Subramaniam v. Somasundaram*²). So the custom and consciousness of the community also support the theory of revival.

The argument in *Amrendra's case*³ that the father's duty or debt is discharged the moment the burden of continuing the line and solemnizing the rites is passed on to a new generation does not appear to be convincing. Because in such a case Nandapandita's dictum that one whose son is dead, may adopt, becomes meaningless. To say the least, such a father whose burden is passed on to a new generation may be delivered from the hell called Put, because he has seen the face of his son. But if such son and his widow die issueless and without adoption, are the other aims of adoption namely, the offering of the funeral cake and water, and the celebrity of the name, and the perpetuation of the lineage, fulfilled? Hence the widowed mother can adopt with the consent of the sapindas. I may conclude that the observations of Justice Satyanarayanarao faithfully reflect the true spirit of the Hindu Law of Adoption.

MADRAS BUILDINGS LEASE AND RENT CONTROL ACT (XXV OF 1949), SECTION 7—A NOTE ON THE DEFAULT CLAUSE.

BY

V. SREE RAMA MOHANA RAO, B.A., B.L., Advocate, Bapatla.

Section 7 (2) (i) of the Madras Buildings Lease and Rent Control Act (XXV of 1949) states that a landlord may apply to the Rent Controller for eviction of his tenant on the ground that the latter has not paid or tendered the rent due by him within 15 days after the expiry of the time fixed in the agreement or in the absence of an agreement by the last day of the next month. When a petition is presented under section 7 (2) (i) for default of arrears of rent if the tenant shows that the default in question is not wilful (because that is the only plea available) the Rent Controller may give a reasonable time not exceeding 15 days to pay or tender the rent due up to the date of such payment or tender. This is proviso to section 7 (2) (i) which is added by the Amending Act VIII of 1951. This is an important innovation. If the default alleged is wilful eviction will be ordered against the tenant. The Act is exhaustive and self-contained. The provisions of the Civil Procedure Code have no application. *Abdul Kadir Hadjar v. A. K. Murthi*¹; *Devichand Mulchand v. Dhanraj Kantilal*². There is a recent pronouncement of Ramaswami, J., on this point reported in *Fernandes v. Ranganayakulu Chetti*³. The term "wilful default" is not defined anywhere in the statute. Other Acts have to be looked into for ascertaining the meaning of the term wilful default. Under the 1946 Act there is no proviso to section 7 (2) (i).

Section 7-A is another novel provision which has a bearing on the matter. This applies not only to section 7 (2) (i) but equally to all grounds of eviction mentioned in section 7. It states that when a petition is presented under section 7 by the landlord, the tenant has no right to contest the application or to prefer any appeal unless he pays or deposits with the controller or the appellate authority all arrears of rent due up to the date of payment or deposit in respect of the building and continues to pay or deposit any rent which may subsequently become due. When the tenant pays or deposits all the arrears of rent the petition or appeal as the case may be has to be heard and disposed of on merits. If the controller finds that there is wilful default proviso to section 7 (2) (i) comes into play. On the other hand if he fails to pay or deposit the arrears of rent eviction follows under section 7-A (4) in the absence of sufficient cause. Section 7-A was held to be applicable to appeals also and the appellate Court has power to condone the default. *Aravamudhu Chettiar v. Abdul Khader Rowther*⁴. (Govinda Menon, J.)

When there is any dispute as to the quantum of rent to be paid or deposited the controller has power to determine the same summarily [section 7-A (3)]. If the arrears of rent are not deposited with the controller as directed by him and an appeal is preferred and when there is a dispute as to the amount of the rent it is doubtful whether the appellate authority can exercise the power under section 7-A (3) in view of the omission of the words "Appellate Authority" in section 7-A (3).

EQUALITY BEFORE THE LAW AND EQUAL PROTECTION OF THE LAWS*

By

V. G. RAMACHANDRAN, M.A., B.L., Advocate, Tirukoilur.

Mr. President and Brother-members of the Bar of India,

It is indeed a rare privilege and I count it as sacred to address my colleagues in the legal profession in this momentous, august and learned gathering on a subject that is pregnant with topical, legal and political importance, viz., "Equality before the Law and Equal Protection of the Laws". In these days of conflicting rights, when rights and privileges are stressed more than duties and obligations, when the upward surge of new democratic forces particularly in young, immature, independent republics as India, tend to make the party in power and the executive feel more sacrosanct than even our courts of justice and the Constitution, it is befitting that in the very interests of the Freedom which we want to preserve at all costs, we must focus public attention on the supremacy of the Constitution to which the Executive, the Legislature and even the Judiciary are only subordinate and that as between the last three it is the Judiciary that must be deemed as interpreter of the Constitution and the resolver of conflicts when rights of the people, the Executive or the Legislature are in conflict inter se. The limitations which have to be always kept in view can be summed up in the three memorable golden rules propounded by Professor Berridale Keith :

• (i) That the judicial decisions should be upon fixed principles already established ;

(ii) Legislation must favour the limitation of executive and judicial power to deal arbitrarily with individual rights ;

• (iii) The Government should jealously respect its legal limitations.

It is wise to remember we are in a federal state and so we must appreciate the meaning of double allegiance to the State Laws and the Federal Laws. A federal people must exhibit a high sense of political education and legalism, i.e., "a general willingness to yield to the authority of law courts which courts alone can decide what the Constitution at any given moment is. As Professor Dicey would put it :

"A Federal System can flourish only among communities imbued with a legal spirit and trained to reverence the law, is as certain as can be any conclusion of political speculation. Federation substitutes litigation for legislation and none but a law-abiding people will be inclined to regard the decision of a Suit as equivalent to the enactment of a Law" and the learned constitutional expert would add :

* A thesis read before the Eighth Madras State Lawyers' Conference at Salem on 30th December, 1952, under the presidency of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice T. L. Venkatarama Ayyar.

"The main reason why the United States of America has carried out the Federal System with equal success is that the people of the union are more thoroughly imbued with legal ideas than any other existing nation."

I have ventured to quote Professor Dicey in detail as there is a prevalent fashion even among the highly educated gentry who climbed up the ladder of political power in our country (not to speak of the Cromwells of lesser calibre) to decry the interpretative jurisdiction of Courts of Law and to hail their own conceptions of what is good for the country as pearls of wisdom. They would appear to desire that powers of Courts of Law must be eschewed for their own party ends forgetting the next party in power may do just the contrary. It is well to again quote Dicey:

"yet any nation who cannot acquiesce in the finality of even possibly mistaken judgment is hardly fit to form part of a federal state."

It is, therefore, wise for politicians as well as the laymen in India to realise that respect for the Constitution, for the law of the land, for the rule of law and for courts of justice are the pivots on which our Indian Federation could march forward in the field of successful Federalism. Unless we, the people, exhibit to the fullest, traits of federation and legalism we cannot dream of an unalloyed federal constitution divested of even the few unitary tendencies that may be present in the Indian Constitution as it is to-day.

Gentlemen, my esteemed friend, Mr. M. K. Nambiar, Bar-at-Law, addressed our last conference at Kozhikode on "Fundamental Rights." It is my turn now to particularly dilate on a special aspect of these fundamental rights, viz., "Equality before Law and Equal Protection of the Laws." The Constitution of India presents in Part III, (Article 12 to 35) the Magna Carta of India. It vouchsafes to the citizens of India certain fundamental rights which are inviolable and are to be guaranteed to him by any governmental party in power. The tyranny of the majority in representative party governments of latter days had necessitated such constitutional guarantees as a permanent safeguard to minorities. This charter of liberty is a sheet-anchor for all young democracies. Lest authority should corrupt, constitutional limitations are made the safety-valves for the essential well-being and happiness of free citizens. In England, Parliament is supreme. Tradition, conservative outlook, representative and responsible cabinet system and a supreme Parliament form the real guarantee to the people of England of the inherent rights, of liberty of the individual, liberty of speech, liberty of association and equality in the eyes of law. Professor Dicey would assert that in England:

"The right to individual freedom was part of the Constitution (unwritten) because it is inherent in the ordinary law of the land; the right is one which can hardly be destroyed without a thorough revolution in the institutions and manners of the nation."

Individual liberty in England and equality before law can be secured by resort to 'writs' or 'remedies' in courts of law. But the Parliament is so supreme that it can alter statutory or judge-made law. Magna Carta and the Bill of Rights merely declared the existing common law and bound only the executive and never the Parliament. By contrast we find in the American Constitution a recognition of Montesquieu's famous doctrine of 'separation of powers.' The visible element of this 'separation' is complete independence of the American judiciary which is supreme and as Dicey states it 'the judiciary in a Federal State is sometimes the master of the Constitution.' While the Congress is subordinate to the Constitution, it is the domain of the Supreme Court to interpret the Constitution. The Indian Constitution is a happy compromise between the supremacy of the Parliament and supremacy of the judiciary. In India, the Constitution is supreme, holding in subordination, the three powers, the executive, the legislature and the judiciary though the latter are given the unique privilege to resolve all conflicts and interpret the Constitution.

Equality before Law.

The two significant terms of constitutional importance in this thesis are 'Equality before Law' and 'Equal protection of the Laws.' The former is of English origin while the latter has been taken out of the American Constitution. The two terms are not really identical. The 'Rule of Law' coined by Professor Dicey carried with it the concept of 'Equality before the Law'. In other words, in England 'No man was above the Law.' Whatever his rank or condition may be, he is subject to the ordinary law of the land and jurisdiction of the ordinary courts. The supremacy of the law implied the exclusion of arbitrary power and the equality of all citizens before the ordinary law of the land.

Equal Protection of the Laws.

The term 'Equal Protection of the Laws' is, however, a positive concept. It is imbedded in section 1 of the 14th Amendment of the Constitution of America. The 13th Amendment of 1787 abolished slavery in any form in the United States of America. But the most significant amendment, however, was the 14th passed by the Congress in 1868 by which all citizens of the United States of America (inclusive of the erstwhile slaves) cannot be deprived of life, liberty or property without 'due process of law' nor can any State deny to anyone 'Equal Protection of Laws' and it was particularly enjoined that 'no State shall abridge the privileges or immunities of the citizens of the United States of America.' The Constitution of Eire (Ireland) guaranteed under section 40 (1) that 'all citizens shall, as human persons, be held equal before law'. We have in section 13 of the Constitution of Burma the significant provision that 'all citizens irrespective of birth, religion, sex or race, are equal before the law, that is to say, there shall not be any arbitrary discrimination between one citizen or class of citizens and another.'

Profiting by experience of other federal countries we have inserted in the Indian Constitution Article 14 which enunciates that the State shall not deny to any person equality before the law or the equal protection of the laws within the 'territory of India'. The emphasis must be on the three words 'State', 'any person' and 'territory of India' to reveal that, that (i) the guarantee is only by the State and not by private citizens, (ii) the guarantee extends to any person not necessarily a citizen of India but any one (inclusive of foreigners) present in India, (iii) the guarantee extends throughout the territory of India.

Sir Ivor Jennings has expressed that "Equality before the Law means that among equals the law should be equal and should be equally administered, that like should be treated alike The right to sue and to be sued, or to prosecute and be prosecuted, for the same kind of action should be the same for all citizens of full age and understanding and without distinction of race, religion, wealth, social status or political influence." Dicey would explain that the term 'Rule of Law' meant 'the supremacy of the predominance of law as distinguished from mere arbitrariness.' This equality before law is not absolute but is subordinate (as succinctly laid in the Constitution of Eire) to differences of capacity, physical, moral and social functions. Any wrongful act or breach of the law will be dealt with in similar manner whether the offender is a peasant, public officer or a man of high social position. Maybe, each in his own sphere, may wield large powers but in the eye of law they are all one. Certain privileges and immunities are, however, offered in all Constitutions to heads of States, foreign sovereigns, ambassadors, foreign ministers, etc., but these should not be understood as undermining the doctrine of Equality before Law. In our own Constitution Article 361 provides for exceptional treatment to executive heads of the Union and the States, public officials, etc. Parliament has the power under Article 246 to legislate in respect of foreign ambassadors (Entry 11 of List I, VII Schedule) and of aliens. (Entry 17 of List I).

Equal Access to Courts.

We may state that equality before law connotes equal justice to all. Right of equal access to courts is a natural corollary to the equal protection clause and this was particularly stressed in an American case *Barbier v. Connolly*¹, where the doctrine of equal protection was elaborated this-wise

"That no impediment should be interposed to the pursuits of any one except as applied to the same pursuits of any one or others under like circumstances; that no greater burden should be laid upon one than are laid upon others in the same calling and condition. . . . that in the administration of criminal justice no different or higher punishment should be imposed upon one than such as is prescribed to all for like offence All persons should have like access to courts of the country for the protection of their persons and property, the prevention and redress of wrongs and the enforcement of contract."

This cardinal principle of equal access to court was put to test in India soon after the Constitution came into force in *Mahbub Begum and others v. Hyderabad State and others*¹. In this instance the Begum and her children who had been declared to be heirs of the deceased Nawab Wali-ud-Daula Bahadur by a Special Court was sought to be deprived of that right by a sort of police action on the part of the Hyderabad State. The Nizam, the Rajpramukh, the then repository of legislative power enacted a special Act termed The Hyderabad Wali-ud-daula Succession (Decision of Disputes) Act XVI of 1950. By section 2 of the Act the claims of the Begum and her children secured by the decree were dismissed and section 3 barred any reference to this decision by Statute in any Court of Law. This was extraordinary and against all canons of natural justice. The Full Bench upheld the principles enunciated in *Barbier v. Connolly*² advocating equal access to court and equal protection, and further laid down that sovereign discretionary powers should not be abused by an arbitrary invasion of substantial rights secured to the citizens by offensive exactions and discriminations; that the right to institute a suit in a court of law is a civil right which cannot be taken away by statute; that it would amount to denial of equal protection of the laws to the Begum under Article 14 and the deprivation of property rights would further offend Articles 31 and 19 (f) of the Constitution. The Act XVI of 1950 though a State-made law was not a valid law and was therefore void under Article 13 (2).*

Equal Legal Aid.

Equal availability of the legal aid is another fundamental criterion to bring about true equality in the eye of law. It was in this sense that in England that necessity arose for passing the Legal Aid and Advice Act of 1949. Some such aids to the poor litigant by statute is necessary in India if the fundamental guarantee of equality before the law is fully to be realized by the poorest of citizens. In other words, law must be within the easy reach of all to enjoy the fruits thereof. By its very costliness or cumbersome procedure the poor or the ignorant should not be denied the opportunity to reap the benefits of equality before the law. In this connection I would commend an article on 'Legal Aid as Community Service' penned for the magazine section of The Indian Express of 16th November, 1952, by our colleague at the Bar, Mr. K. V. Gopala Menon. We may emulate America in this by forming of legal aid societies all over our country. Assignment of counsel on paid or honorary basis to litigants in civil or criminal cases is beautifully organized on voluntary as also on statutory basis in America. We have statutory aid in India only in cases of murder. But our civil and criminal procedure must be so amended as to furnish legal aid in all civil and criminal cases whenever the court is of the opinion that the party is too poor to engage counsel. A special statute whereby legal aid societies can be formed and who could be compelled to aid courts of law in the aforesaid cases, is a natural culmination for the success of the doctrine of equal protection and equality before law.

Due Process of Law.

The American Constitution by the 5th Amendment directs the Federal Government to ensure "Due Process of Law." The application of this 'Due Process' clause brings within its ambit the guarantee of equal protection of laws. The 5th Amendment specifically sets out that "no person shall be subject for the same offence to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb; nor shall he be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself, nor be deprived of life, liberty or property without due process of law; nor shall private property be taken for public use without just compensation."

In our Indian Constitution Article 31 guarantees compensation for acquisition while Article 21 ensures protection of life and personal liberty according to procedure established by law. Article 20 gives protection against double prosecutions. But the words 'Due Process of Law,' has been significantly omitted in our Constitution to avoid all confusion and doubt. The general law of the land assures safe remedies such as open trial, full hearing, right of cross-examination, right of being represented by counsel, appeal, etc. Due process means a law which hears before it condemns, which proceeds upon inquiry and renders judgment only after trial according to forms of law appropriate to the case and just to the parties affected. Reasonable certainty is another requisite of due process. In England and America no one can be deprived of his life or liberty except for a clear breach of the law and without due process of law. But all that is provided in our Constitution is under Article 21, 'no person shall be deprived of his life or personal liberty except according to the procedure established by law.' Our Constitution does not secure due process of law. It secures only procedure established by law. In *A. K. Gopalan's Case*¹, the Supreme Court of India held that the words "Due Process of Law" were deliberate omissions in our Constitution and that American cases dealing with that principle cannot be held applicable to India that the word 'law' in Article 21 has been used in the sense of 'State-made or enacted law and not as an equivalent of law in the abstract or general sense embodying the principles of natural justice. 'Procedure established by law' therefore only connotes procedure prescribed by the law of the State. Due process of law, on the other hand, would take us into the doubtful mire of procedure sanctioned by settled usage or natural justice and therefore was purposefully omitted in our Constitution.

It is well to remember that in America the 'due process' clause was available to corporations as well as individuals, aliens as well as citizens of the United States of America. Article 14 of our Constitution can likewise be invoked by aliens in our country. In America the due process clause was a limitation on the Legislature as well as on the executive; secondly it related to substantive as well as procedural rights. If the police power of the State intervened due process, then the former must pass the test of reasonableness and should not be arbitrary, vide *Lochner v. New York*². Due process includes natural justice, opportunity of a fair hearing, service of process, an impartial tribunal, *Turney v. Ohio*³, absence of fraud, *Chicago, M. & St. P.R. Co., v. Minnesota*⁴, courts free from outside duress, *Frank v. Mangum*⁵, etc. Denial of due process includes excessive penalties, *Missouri Pacific Ry. Co. v. Tucker*⁶, un-uniform taxes, *McGowan v. Illinois Bank*⁷, unequal administration of law by an official, *Snowden v. Hughes*⁸, etc. Equal protection clause does not prohibit States from restricting the enjoyment of political privileges to certain classes of their citizens as they deem proper, vide *Blake v. McOlung*⁹.

Equal Protection to Negroes.

Negroes in America earned their emancipation by the 13th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States of America which postulated that neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime whereof the party shall have been duly convicted shall exist within the United States of America or any place subject to their jurisdiction. The 14th Amendment further enjoined all persons born or naturalized in the United States of America and subject to the jurisdiction thereof are citizens of the United States of America and of the State wherein they reside. It further guaranteed all privileges and immunities, equal protection of laws and due process of law. The Negro thus became a full-fledged American citizen. In the leading case *Norris v. Alabama*¹⁰, Chief Justice Hughes reversed the conviction for rape, of nine negro boys on the ground that defendants had been denied due process of law such as disqualifying of nine competent negro jurors, on the ground of race. In the field of education in Gaines, A negro citizen of Missouri

v. *University of Missouri*¹ an action brought for not admitting the negro in its law school, the same Judge Hughes opined:

"The petitioner's right here is a personal one, it was as an individual that he was entitled to the equal protection of laws and the State was bound to furnish him within its borders facilities for legal education substantially equal to that which the State offered for persons of the white race, whether or not other negroes sought the same opportunity."

But, however, American conscience was really not initially frank. In *Plessey v. Fergusson*² a subtle distinction was made that 'equal but separate' treatment of the two races would satisfy the 14th Amendment. The statute which allows rail-roads in Louisiana to provide equal but separate accommodations for white and coloured races was sustained. This halting doctrine came to an acid test in the case of *Sweat v. Painter*³ which turned down the separate treatment practice and held the negro student was entitled to his full constitutional rights of the same legal education without any racial segregation. It is appropriate to mention here that though the Constitution of Federal America came into being in 1787, it took so late as 1865 and 1868 to usher in the 13th and 14th Amendments so as to give equality of treatment to negroes. Much of this however, was only on paper and only in 1950 by judicial interpretation in *Sweat v. Painter*³ has the negro got out of the ring of racial segregation. In India, gaining by the American experience Article 14 has vouchsafed to all resident in India the equal protection clause, while Article 17 abolishes 'untouchability' in all forms. But it is regrettable that while even conservative India is far ahead of other countries in the matter of treatment of aliens and prohibits segregation in any form, in any section of its nationals, it is a tragedy that South Africa, which is said to be advanced in western civilisation should resort to primitive doctrines of racial discrimination and segregation. Its Apartheid Policy is fast becoming the ground for probably another Global War. It is betimes that saner counsels do prevail in the African continent so as to re-establish the divine theory of oneness of humanity and universal brotherhood which is the pivot over which any civilized government can function.

Even early periods of American negro distress appear to pale before the cruelties effected on this new-fangled apartheid policy of Africa. Police-torture with a view to forcing out confessions particularly from negroes charged with breach of the law was a blot on American civilization. In *Chambers v. Florida*⁴ such tortures were deprecated as tyrannical, unjust and illegal and against due process of law. The negroes were set at liberty and the convicting judgment of the Supreme Court of Florida was reversed. In *Brown v. Mississippi*⁵, it was pithily stated:

"To permit human lives to be forfeited upon confessions thus obtained (by torture) would make the constitutional requirement of due process of law a meaningless symbol."

The trite saying that justice must not only be done but seem to be done according to form rests on this principle of 'Due Process of Law.' In *Turney v. Ohio*⁶, Taft, C.J., observed that:

"Every procedure which would offer a possible temptation to the average man as a judge to forget the burden of proof required to convict the defendant or which might lead him not to hold the balance nice, clear and true between the state and the accused denies the latter 'Due Process of Law'."

Onus of Proof and Duty of Courts:

The onus of proof in cases where the equal protection clause is alleged to have been violated is upon the person who assails the law, *vide, Lindsey v. National Carbonic Acid Gas Co.*⁷ The function of Courts in the sphere of constitutional interpretation is aptly brought out by Sutherland, J. in *Atkins v. Childrens Hospital*⁸ when he stated:

"The duty of Courts to hold an enactment either void or ultra vires is one of great gravity and delicacy and this power of Courts is subject to the guiding principles of decision which ought never to be absent from judicial consciousness; one is that Courts are concerned only with the Legislature's power to enact statutes and not with their wisdom; the other is that while unconstitutional exercise of power by the executive and legislative branches of Government is subject to judicial restraint the only restraint upon the exercise of power by Courts is their own self-restraint."

The presumption is generally in favour of the constitutionality of an Act. As laid down in *Ogden v. Saunderson*¹,

"It is but a decent respect due to the wisdom, the integrity and patriotism of the legislative body by which any law is passed to presume in favour of its validity until its violation of the Constitution is proved beyond all reasonable doubt."

Cooley limited the legislative power in these words :

"Legislatures have their authority measured by the Constitution. • They are chosen to do what it permits and nothing more."

In *State of Madras v. V. G. Row*², Patanjali Sastri as Chief Justice of the Supreme Court described the difficult role of courts of law on India, under Article 13, thus :

"What is sometimes overlooked is that our Constitution contains express provision for judicial review of legislation as to its conformity with the Constitution unlike in America where the Supreme Court has assumed extensive powers of reviewing legislative Acts under cover of the widely interpreted 'Due Process clause' in the 5th and 14th Amendments ; if then the Courts in this country face up to such important and none-too-easy task, it is not out of any desire to tilt at legislative authority in a crusader's spirit but in discharge of a duty plainly laid upon them by the Constitution. This is especially true as regards 'The Fundamental rights,' as to which this Court has been assigned the role of a sentinel on the 'quiver.' While the Court naturally attaches great weight to legislative judgment it cannot desert its own duty to determine finally the constitutionality of an impugned statute. We have ventured on these obvious remarks because it appears to have been suggested in some quarters that the Courts in the new set-up are out to seek clashes with the legislatures in the country."

In *Sunil Kumar Bose and others v. The Chief Secretary of the Government of West Bengal*³ while striking down as ultra vires the Constitution the Bengal Preventive Detention Order of 1950 (issued by the President of the Republic) on its application to Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act of 1930 and West Bengal Security Ordinance, 1949, which later two Acts were void under Article 13 (1), their Lordships of the Calcutta High Court summed up in forcible language :

"The Parliament of India is not supreme in the sense in which the Parliament of England is. Our Parliament is subject to the Constitution," and discussing that there can be no delegation of legislative power of the President to the Courts their Lordships added :

"The effect of the order of the President is that the judiciary is converted into a legislature with limited powers and the executive is converted into a judiciary whose decisions are final. . . . We also (the Judges) swore to uphold the Constitution and the laws. In our opinion we would be false to our oath if we give effect to this Adaptation of Laws Order, 1950, even though this Order may have emanated from the President of the Indian Republic. It has always been the tradition of this Court to stand between the subject and any encroachment of his liberty by the executive or any of the authorities however high. Amidst the strident clamours of political strife and the tumult of the clash of conflicting classes, we must remain impartial. This Court is no respecter of persons and its endeavour must be to ensure that above this clamour and tumult the strong calm voice of justice shall always be heard. Fiat justitia ruat coelum."

Gentlemen, these are golden words. That is our ideal, to speak out boldly, truly and justly. Politicians and men in power may be erratic in their views, expressions and decisions. But courts of justice are there to protect the citizen from all such eccentricities and illegalities. Men in power, therefore, naturally would aspire to whittle down powers of courts of law so that they may give vent to their autocratic trends. But we of the legal profession, as guardians of the public and the general mass of citizens, must be alert and fight against any such curtailment of the powers of courts of law.

Fundamentals of Equal Protection.

We may now examine some of the fundamentals of the Equal Protection Clause. Justice Field stated in what is called *The Slaughter house cases*⁴

"That only is a free Government in the American sense of the term, under which the inalienable right of every citizen to pursue his happiness is unrestrained, except by just, equal and impartial laws."

Mr. Justice Packham in *Lochner v. New York*⁵ stated

"No state can deprive any person of life, liberty or property except by due process of law."

1. 12 Wheat. 213 at 270.

2. (1952) 2 M.L.J. 135 : 1952 S.C.R. 597 : (1952) S.C.J. 253 on appeal from (1951) 1 M.L.J. 628 (F.B.).

Thus monopoly in slaughter-house trade was struck down in the former case while in the latter the court struck down the statute limiting employment in bakeries to 60 hours per week and 10 hours per day as "meddlesome interferences with the rights of individuals to work as long and as hard as they liked." But in *Muller v. Oregon*¹ the ten-hour day for women labour was sustained as a very reasonable restriction taking into consideration 'women's physical structure and the performance of maternal functions.' 'Due Process of Law' implies reasonableness of the measure and so the Minimum Wage Law was sustained as reasonable in *Settler v. O'Hara*². In *Barbier v. Connolly*³ the discretionary autocratic powers of the supervisor in the licensing rules was struck down as it was discovered there was horrid discrimination in that not one of the 200 chinese applicants was given the permit while the 320 laundries which were permitted had only wooden buildings contrary to rules and that only one of the white applicants was denied license. Justice Mathews forcibly put it:

"The very idea that one man may be compelled, to hold his life or the means of living or any material right essential to the enjoyment of life at the mere will of another, seems intolerable in any country where freedom prevails."

Then follows this classic observation from his Lordship:

"Though the law itself be fair on its face and impartial in appearance, yet, if it is applied and administered by public authority with an evil eye and unequal hand, so as practically to make unjust and illegal discriminations between persons in similar circumstances, material to their rights, the denial of equal justice is still within the prohibition of the Constitution."

In *Tick Wo v. Hopkins*⁴ the same view was expressed thus:

"A denial of equal protection may lurk in the practical administration of a statute even if not required by its words."

In other words, the procedure by which Government is administered must in every instance meet the laws standard of what is rational, legal, just and appropriate. Reasonable certainty is another requisite of due process. To victimise a person as belonging to an unlawful 'gang' when the word 'gang' is not properly defined, is repugnant to the due process clause as being vague, indefinite and uncertain. In the sterilization cases *Skinner v. Oklahoma*⁵, the statute which decreed that habitual criminals should be sterilized so that felony may be eradicated by preventing any offspring to the felons, was questioned as unconstitutional. Considering it curious that offences against prohibition laws, revenue laws, embezzlement or political offences were considered as not involving heritable moral turpitude as felony, their Lordships held

"the classification of habitual criminals as too loose for so serious a business. Those who stole were sterilized. Those who embezzled were untouched. . . . The power to sterilize further led to devastating effects. In evil or reckless hands it can cause races or types which are inimical to the dominant group (in power) to wither and disappear. There is no redemption for the individual whom the law touches. . . . This is in violation of the constitutional guarantee of just and equal laws. The guarantee of equal protection of the laws is a pledge of the protection of equal laws" vide, *Tick Wo v. Hopkins*⁴.

But the State in its exercise of the police power can, however, curtail the rights of citizens in a limited sphere for purpose of the welfare of the commonweal in matters such as safety, morals, health, economic welfare and general prosperity of the community—vide *Mackay Jewellers v. Bowron*⁶. But this police power must be strictly limited to the actual requirements of an advancing complex society. All safeguards must be taken in this regard so as not to invade any fundamental right guaranteed to the citizen.

The State also can make class legislation, only it must be reasonable classification. In *Barbier v. Connolly*³, their Lordships said:

"Special burdens are often necessary for special benefits such as for supplying water, preventing fires, lighting districts, cleansing streets, opening parks and many other objects. Regulations for the purpose may press with more or less weight upon one than upon another but they are designed not to impose unequal or unnecessary restrictions upon anyone but to promote with as little inconvenience as possible, the general good."

Classification and statutes limiting the rights of a class for their own welfare is legal. In *Radice v. New York*¹, a statute was sustained which prohibited employment of women in restaurants after 10 P.M. Child labour can also be regulated. This is on the principle expounded by Frankfurter, J., in *Tigner v. Texas*² that:

"The Constitution does not require things which are different in fact, or opinion, to be treated in law as though they were the same."

In the interests of public welfare, legislation may regulate certain interests such as women, infants, imbeciles, insurance companies, railways, banks, corporations, etc. But this demarcation of a class must be reasonable, not arbitrary or capricious and must be in the interests of general public welfare. Thus liquor which is injurious to health can be regulated by legislation, other drinks not injurious can be left alone. Night work may be prohibited in case of infants and women. Municipal sewage pumping and clearance may be prohibited from being in the heart of a residential locality as injurious to health. Further there can be no guarantee of same laws and same remedies to different areas of the State which may vary in its needs. Vide *Missouri v. Lewis*³. The problem of segregating residential houses in one place, model apartment houses in another, industries in the third, shops in the fourth, is a feature of modern town planning. Such 'zoning' cases cannot be questioned as discriminatory. In *Village of Euclid v. Ambler Realty Co.*⁴, zoning was upheld on the ground that growing urban life must be regulated for which all private rights must be subordinated to public good. This exercise of police power of the State is specifically needed in the matter of urban areas though it may be out of place for village communities.

Equality in law implies equal protection in taxing laws. This does not imply that each must be taxed equally but only connotes that persons of the same class or category placed in similar circumstances should be taxed equally by one standard; vide *Magoun v. Illion's Bank*⁵. The scale of taxation for the learned professions, trades, income from agricultural property, cinema and theatrical performances, etc., is regulated with different standards appropriate to each. Charitable institutions, public libraries charity shows—these may be exempt from taxation. But if the administration of tax laws results in intentional and systematic discrimination, it will be offending the doctrine of equal protection—vide *Bohler v. Callaway*⁶.

Equal protection which is available in the legislative field is open also in the field of execution or administration of laws. In *Ticko v. Hopkins*⁷ Justice Mathews declared

"It seems intolerable that a man should hold any public right at the pleasure of another. The guarantee of equal protection of laws is a pledge of the protection of equal laws."

Equal protection includes equal access to courts—vide *Barbier v. Canolly*⁸. But it does not mean same laws, or same remedies in all courts but only equal laws for a set of persons similarly placed in Tribunals of one particular category. There may be special courts for particular emergencies but the procedure and form of trial shall be based on the principle of freedom, liberty, natural justice. In India the procedure must be one prescribed by law. Per Article 14 of the Constitution of India the protection is only against State action and not of private individuals. In the latter event the ordinary law of the country must be resorted to for redress only when there is an actionable wrong suffered or committed.

Delegated Legislation and Administrative Tribunals.

The complexity of modern life, social and economic problems have necessitated the administration of certain aspects of law to departments of law which have created Tribunals to decide administrative and quasi-judicial issues. Dicey's vision of the Rule of Law, the supremacy of parliamentary legislation and the majesty or law courts, must have had a rude shock at the growth of these delegated bodies.

1. 264 U.S. 292.

2. (1940) 310 U.S. 141.

3. (1879) 101 U.S. 22.

5. (1898) 170 U.S. 283.

6. 267 U.S. 479.

7. (1886) 118 U.S. 356.

8. (1885) 113 U.S. 923.

Dicey knew only of the administrative bodies (separate courts) in France called Droit Administration which determined the position and liabilities of all officials of the State, the civil rights and liabilities as between citizen and State by a special procedure. Dicey never foresaw that Tribunals and delegated legislation will be the order of the day all over the modern world. There is, however, a danger, inherent in this craze for tribunals if it is not properly regulated and manned. To remit the maintenance of constitutional right to the region of judicial discretion was felt as shifting the foundations of freedom from the rock to the sand—vide *Local Government Board v. Arlidge*¹. When that is so, how much worse would it be when it is all relegated to the discretion of arbitrariness subject to no judicial appeal or review. This would tend to a denial of equal protection of laws. Lord Hewart's scathing and classical work on 'The New Despotism' throws a flood of criticism on delegated legislation and administrative Tribunals. I am in safe company when I venture to quote our distinguished president of this conference Sachivothama. Doctor Sir C.P. Ramaswami Ayyar from his jubilee address delivered at the Madras Advocates Association on 16th April, 1949. He cited the Eastern Economist and said :

"Whereas in India of to-day, the Legislature is really dominated by a single party and where the press is not yet functioning fully as the fourth estate of the realm, the executive must be kept in bounds until the opposition grows by a conscience of its own Authority has tended to give the executive a taste for Blanket powers which it is almost impossible to contest in a Court of law. The last of our defences, the judiciary is being rendered less effective by reason of the drafting of our laws and ordinances which makes it almost impossible for the actions of the executive to be questioned."

Sir Erskine May, author of the celebrated 'Parliamentary Practice', opined that "as the national conception of Government has moved towards the regulation of the day-to-day affairs of the community, departmental legislation attracts fresh attention and members of parliament feel that the powers which they have delegated require organized scrutiny."

Democracy should ever have a vigilant and watchful eye on the abuses of such delegated authority and their devices of circumventing parliamentary and judicial correctives. In India after the new constitution the limits of delegated legislation has been clearly set out in *State v. Basdeo*², Desai, J., stated:

"When an authority makes rules in exercise of the powers conferred upon it by the Legislature, the Act is the real authority behind the rules and the Legislature retains control over the authority and the rules. So long as it retains control it cannot be said that it has delegated the power. The Constitution forbids delegation of legislative power. But it does not forbid delegation of rule-making which however must be subordinate to and within the ambit of the parent Act and such rule-making must only be intended to carry out and enforce the law enacted. If these principles are violated then section 13 of the Constitution renders all such laws void and ultra vires."

An administrative Tribunal is the judicial counterpart of the parliamentary rule-making powers delegated to subordinate bodies. To quote again Sir C.P. Ramaswami Ayyar's memorable and golden utterance:

"The wide range and variety of governments' penetration into daily life lead to such phenomena as are exemplified in the recent controversies regarding industrial Tribunals such an approach makes for the growth of rule-making powers for the creation of new institutions not subject to jurisdiction of Courts majority rule, unless the principle of 'Audi Alterum Partem (Hear the other side)' is not only remembered but implemented may become impatient of forms and ceremonies which may restrain or appear to delay its programme leading to the error of what has been called 'Etatisme, the vesting of absolute and unchecked powers in authorities not subject to scrutiny or cross-examination" and unless checked and regulated with all safeguards there will be the danger of totalitarianism ushering in a bureaucracy which will not be tender towards law, lawyers or sombre courts of justice. Mr. Justice P. Govinda Menon in our last conference at Kozhikode echoed the same sentiment in his learned opening address and deprecated the burdening of judicial functions to an administrator or administrative Tribunal out of all proportion to public need and very often to the detriment of public and private justice, with not even the facility of a judicial review. His Lordship added :

1. (1915) A.C. 120.

2. A.I.R. 1951 All. 44.

"The only silver lining in the cloudy sky is that the High Courts and the Supreme Court are now vested with wide powers under Articles 32 and 226 of the Constitution to give such directions and pass such orders (in the matter of these Tribunals) by issue of writs such as certiorari, prohibition, mandamus, etc."

Our learned Chief Justice P. V. Rajamannar, visualizing all these difficulties enunciated the following six safeguards for the effective working of administrative Tribunals: Vide Article in The Golden Jubilee number of the Indian Review, 1950.

1. As far as possible an attempt should be made to insist on separation of judicial and administrative functions of all these specialised bodies. Members of these Tribunals who have to discharge judicial functions should be chosen by an independent commission independent of the party in power. The choice should include the Lawyer and the Judge elements.

2. The hearing before these Tribunals should be open to the public and unless inexpedient there should be a right of hearing if it is so desired by the party.

3. Tribunals should be required to give reasons for their decisions.

4. There should be provision for a right of appeal in important matters to a superior administrative Tribunal.

5. The decisions of these Tribunals should be open to review by a Court of law though on very limited grounds such as complete lack of jurisdiction, bias, pecuniary interest and failure to observe the fundamental canons of 'natural justice' which term though vague will certainly act as a good safety valve.

6. Lawyers should not be debarred from appearing before such Tribunals. These rules may include such sound basic principles as (1) No one to be a Judge of his own case; (2) no party should go unheard; (3) the decision should be in good faith.

I have dilated a little on these administrative Tribunals as they are tending to be the order of the day and unless checked with the above safeguards, they will soon become the instruments of oppression and arbitrariness leading to a denial of justice and equal protection of laws.

The March of the Doctrine of Equality before Law and Equal Protection in India after the Constitution.

The Indian judiciary always ranked very high in the matter of erudition, impartiality and justice. This was so, before and after the British period of suzerainty in India. On the wake of our freedom and on the establishment of the Supreme Court of India, the bulwark of justice has been trebly strengthened and from 26th January, 1950, when our Constitution came into full force, we find our Courts upholding the rights guaranteed in our Magna Carta and generally guiding society along the lines modelled out by the provisions relating to the directive principles in our Constitution. It was in *Keshava Madhava Menon v. State of Bombay*¹, the Supreme Court first deduced that (i) inconsistent laws get rendered void by virtue of Article 13 (1) only from the commencement of the Constitution, the past and pending transactions on the date of the commencement of the Constitution remaining unaffected; (ii) only the repugnant provisions are rendered void and not the whole impugned Act subject to the principles of the doctrine of severability. In *Amintal v. Government of Mysore*², the impugned Act authorised the executive to forbid all persons residing in a particular area from partaking in the manufacture of beedies, the object being to prevent agricultural labour being diverted from the "Grow More Food Campaign." It was held that while the Act was invalid with reference to women, children, the weak and the infirm who could not be employed for agricultural labour, the language of the Act covered restrictions both within and without the limits of constitutionally permissible legislative action [Vide Article 19 (6)], the whole Act was void and it cannot be severed at all.

Whether singling out one company for special statutory control is discriminatory was discussed in the leading case under Article 14 in the judgment of the Supreme Court in *Charanjit Lal Chowdhury v. The Union of India and others*¹, where the majority Bench, Kania, C.J., Mukherjee and Fazl Ali, JJ., enunciated the following principles:

(i) the presumption is always in favour of the constitutionality of an enactment since it must be assumed that the Legislature understands and correctly appreciates the needs of its own people, that its laws are directed to problems made manifest by experience and its discriminations are based on adequate grounds.

(ii) This presumption may be rebutted in certain cases by showing that on the face of the statute there is no classification at all and no difference peculiar to any individual or class and not applicable to any other individual class, and yet the law hits only a particular individual or class.

(iii) The principle of equality does not mean that every law must have universal application for all persons who are not by nature, attainment or circumstances in the same position and the varying needs of different classes of persons often requiring separate treatment.

(iv) The principle does not take away from the State the power of classifying persons for legitimate purposes.

(v) Every classification in some degree is likely to produce some inequality and mere production of inequality is not enough.

(6) If a law deals equally with members of a well-defined class, it is not obnoxious and it is not open to the charge of denial of equal protection on the ground that it has no application to other persons.

(7) While reasonable classification is permissible such classification must be based upon some real and substantial distinction bearing a reasonable and just relation to the object sought to be attained and the classification cannot be made arbitrarily and without any substantial basis.

The above has been summarised in a later case of the Supreme Court *State of Bombay v. Balsara*². There is however one rational criticism that can be offered on one of the above propositions namely, that the selection of one particular individual or object is not necessarily bad; unless such selection is not arbitrary, one can even agree with the dissenting Judges Das, J. and Patanjali Sastri, J., when they stated that other corporations were equally guilty of mismanagement like the Sholapur Company and yet the disabilities imposed by the impugned Act were not extended to such other companies. So the proposition of legislating for one individual as a particular class though logically unassailable, is very difficult in application as the chances of arbitrary selection are greater when only one particular individual or object is singled out. In *Gulf Railway Co. v. Ellis*³, the principle is well laid that the selection is arbitrary if the Legislature visits a penalty upon the individual or corporation which is not imposed upon others guilty of a like delinquency.

The principle laid in *Yick Wo v. Hopkins*⁴, that equal protection of laws extends also to equal administration of laws, came in for scrutiny in *Dhanraj Mills, Ltd. v. B. K. Kocher*⁵; where it was opined that in India such protection against executive arbitrariness does exist. But their Lordships felt that no capricious or even mala fide act or act in error by one official will make it actionable under Article 14 but that the discrimination alleged by executive action should be indicative of a State policy to discriminate under cover of administrative or executive power on the lines laid down in *Yick Wo v. Hopkins*⁴.

In *Sheo Shankar v. State of M.P.*⁶, it was enunciated that the term 'Equality before Law' is a somewhat negative concept implying the absence of any special privilege in favour of an individual while the term 'Equal Protection of Laws' is a more positive concept implying equality of treatment in equal circumstances. There is one dominant idea running through them, i.e., Equal Justice.

There were several prohibition cases arising in the various High Courts of India where the Prohibition Act was attacked as offending various provisions of the Constitution. It was impugned as discriminating between country and foreign liquor in one case *Sheo Shankar v. State of M.P.*¹, where it was held that there could be no discrimination smelt out, as country liquor was more harmful and the classification was not improper. It was however held that giving preferential treatment under a rule to non-Asiatics does create an inequality attracting the application of Articles 13 and 14. But the unequal application of law by the Government under its rule-making powers being unconnected with the law itself does not render the law invalid; only the administration of the law is invalid but not the law itself.

In *Fram Nusserwanji Balsara v. State of Bombay*², section 46 of the Bombay Prohibition Act which distinguished between Indian visitors to Bombay and foreign visitors was held to offend Article 14. But concessions to foreigners as a class under section 40 (1) (c) was found to be reasonable on the ground that the Legislature could not be expected to interest itself in enforcing standards of social reform which are peculiar to our country upon foreigners.

The Madras High Court held in *Krishnamurthy v. Venkateswaran*³, that reasonable class legislation was intra vires and sustained, the Madras Agriculturists Relief Act (IV of 1938), as beneficial to all agriculturists.

In *V. G. Row v. State of Madras*⁴, the Chief Justice Mr. P. V. Rajamannar felt the principle of equality before law was not violated by the existence of special laws providing for particular groups in the State; but the learned Judge would concede that such a question may arise in the application or enforcement of the impugned Act.

In *Yusuf Abdul Aziz v. State*⁵, an attempt was made to get an adjudication that section 497 of the Indian Penal Code was ultra vires as it discriminated and rendered only the offending man as guilty leaving the woman scot free. Their Lordships felt that the position of women in India was peculiar in that they were subject to certain hardships such as rival wives, customary and economic dependence on man and hence there was no discrimination merely on ground of sex if women as a class were exempt from the operation of section 497. In a changing society with full equality in status attained by women in the field of divorce, property and profession, this position may however change.

The position of aliens in India is far better than those in America and other countries. The privilege of Article 14 is open to citizens and resident aliens alike. In *M. B. Namazi v. Deputy Custodian of Evacuee Property, Madras and others*⁶. The Administration of Evacuee Property Ordinance, 1949, was called in question as discriminatory. This plea was negatived by the Court, as after all the provisions are intended to safeguard the rights and interests of the evacuee in cases where they had left India particularly abandoning their properties. In America where aliens are entitled to the protection of both the due process clause and the equality clause there is yet a discernable discrimination against aliens.

"An auctioneer's licence may be refused to an alien. He may be denied a licence to sell intoxicating liquors or to run a pool hall, or to operate motor buses" (vide Weavers' Constitutional Law, p. 404).

In *Terrance v. Thompson*⁷, the Supreme Court of America held that each State had power to deny aliens, the right to own land within its borders especially if the alien had not declared his intention to become a citizen of America. One Court put it forcibly:

7. 262 U.S. 197.

"He owes no allegiance to our Flag or our Government. He may as far as we know be plotting our destruction. Why should we be presumed to give when we receive nothing."

In India under Article 31 no person shall be deprived of his property save by authority of law and the foreigner is not prohibited from owning property in India.

Protection in law should be equal to all and so in *Kameshwar Singh and others v. The State of Bihar and another*¹, the Bihar Land Reforms Act (XXX of 1950), was declared as ultra vires of Article 14 inasmuch as there was unequal protection to various kinds of landholders. It was held that compensation value if assessed at 20 times the net income in the case of the poor man and three times in the case of the rich landholder was certainly considered as an unreasonable classification denying equality in law.

Unequal access to Courts and arbitrary procedure adopted in the special Courts coupled with a carte blanche power to Government to forward any case in its discretion to these special Courts constituted under the West Bengal Special Courts Act (X of 1950) was determined to be a gross violation of the equal protection clause in *Anwar Ali v. State of West Bengal*². The Act was ultra vires Article 14 read with Article 13. The majority Judges Fazl Ali, Mahajan, Mukherjea, Chandrasekhara Ayyar and Bose, JJ., in forcible language opined that "to yield such an unregulated power to Government is so fatal in the interests of justice and the principles of 'equal protection' doctrine and 'due process of law'."

In an analogous case *Lachman Das Kewal Ram v. State of Bombay*³, the Bombay Public Security Measures Act (VI of 1947) was not sustained as it not only provided enhanced punishment and whipping but altogether eliminated the committal proceedings, allowed Government to arbitrarily choose the cases for trial under this Act, permitted the special Judge to record only a memorandum of the evidence and clothes him with new powers to refuse to summon defence witnesses and deprives the right of the accused for transfer of the case or for revision. The majority of the Supreme Court expressed that it was gross discrimination as between one tried under this Act and the one under the ordinary law and ordinary Courts and that Article 14 not only condemns discrimination in substantive law but also procedural law To pass the test of reasonable classification in class legislations two conditions are to be observed:

(1) that the classification must be founded on an intelligible differentia which distinguishes persons or things that are grouped together from others who are left out of the group ;

(2) that the differentia must have a rational relation to the object sought to be achieved by the Act,

Equality in law and equal protection in law was recognised in the matter of admission to Government educational institutions in *State of Madras v. Champakam Dorairajan*⁴, where it was held that the communal G.O., which fixed the quota of each community for admission offended Article 29 (2) which guaranteed in such cases equal treatment regardless of religion, race, caste, language or any of them. In *Venkataramana v. State of Madras*⁵, the Supreme Court again declared the communal G.O., of Madras in the matter of services as ultra vires of Article 16 (1) which guaranteed equality of opportunity, in the matter of public employment except to those who are classified by Government as 'Backward classes of citizens.'

Discrimination in taxation or municipal rental dues as between Government buildings and private building is also prohibited as unreasonable classification contravening Article 14, vide *Shyamal Mandal v. Municipal Board of Delhi*⁶.

The West Bengal Social Disabilities Removal Act which enjoined that social services shall not be denied to any one of any caste was questioned in *Banamalai Das v. Pakhu Bhandari*⁷, wherein a barber claimed his fundamental right to follow his calling without restriction per Article 19 (g) and that he should not be compelled to shave a cobler, against custom. Their Lordships held that there was no violation of the law and that the cobbler should be given such a social service without unequal treatment and the words 'interest of the general public' in Article 19 would obviate any doubt even if the restriction is irksome to the barber.

Separate classification as Banks and corporations comes under the "reasonable" category and so there can be special and appropriate privileges over individuals, vide *Sikharchand v. Bank of Baghelkhand*¹, and *Badri Batan Lal Rawat v. Vindhya Pradesh Government and another*². There will also be no discrimination while redressing special problems by reasonable classification such as landlord and tenant, creditor and debtor, agriculturists and non-agriculturists, vide *Krishnamurthy v. Venkateswaran*³.

Equality in law and equal protection comes under the broad head of right to equality covered by Articles 14 to 18. The second head of Fundamental rights are the rights to freedom (Articles 19 to 22). Thirdly, rights against exploitation (Articles 23 to 24); fourthly, rights to freedom of religion (Articles 25 to 28); fifthly, cultural and educational rights (Articles 29 to 30); sixthly, right to property (Article 31).

Under the first head we have studied Article 14. Article 15 removes all disabilities in respect of access to any public place on account of race, religion, caste, etc. Article 16 guarantees equal eligibility for any office or employment under the State. Article 17 forbids untouchability in any form, while Article 18 forbids conferment of titles. It must be understood that any law which discriminates between man and man in respect of any of the rights scheduled in Article 14 to Article 31 offends against the doctrine of equality in law and equal protection of laws.

Among the rights to freedom, freedom of speech, expression and assembly (without arms), of association, movement, of residing and settling in any part of the country, of acquiring and holding property, of practising any profession, occupation, trade, etc., are all vouchsafed by Article 19. Articles 20 to 22 guarantee personal liberty. The Supreme Court in *Rashid Ahmed v. The Municipal Board, Kairana*⁴, with Union of India and State of Uttar Pradesh as intervenors upheld the right of a vegetable seller to vend his trade, as the action of the Board in granting a monopoly to another citizen to carry on wholesale business in vegetables deprives the petitioner in plying his trade as the Board had put it out of its power to grant any licence to him. The restriction on the dealer was most unreasonable and contrary to the provision in Articles 19 (b) and 19 (1) (g). In *Muhammad Yasin v. The Town Area Committee, Jalabad*⁵, the Supreme Court held that the Town Area Committee were not vested with powers by the V.P. Municipal Act to frame bye-laws to impose a fee otherwise than for the use or occupation of any property and so the bye-law which imposed a fee irrespective of any use or occupation was declared as most unreasonable and so could not be termed as a valid law within the meaning of Article 19 (b) read with Article 19 (1) (g). Such illegal imposition was held as an illegal restraint infringing the wholesale right of the wholesale dealer to carry on his occupation, trade or business guaranteed under Article 19 (g).

Right to property are specially guaranteed by Article 31 by which there shall be no compulsory acquisition of property or any deprivation of property except by authority of law and just compensation. All these constitutional rights (Articles 14 to 31) can be asserted by constitutional remedies open to the citizen under Article 32. These rights are made available not only under the Union Government but also the State Governments and local authorities by virtue of the provision in Article 12.

CONCLUSION.

Of all the articles the importance of Article 13 can only be visualised by the effective shield it affords the citizen when faced with unreasonable and illegal restraint on his freedom exercised by those in authority. In *Jestingbhai Ishwarlal v. Emperor*¹, the Chief Justice Chagla opined :

"There is no limit placed upon the power of the Court to consider the nature of these restrictions. It being the duty of the Court to safeguard fundamental right, the greater is the obligation upon the Court to scrutinise the restrictions by the Legislature as carefully as possible."

As laid in *Middleton v. Texaspower and L. Coy.*², of course :

"It must be presumed that a Legislature understands and correctly appreciates the needs of its own people, that its laws are directed to problems made manifest by experience and that its discrimination are based upon adequate grounds."

Again the Legislature

"is free to recognise degrees of harm and it may confine its restrictions to those cases where the need is deemed to be the clearest." Vide Radice v. New York.³

In *State of West Bengal v. Anwar*⁴, the following further principles were formulated that unless a just cause for the discrimination is put forth in the law itself the statute has to be declared unconstitutional. Again the test for determining whether equal protection has been denied is objective and not subjective. Intention of the Legislature is really irrelevant. The law would be unconstitutional if discrimination is the necessary consequence of the Act, whatever may be the intention of the Legislature. Further if uncontrolled or unguided power is conferred without any reasonable and proper standards or limits being laid down in the enactment, the statute itself may be challenged and not merely the particular administrative act. Equal protection may be denied not only by legislation but also by administration of a law. The guarantee of equal protection applies against substantive as well as procedural law.

Gentlemen, I have dilated enough on the broad principles of equality before the law and equal protection of laws. Suffice it for me that I have placed my thoughts before you to ponder over what is good in it and to pardon me for the rest. I am ever so thankful to all my learned brothers of the profession and elders assembled here to have given me such a patient hearing. Please allow me to close my thesis with these words. The measure of our service to our motherland rests on the amount of public good we do in producing a sense of legalism and federalism among the ignorant multitudes of Bharat by making them feel the richness of their heritage. Our Constitution with its magna carta of rights and duties is the monument showing the progress of our race in securing to our citizens the blessings of civilization under the reign of just and equal laws. Our citizens must as individuals realise that these priceless gifts of the fundamental right to life, liberty and pursuit of happiness in a welfare State are secured to them. But they must also realize that our Republic is a Government of laws and not of a jumble of men. To the extent we uphold our laws, and revere our law Courts, our precious gift of freedom can be retained by us till eternity. The strident voice of humanity is now waiting for the lead of India in the emancipation of mankind and for peace on earth. It behoves us as true sons of India to be full citizens of India by growing to the fullest in our constitutional and moral stature. We shall truly strive to reach perfection in our standards of life, and promote human happiness with law and justice as our twin guiding and unfailing stars. Jai Hind.

CAN SOCIALISM BE INTRODUCED UNDER THE INDIAN CONSTITUTION BY AMENDMENT UNDER ARTICLE 368?

By

C. S. SUBRAMANIA IYER, Advocate, Madras.

The fundamental law of the nation is its constitution, from which flow various rights and liabilities (fundamental rights and obligations) to the individual in his relationship with his family, the State and Society. It is the constitution, according to Mr. Stone in 'Law and Administration', page 130, of the State, which acts as a check on the arbitrary and oppressive exercise of Governmental power, which cannot be hastily set aside or overturned, and which cannot be affected by the clamour or action of mere temporary majorities. Thus the Rule of Law is safeguarded by the Constitution and in the words of Prof. Lasky in 'Modern Theories of Law', page 54: "The Rule of Law, if it is to be effectively binding alike upon the Governors and their subjects, must give unmistakable indications of the influences for Legislative action that it contains. And there must be in the State some positive institution or institutions charged with the function of seeing to it that these influences determine the character of the legislation. This institution may, as in the United States be a Supreme Court, or as in Great Britain, the King in Parliament."

Mr. Lasky also says that what binds the State and contributes to the good life of the State (can you say, making it a welfare State?) is the yearning for social solidarity which is in essence, the Rule of Law or respect for individual liberty and freedom, and he draws pointed attention to this fact in the following words: "From the Rule of Law, in a word, there is imposed on the State the obligation to assume to each and all its citizens the means to enable them to contribute all it is in them to give to the fullest realisation of social solidarity. It is because of this obligation that the State is entitled to use force for the achievements of its end. For all the matter that is essential for the purpose, there should be constitutional guarantees in the ultimate framework of the State. In such an attitude we have all the materials for a full theory of the State. Experience is to suggest in terms of social solidarity a rule of right conduct, and the aim of the State is its realisation. The State clearly is bound by the rule, that is to say, bound by law, for by the very definition, it is an instrument and not an end."

The origin of the Rule of Law, whether in written or unwritten constitutions, is based on certain fundamental or basic propositions founded on certain natural rights inviolable and inviolate, and which have emerged in the process of the evolution of the human being due to the development of culture and refinement. The origin of the ideas of individual liberty, freedom and private property, are all milestones on the way from savagery to civilisation, which are recognised as healthy signs of the development of individual character and morality and thus contributing to the growth of a well-ordered society in the interests of social solidarity mentioned by Mr. Lasky. Each individual understands and recognises the others' rights, and in this way there is smooth movement of free thought and expression, and healthy action in free co-operative endeavour based on individual volition.

In the case of unwritten constitutions of the British Parliamentary type, these basic rights of freedom and liberty are protected by the ordinary law of the land, comprised of judicial pronouncements based on custom, usages, conventions and legislations, which together constitute what is called the Rule of Law. In the words of Prof. Dicey, "the Rule of Law as distinct from arbitrary power, assures equal protection of all laws to the individual, and enables all his liberties and freedoms to be protected. In England, even assuming the supremacy of Parliament over every other organ of Government, it has been the recognised practice not to unsettle well-recognised principles of individual liberty and freedom, by Parliamentary legislation. In connection with this subject, one commentator says, that the prerogative right of the King to defend and seek the assistance of his subjects to defend the country, cannot be taken away by an Act of Parliament, and that an Act of Parliament made against natural equity and justice as to make a man judge in his own cause, is void in itself." But though this maxim is technically wrong, and has not been applied in common law as they will be contrary to the sovereignty of Parliament, yet, this rule has been applied partially by the courts, by raising a presumption in favour of the King and his subjects namely, that ordinarily Parliament would not have intended to take them away unless by express words of the statute or by necessary implication.

This subject is well illustrated in the cases in England, which decided that the King is bound by an Act of Parliament which lays down basic principles of freedom and liberty to the individual, even though the King be not named in it, and even though ordinarily the Crown is not bound by an Act of Parliament in the absence of express words or necessary implication.

In *The case of Ecclesiastical Persons*¹ it was laid down thus: "In divers cases, the King is bound by an Act of Parliament, although he be not named in it, nor bound by express words. And therefore, all statutes which are made to suppress wrong, or to take away fraud, or to prevent the decay of religion, shall bind the King, although he be not named: for religion, justice, and truth are the true supporters of the crowns and diadems of Kings. And therefore, it is agreed in 35 H.6.60 that the King shall be bound by the Statute of Westminster, 2 Cap. 5 which makes provision against torturous usurpation, although the King is not named in the Act." Sir John Simon vehemently challenges the correctness of this observation in *Cayzer, Irvine Company, Ltd. v. Board of Trade*², but the rule has been consistently followed in later cases before courts of highest authority whatever might have been its origin. It originated as an observation in the *Magdalen Case*³ and it is even now considered good law. Kerr and Lawson in "Cases in Constitutional Laws", commenting on these above cases observe thus: "The Judges who decided these cases upholding the liberties of the subject have been thinking of an ideal constitution comprising these fundamental rights of common law which are so vital to the liberties of the subject and proper and efficient government of the country. These rules cannot be repealed but by statutes of direct and unequivocal statement, that is, that unless an Act of Parliament, unequivocally, by express words or necessary implication, take these rights away, all Acts of Parliament will be applied only subject to them. These rules form, and are termed as implied terms of the statute, though they do not override them."

In England certain outstanding rights are recognised: 1. Construction of statutes in favour of awarding legal right to the subject, to compensation for property acquired by the State, unless taken away by express words or necessary implication, i.e., the burden of proof is on the State to establish a case for expropriation of property without compensation. See *Central Control Board v. Cannon Brewery*⁴ and Attorney General v. De Keyser's Royal Hotel.⁵ 2. Strict construction of statutes depriving the liberty of the subject R. v. Halliday.⁶ 3. The protection of courts should be ordinarily extended to the subjects of the State unless statute denies it, Chester v. Bateson.⁷ 4. Strict construction of penal statutes. 5. Positive and clear enactments of Parliament alone can take away the jurisdiction of the supreme Courts of England and Scotland. 6. Courts have the right of pronouncing on the validity of subordinate legislation, whether they are ultra vires. (*Newcastle Breweries v. King*¹, though an Act of Parliament cannot be so subjected.)

In England, there is no question of suspending these fundamental rights as in America, where they can be suspended by the suspension of the constitution, but it is very doubtful if these rights can be destroyed or annulled altogether, both in England and in America, as they form unwritten laws of every constitution; whether codified or not. In a written constitution, these fundamental rights are enumerated and placed beyond the constituent power of majorities by convention though not by theory, in order that they should be stable, and not swayed as remarked by Stone, by temporary action of majorities inspired by different ideologies. These rights are the 'magna-carta' of the minority and they assure (a) fearless exercise of franchise at elections. (b) Freedom for the views of the opposition. Otherwise the successful majority might usurp the liberty of the minority by the exercise of the constituent power soon after it has become successful in an election in a spirit of political or communal revenge. In other words, it is a convention well recognised both in England and in America, that the supremacy of Parliament or the constituent power in a Republic will not affect, or would not be used in order to affect, the fundamental rights. The prerogative right of the King in Parliament to abridge the liberties of his subjects, may be there in strict legal theory, but it has been presumed in such cases, that Parliament has itself laid down the limits to, and thereby curtailed, the exercise of its prerogative. (*Attorney General v. De Keyser's Royal Hotel*²). One can call it as a constitutional estoppel.

In the same way, the constitution in America by enacting the 'Due Process of Law' clause, and especially by calling them as fundamental rights, has declared that it has set its limits on its constituent power, so far as those rights are concerned, that is, by estoppel raised by convention or public opinion. Vide 'The Government of the United States' by Munroe. These rights are therefore fundamental in the sense, that they are above party politics, and so beyond constituent power, and not merely legislative power, in actual practice, though not in strict legal theory. Vide 'Eminent Domain' by Nichols, who says, that they are really limitations and not merely powers conferred by the Constitution. In Canada under clauses 56 and 90 of the Federation Act, the Federal Power of Disallowance, enables Acts of provincial legislatures to be disallowed by the Governor-General in Council on the following grounds: (1) because the provincial Act in question is an abuse of power and contrary to sound principles of legislation as, e.g., amounting to spoliation or violation of property and vested rights under contracts or otherwise; (2) because it is ultra vires and therefore invalid; (3) because it conflicts with imperial interests or imperial policy; (4) because it conflicts with Dominion policy or interests.

• These are safeguards in the Constitution against violation of fundamental rights. Article 11 of the Japanese Constitution enacts, that fundamental rights are eternal and inviolable, and Article 5 of the American Federal Constitution enacts that no amendments shall be made depriving States, without its consent, of its equal suffrage in the Senate. The American Supreme Court has also laid down valuable judgments in construing the 'due process of law' clause in favour of the subject. As we have already remarked, that while in England these rights are permanently secured by Courts inferring the existence of such rights in all statutes in favour of subjects, unless expressly taken away by words or by necessary implication, in other countries governed by written constitutions, these rights are secured by written declarations, it being taken for granted, by all these countries alike, that the Constitution shall by convention retain these rights unrestrained by amendments effected by the exercise of constituent power. The analogy of the convention in the British Parliament of not initiating any legislation of a constituent nature without the consent of Dominion Parliaments, is a matter worth remembering in this connection, as a fundamental liberty of the States though legally under the dominion of the British Parliaments. Such a convention must be extended also in the case of the liberties of the subjects when protected by fundamental rights secured by constitutional provision.

Now we shall enter into the study of the Indian Constitution with regard to the provisions laid down in this Constitution in respect of these fundamental rights and analyse them. Though the Indian Constitution in the Centre is republican in character and is governed by written declarations of the Constitution, the provincial Government is more of the model of British Parliament ensuring the Rule of Law. Inasmuch as a suspension of the Federal Constitution under Articles 352 to 359 might result in the suspension of fundamental rights, it cannot be presumed that the provincial Legislatures completely are not ruled by the Rule of Law as in British Parliament, especially when the subjects of agriculture and land, etc., are provincial subjects.

India was not a free country in any sense of the term before the Independence Act of 1947, and it was neither sovereign nor democratic, nor a Republic, before the resolution of the Constituent Assembly which enacted the characteristics of the Constitution, and also certain fundamental rights or declarations of certain rights which should govern their self-government, and according to which they have to adopt the Indian Constitution. These fundamental declarations of the character of the Indian Government, were to be copied in the enacting part of the Constitution, and these declarations of rights were embodied in the preamble, which legally is outside "this Constitution," and which by Article 368, the amending Article, applicable only to "this Constitution", i.e., enacting part, is also outside the scope of amendability. These fundamental rights of justice, equality, fraternity, etc., in all spheres of activities, economic, social, political, etc., are to be the characteristics of the Sovereign Democratic Republic, and being outside the scope of the Constitution, cannot be suspended by emergency Articles 352 to 359 of the Constitution in a permanent form, though for administrative purposes the President can temporarily rule the State as a unitary form of Government for an emergency. The Fundamental Rights Parts III and IV, are only deductions from the logic contained in the preamble, and intended to secure these rights, and therefore whatever amendment may be made to "this Constitution" can only be in conformity with the preamble containing declarations of rights. As Maxwell, in his "Interpretation of Statutes", says, "it has been sometimes said that preamble may extend but cannot restrain the enacting part of the statute. But it would seem difficult to support the proposition. The function of the preamble is to explain what is ambiguous in the instrument, and it may either restrain or expand it as best suits the intention." He also says that it is the preamble's function to keep the effect of the Act within its real scope. Refer *Kannammal v. Kanakasabai*¹, *Secretary of State for India in Council v. Maharajah v. Bobbili*², Oudh Case in 'Construction and Interpretation of Statutes' by P. Narasimham.

Thus it would appear that Democracy, as distinct from Socialism of the Soviet pattern, is a distinct character of the Indian Constitution which has been secured permanently free from the amending power, and the freedoms of democratic life are secured by the fundamental rights under Part III considered along with Part IV, without prejudice to Part III (individual liberty restricted in operation by social obligations), and at the maximum, these rights can only be suspended for an emergency by the President under Articles 352 to 359, thus leaving the question of their permanency unquestioned and unchallenged.

In the First Amendment case (to our Constitution) *Shankari Prasad v. Union of India*³, Chief Justice Patanjali Sastri, (puisne Judge as he then was), of the Supreme Court, observes: "The terms of Article 368 are perfectly general and empower Parliament to amend the Constitution without any exception whatever. In the context of Article 13

"law must be taken to mean the rules or regulations made in the exercise of ordinary legislative power and not amendments to the Constitution made in the exercise of Constituent power, with the result that Articles 13 (2) does not affect amendments made under Article 368."

Two or three observations may be made in appreciating the judgment. One is, the general power of amendment under Article 368 can relate only to "this Constitution", a fact which I am afraid has been overlooked. And so what the learned Chief Justice must be deemed to mean is, that the amending power relates only to the enacting part of the Constitution, and not to the Constitution as a whole including the preamble. In other words, the preamble containing the declaration of rights is left untouched, and the amendment made to the Constitution must necessarily adopt the policy mentioned in the preamble, i.e., Democracy with social and economic justice and equality, or in other words, called as Democratic Socialism as distinct from complete Socialism. In other words, the preamble can restrict the scope of the statute in the same way as it is the duty of the enacting part to adopt the principles enunciated in the preamble. I am afraid that this aspect of the question has also been overlooked.

Secondly, the amendment of the fundamental rights, Articles 31-A and 31-B are not to be construed as amendments to the principle of the right of private property in all cases, but these amendments which are intended to implement the Congress resolutions, and so must be deemed to be part of the fundamental rights from their inception, are intended only to apply to the special case of zamindari or impartible estates which concentrate wealth permanently in a few hands to the detriment of the livelihood of the poor, vide observations of Patanjali Sastri, C.J., in 1952 S.C.J. 354. To stretch the logic of these amendments to other cases of private property, hereafter, would mean that the Indian Constitution is an absent-minded juristic person, who now and then forgets to carry out its original intentions of what it meant by the term fundamental rights and proceeds to vary its principles from time to time. Once the Constitution has exercised its abridgement of the scope of fundamental rights, and thereby clearly enunciated that all other forms of private property are governed by fundamental rights, there is a clear estoppel raised that it shall not proceed on further limitation of rights granted to the people of India. The judgment of the Supreme Court in *Bihar Zamindari Case*¹ should not therefore be taken to allow further amendments of these fundamental rights with a view to an initiation of a long and continued programme of social reform depriving all persons of private property, which will mean, that the Supreme Court has decided in favour of amending the Constitution in such a way as to repeal the fundamental rights as well as the Constitution, and enacting a different Constitution governed by a different ideology in its stead. As already mentioned, it is also wholly improper to set up the precedent of amending in such a way as to open the door for the destruction of the valuable rights for which the Constitution stands. The principle of English law governed by Parliamentary practice, to read implied declarations of fundamental rights in statutes, as well as the American precedents of refraining by convention from seeking the constituent power in such cases, must be remembered in this connection, and opportunity must be given for judicial pronouncements restricting or enlarging these rights as time goes on. "If the Constitution is rigid, flexibility must be supplied from the mind of the Judges" says (Bryce in "Studies in History and Jurisprudence").

Weaver in his "Constitutional Law", pages 108 to 110, says, that the permanence and indestructibility of all the Federations must be implied from the following case *Matus v. Hunter*² (evidenced by the preamble of the American Constitution) see 2 Dall. 419: 1 Law.Ed. 440: 118 M.E. 544: 107 A.T.L. 673: 5 A.L.R. 1412. He says the Constitution cannot be nullified as a whole or in part by an ordinary Act of the Congress, and any Act repugnant to the Constitution is void.

2. 1 Wheat. 304 : 4 Law. Ed. 471.

Chief Justice Marshal's dictum, "It is a proposition too plain to be contested that the Constitution controls any legislative Act repugnant to it may be referred to." In regard to Amendment (19th Amendment) see *Lesser v. Garnett*¹, *Bay v. United States*², *Dillon v. Glass*³. Weaver says in page 251, "that the Constitution cannot pass a law curtailing our independence as a nation or altering the form of our Government."

Thus even in America according to Weaver and Willoughby, there is a presumption (sometimes questioned) of an inherent prohibition against amendments destroying the character of the Constitution. Though in strict theory, amendments may be revolutionary; such an Act is not recognized as normal and healthy constitutional practice. The Constitution enacted by the entire people in a Constituent Assembly cannot in fairness be so amended as to be essentially altered in character by a section of the people though they are in a majority.

The following propositions must therefore be categorically emphasised in the interest of the permanency of the Rule of Law in the Indian Republic :—

1. The vindication of the supremacy of the Rule of Law is the unquestioned privilege of the Supreme Court, and that as in America, in Canada and in England, the rule must be interpreted as far as possible in favour of the subject, and that all necessary inferences as to the existence of the fundamental rights must be presumed in favour of the subject, unless the Constitution clearly in unequivocal words says, that such rights are taken away by its constituent power. The word 'Law' is too generic a term to be cut down to the meaning of 'Legislative Power' and where there is ambiguity in the construction of the term, the benefit of the doubt must go in favour of the subject as in England and in America, where the word 'Contract' was said to include the word 'Corporations' (Justice Marshal's Judgment in the famous Dartmouth Case).

2. The American 'due process of law' secures permanence of property rights to them, and it is regrettable that this clause has been whittled down, and changed into 'procedure established by law' making these fundamental rights reduced from their important position as substantive rights, to one of procedural rights. In other words: 'You can do anything provided you stick to the form of procedure established by law' is not a happy inference, flowing from the logic of this phrase. Here again is an opportunity for the Supreme Court to establish valuable precedents in favour of the subject.

3. The burden of proof that the Articles of the Constitution deprive the subjects of property, unless it is taken away by clear words or by necessary implication, must be on the Government.

4. That the Constitution of India must be presumed to contain an inherent prohibition, for reasons mentioned above, against destroying fundamental rights and also for the following reasons:

(a) The preamble being outside the amending Article 368, and the Constitution being adapted to the preamble so as to suit it, makes the democratic character permanent.

(b) Absence of provision for destroying the fundamental rights, but only their suspension on an emergency under Articles 352 to 359, raises a strong presumption that the word 'law' mentioned in Article 13 is constituent law or power and not merely legislative law or power.

(c) Once an amendment has been made to the fundamental rights under Article 31 it is not open to the Constitution to further abridge these rights, as an estoppel or a self-abridgment of prerogative must be read in the case.

(d) The enumeration of 'fundamental rights' in the Constitution, and the statement, in essence, that no law shall restrict or override fundamental rights, mean that the 'fundamental law' from which these rights accrue, i.e., 'the Constitution', assures the individual that it shall not exercise its sovereign powers by virtue of amendment, in the curtailment of such rights which have already curtailed sovereign prerogative. In other words, a constitutional estoppel or guarantee in the words of Professor Lasky, or shall we say a contract with every citizen of Free India that the constituent power will not be used except in furtherance of Parts III and IV which is subordinate to Part III, is implied.

As in America, the analogy of police power and the power of the State to regulate property affected with public interest, besides the law of public utility enterprises, will widen the scope of the exercise of sociological impact upon individual liberty without destroying it, and this will be effected gradually by judicial interpretation.

(e) It must be further pointed out that the ryotwari system has been introduced in all the lands which were previously governed by the Madras Estates Land Act by the enactment of the Zamindari Abolition Act under Articles 31-A and 31-B of the Constitution. The Estate Abolition Act confers full rights of ownership upon the tenants cultivating the lands, and therefore, it is a further estoppel on behalf of the Government by which they are precluded from going back on the new settlement, and trying to introduce any form of socialism by which private rights to property will be restricted or abolished.

(4) That as complete Socialism in India implies practically the total negation of the ideas of private property and the liberty of the individual, except as a mere tool or an instrument of the State, an amendment of the Constitution of such a nature will be virtually a repeal of the present Constitution, and enactment of a fresh one, which is called revisional legislation (see William Anderson on 'American Government'), for which there is no provision for representatives in the Legislatures including the Indian Parliament to act on behalf of the entire body of the 350 millions of the Indian community, and therefore any such departure from the present Constitution can be effected only on the resolution of a new Constituent Assembly appointed for the purpose.

Any law by which such an amendment of a drastic character could be justified as a constitutionally proper amendment, will, I am afraid, fall under the reproach of the famous Daniel in his words, hereunder quoted from the Dartmouth Case.

"By the law of the land, is most clearly intended the general law, a law, which hears before it condemns, which proceeds upon enquiry and records judgment only after trial, the meaning of this being that every citizen shall hold his life, liberty, property and immunities under protection of the general rules which govern society. Everything which passes under the form of an enactment is not therefore to be considered the law of the land. If this were so, acts of attainder, bills of pains and penalties, acts of confiscation, acts reversing judgments, and acts directly transferring one man's estate to another, would be the law of the land". —(Quoted in Baldwin's 'American Judiciary').

SUMMARY OF ENGLISH CASES.

R. v. PEARCE, (1952) 2 All.E.R. 718 (C.C.A.).

Criminal Law—Attempt to commit an offence—Sentence could not be higher than for the offence itself.

It is not right, if a man is convicted only of an attempt to commit an offence, although technically he may be liable to a term of imprisonment at the discretion of the Court, that he should be given a longer sentence, for the attempt than he could have been given if he had committed the full offence.

If for the full offence Parliament has laid down a definite sentence, it is wrong, if a defendant is convicted of an attempt, to give a longer sentence than could have been given for the substantive offence.

NEWSOM v. ROBERTSON (INSPECTOR OF TAXES), (1952) 2 All.E.R. 728 (C.A.).

Income-tax—Authorised deductions—Travelling expenses of barrister between home and chambers—If could be deducted—Circumstances—Wholly and exclusively—Meaning of.

A distinction must be drawn between living expenses and business expenses. In order to decide into which category to put the cost of travelling one must look to see what is the base from which the trade, profession, or occupation is carried on. In the case of a tradesman, the base of his trading operation is his shop. In the case of a barrister, it is his chambers. Once he goes to his chambers, the cost of travelling to the various courts is incurred wholly and exclusively for the purpose of his profession. But it is different with the cost of travelling from his home to his chambers and back. That is incurred because he lives at a distance from his base. It is incurred for the purposes of his living there and not for the purposes of his profession, or at any rate not wholly or exclusively, and this is so whether he has a choice in the matter or not. It is a living expense as distinct from a business expense.

Per Romer, L.J.—In order that the taxpayer's expenses of travelling to and fro should qualify for tax purposes as permissible deductions from his gross earnings as a barrister it must be shown that they were incurred wholly and exclusively for the purposes of his profession.

It cannot be said even of the morning journey to work that it is undertaken in order to enable the traveller to exercise his profession. It is undertaken for the purpose of neutralising the effect of his departure from his place of business, for private purposes, on the previous evening. In other words, the object of the journeys, both morning and evening, is not to enable a man to do his work, but to live away from it.

CIVIL AIR TRANSPORT INCORPORATED v. CENTRAL AIR TRANSPORT CORPORATION, (1952) 2 All.E.R. 733 (P.C.).

International Law—Recognition of foreign government if could be retroactive in effect—De jure and de facto governments—Sale of property by a government since superseded by another—Validity of sale—When can be questioned.

The paramount importance of the principle of continuity, i.e., of a succeeding government accepting what has been done by its predecessor cannot be read as authorising a Court to treat as a nullity political decisions and actions of a former government which have resulted in the transfer of property to third parties. At the same time the possibility of Courts refusing, in a conceivable case, to recognise the validity of the disposal of State property by a government on the eve of its fall, e.g., by a despot, who knows that previous recognition is just being withdrawn, where it is clear that his purpose was to abscond with the proceeds, or to make away with State assets for some private purpose, cannot be overruled.

Subsequent recognition de jure of a new government as the result of successful insurrection can, in certain cases, annul a sale of goods by a previous government. If the previous government sells goods which belong to it but are situated in territory effectively occupied at the time by insurgent forces acting on behalf of what is already a de facto new government, the sale may be valid if the insurgents are afterwards defeated and possession of the goods is regained by the old government. But if the old government never regains the goods and the de facto new government becomes recognised by Her Majesty's Government as the de jure government, purchasers from the old government will not be held in Her Majesty's Courts to have a good title after that recognition.

Primarily, at any rate, retroactivity of recognition operates to validate acts of a de facto government which has subsequently become the new de jure government, and not to invalidate acts of the previous de jure government.

It might be too wide a proposition to say that the retroactive effect of de jure recognition must in all cases be limited to acts done in territory of the government so recognised, for the case of a ship of the former government taken possession of by insurgents on the high seas and brought into a port which is under the control of the de facto government would have to be considered.

DEMOCRATIC SOCIALISM AND ITS IMPACT ON THE INDIAN CONSTITUTION*

By

C. S. SUBRAMANIA AYYAR, ADVOCATE, MADRAS.

Great political leaders, like Mahatma Gandhi and the Hon'ble Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru and revolutionary reformists like Lenin and Stalin have remarked that imperialism is the chief capitalistic enemy of true economic democracy and the last war demonstrated the utter failure of capitalistic nationalism to solve international problems unless it is imbued with a true desire on the part of every nation to temper its principles of political democracy with altruistic and socialistic ideals of economic democracy. "The failure of Parliamentary Democracy is not that it has gone too far but that it did not go far enough. It was not democratic enough because it did not provide for economic democracy and its methods were slow and cumbrous and unsuited to a period of rapid change. (Jawaharlal's Autobiography, page 530-52)". A nation having a centralised administration with power concentrated in the hands of the few oligarchs controlling all the means of production in the state, must naturally drive the unemployed have-nots in quest of foreign land, to satiate their hunger, and itself be the instrument of suppressing democracy and the fondly cherished civil liberties of the subjects in the land of their conquest. Vide Lenin on "Imperialism the Highest Stage of Capitalism". The subjects of the conquered state must necessarily be content to be mere wage earners without any initiative or individuality in commerce or industry. This imperialistic hunger is a never-ending hunger and while annihilating all that is good and great in civilised man by the creation of the inferiority complex in the governed, it becomes at the same time the repository of suspicion and fear, and in the name of defending its possessions from conquest, proceeds to arm itself, and endangers thereby the liberty of every other nation including its individuals. Thus, problems of individual liberty both in the political as well as economic sphere, have a distinct and far-reaching effect on not only the welfare of the state but also on the peace and well being of the world. Economic democracy is therefore not merely a national question, a question of domestic politics but one of world or international importance. Vide Findings of Asian Relations Conference in Delhi in April, 1947.

The history of the development of economic democracy is connected with the development and application of the principles of philosophy enunciated by Plato, Rousseau, Mazzini and Hegel to political thought in the west. The origin of Fascism and Nazism, according to Wyckam Steed in his book on 'Way to Social Peace,' page 49, is to be found in the political philosophy of Hegel. From it Karl Marx and Frederik Engels, drew and expounded ideas in their joint work 'Capital' and in their Communist Manifesto of 1848. The Marx Manifesto clearly attributes all the evils of society to a never-ending conflict of class warfare which can end only by the destruction of middle class who are in control of all power of wealth in the form of industry or land; and the solution of the problem lies in the distribution of the means of production to all. Therein alone lies the way to the ending of the hostility of one nation to another.

The Marx doctrine was assimilated by different nations who adumbrated different ideologies, but having this distinct common platform, that the individual must bow down to the higher mandate of either the state or the society or the nation. The mandate of the state was clearly expressed in the collectivist theory of the state which assumed the form of Fascism of Mussolini. The mandate of society assumed the form of Socialism or the Russian Communist ideology enunciated by Lenin and Stalin. The mandate of the nation assumed the form of the National Socialism of Hitler; in all the three ideologies, individual interest was to be subordinated to a wider conception in varying degrees, but it must be remembered that both Fascism as well as National Socialism wrested power from democracy and became its powerful enemy by centralising power in dictatorship, thus annihilating individuality itself and not merely individual liberty. In Fascism and Nazism, individual liberty was largely curtailed, whereas in Socialism of Russia, individual liberty was enlarged to make it co-equal with the interests of society, with the result that there was to be no individual apart from his being an instrument of social progress. Fascism and Hitlerism had to arm themselves and be the protagonists of warfare, and they attempted to spread their philosophy by the achievement of their imperialistic ambitions.

The principles of economic democracy in Europe, sprang up as a result of the French revolution and the wars between France and England. The famous declaration of the Rights of Man in the French Constitution of 1789 was followed by other constitutions, the Italian and the German. The beginnings of the 20th century witnessed the rise of the principles of Liberalism, Social democracy, Syndicalism, etc.

In Italy, Social democracy arose as a remedy for the economic ills consequent on the war between England and Germany in 1914. It was Mussolini, leader of the Fascist party who usurped the powers of Government as a Dictator soon after the Russian Third International which started the movement. Catholic Pope who was opposed to the preaching of Socialism spread a new Gospel of Christian democracy to counteract it. A new party called the Party Populae was started to destroy the "Bourgeois". Donsturgo, a priest preached radical doctrines against the Bourgeois, and recommended distribution of land. The National party was a third party which preached Mazzini's doctrines. Socialists were for distributing lands but the Nationalists were not so keen. Finally the Fascist party of Mussolini and the National party were amalgamated in 1923 and the Fascist State came to power. The ideal of the Corporative State was thus evolved. The proudest boast of Fascism, according to Henry Russell Spencer in his book on 'Government and Politics of Italy', "is in solving the world wide puzzle, of how capital and labour may be led out of the sterile, destructive struggle for mastery at the nation's expense, and converted to methods of social integration and to orderly working side by side in the nation's economic effort. Co-operative production, not competitive distribution becomes the major economic interest. The state without itself engaging in socialist production or distribution, is to secure social justice by authoritatively apportioning productive tasks and securing the appropriate distributive rewards that automatically result".

The Italian Constitution speaks of certain fundamental rights. It calls these rights as Rights and Duties of Citizens. Under Article 24, all are equal before the Law, all should contribute towards the state and in proportion to their possessions. Individual liberty is guaranteed, the dwelling house is inviolable and domicile is protected. Under Article 29, all property without exception is inviolable. Nevertheless when the public interest legally ascertained requires it, a person may be bound to give it up, in whole or in part, upon payment of a just indemnity in accordance with law.

But with all this, it must be said that liberty as preached by Mussolini was in practice the liberty of the state and not of the individual. Mussolini himself defined liberty as the only freedom that can seriously be considered—the freedom of the state and of the individual within the state”, which means that Fascism is for the state—and for the individual so far as he coincides with the state. Fascism does not restrict individual freedom but what it not only restricts but exterminates is his individuality. Mr. A. B. Ashton in his book on the ‘Fascist, His State and Mind,’ pages 110 to 116, says that the liberty of action for the Fascist individual regardless of the stand of the community is a logical impossibility from the collectivist point of view. Hence the judiciary became merely a branch of the administration authorised to enforce and effectuate among the members of the community the collective will as proclaimed by the community. The courts turned into mere agencies of administration from being an independent arm of state power. “In the democratic country the individual is subject to the law which however is not allowed to infringe upon his specially protected rights. In other words the law signifies the worst that democratic community can do to their single members. In the Fascist State the relation is reversed. The individual is bound and restricted anyway, by virtue of the fact that he is a member of a collective body, to the behaviour pattern required by the communal interests and its many synonyms like ‘Fascist Spirits’, ‘some popular feelings’. As a German Jurist remarked, in Italy, the will of the state was the soul of the law. In English parlance this aspect of the matter will be viewed as negating the citizen’s right to ‘equality before the law’, which is cherished by all liberty loving people. Fascism does not believe in a justice independent from the group or society administering it. They admit it cannot be an absolute justice. But they cleverly contend that all justice proceeds on communal interests. Another objection, which is raised by all liberty loving people to the Fascist theory, is, that it destroys the very certainty which according to well-known principles of jurisprudence constitutes good law. The Fascist answers this charge in this way, that the individual being a member of the community must be presumed to know, to feel, and participate in the collective will. This is Fascist organic conception of the state, viz., that the will of the state is the soul of the law, which conception has supplied so much protection to the lawless despotism of the Fascist. Fascism authoritative in principle and totalitarian in conception, thus refused to be controlled by individual norms. There was absolutely no department of governmental activity free from the influence of this doctrine. Universal conscription became the rule not only in military matters but also in the employment of labour. The Fascist Press became the mouthpiece of the communal will and purpose. “In dealing with the intellectuals, in conquering or crushing them one by one, the Fascist regime exhibited the most accomplished refinement of cruelty” vide page 126, Fascism—who benefits” by Max Ascoli and Arthur Filar of the University in Exile”!

The economic organisation in Italy is outlined in the corporate theory, the Cartedel Lavoro of 21st April, 1927, which was proclaimed by the Grand Council of Facism in 1927. They are general principles generally followed in the Republic to frame laws. In 1934 Parliament was abolished and a National Council of Corporation was established. Article I of the Carte del Lavoro says that the ancient and powerful Italian nation stands above the single or combination of individuals as an independent organism of superior value and represent the Fascist State and that labour of all forms is a social duty, and only as such, protected by the State. The process of production is for the nation, an indivisible whole. Its purposes, without distinction, are one and the same individual well-being, and furtherance of the state power.

Article III.—Professional and labour organisation is free, but only the legally recognised and communally controlled organisation has the right to speak for the entire category of employers and employees for what it is established, to represent their interests before the state and against other organisations, to make collective agreements binding upon all members of the category, to collect dues from them and to exercise all public functions conferred upon it.

Article IV.—The collective agreement serves to express the solidarity of different factors of production, by compromising the conflicting interests of employers and employees and subordinating them to the higher interests of production.

Article V.—The labour court is the organ employed by the state to decide labour conflicts.

Article VI.—The legally recognised corporations assure the legal equality between employers and employees, maintain discipline in production and labour, and aid in its improvement—"since interests of production are national interests, the corporations are legally recognised as organs of state."

Article VII.—The corporate state considers private initiative and production the most valuable and the most effective instruments for the protection of national interests. "Private organisation of production is a national function of the employer. He is therefore responsible for it to the state. Employees are active collaborators in the economic enterprise the management of which is the employers' function and responsibility.

Article VIII.—It is the duty of employer associations to direct all their efforts towards the increased and improved production and towards decrease in prices.

Article IX.—State interference in economic affairs takes place only where private initiative is lacking or insufficient or where political interest of the state are affected. Such interference can take the form of supervision, aid or direct assumption of control."

In agriculture, Fascist farm policy was interested in getting practical results. Mussolini's farm programme was of two kinds: 1. Bonifica integrale or large scale reclamation undertaking. 2. The battle of the grain, which was a drive to raise the wheat output. Organisation of agriculture was intended to achieve these ends. The farming population becomes a favoured and protected population and farming takes the character of one of communal interests as different from a purely private business. "Fascism defended and encouraged private property in the form of small ownership as it recognised the economic liberty secured by the institution of private property and as it also breeds the maximum of initiative and as possession of private property is also an opportunity for the individual to acquire responsibility to society. The right to acquire property and transmit it are the corner stones of fascist policy. In Italy, the number of small farmers or part owners form a very large proportion of the population, also small shop keepers, small independent business of all kinds, including artisans" (Fascism by Major J. B. Barnes, pages 162-4). This results in the complete abandonment of concepts governing capitalist agriculture. Capitalism assumed secondary importance. The German ideal was also similar in purpose, though in methods different, as we shall see hereunder, under the German constitution of 1919.

THE CONSTITUTION OF THE GERMAN FEDERATION OF 1919.

The German Constitution was based on Liberty and Justice intended to serve the cause of peace, domestic and international and to promote social progress. Article VII (12) and Article VII (13) deal with the socialisation of national resources and of economic undertakings and the production by manufacture, distribution and regulation of prices, of economic commodities under social management. Under Article 48 if the state fails to perform the duties imposed upon it by the Federal constitution or the Federal law, the President of the Federation, may enforce performance with the aid of armed forces. If public order and security are seriously disturbed or endangered within the Federation the President of the Federation may take all necessary steps for their restriction, intervening if need be with the aid of armed forces. For the said purpose he may suspend for the time being, either wholly or in part, the Fundamental rights described in Article 114 Personal Freedom, 115 Residence, 117 Secrecy of Correspondence, 118 Freedom of Expression, 123 Right to Assemble, 124 Peaceful Associations, 153 Property which is guaranteed by the Constitution. The contents and limits of right of property.

are defined by laws. Expropriation is admissible only in public interest and so far as authorised by law and is accompanied by adequate compensation unless a Federal Law otherwise determines—the constitution further says that property entails responsibilities, it should be put to such use as to promote at the same time the common good. Section V deals with economic life. Organisation of economic life is in accordance with the principle of justice and aims at security for all conditions of existence worthy of human beings. Within these limits, the individual is to be secured the enjoyment of economic freedom. Legal compulsion is admissible only so far as is necessary for the realisation of threatened rights, or to serve overriding claims of the commonweal. Freedom of trade and industry is guaranteed within the limits prescribed by Federal laws. Article 154 deals with the right of inheritance which is guaranteed, but the state fixes laws for taking its share in the estate of the deceased person. Article 155 relates to the distribution and use of land which are to be under state supervision, with a view to the prevention of abuses and in order to secure for every German a healthy dwelling and for all German families especially large ones, according to their needs, suitable homesteads and small holdings. In the law to be enacted concerning homesteads the claims of those who have taken part in the late war will receive special consideration. Land may be expropriated, if required for houses, for settlements for bringing it under cultivation or for encouragement of agriculture. Entails are to be broken off. The cultivation and utilisation of the soil is a duty which a landlord owes to the community. The unearned increment in the value of land is to be used for the benefit of the community. Article 156 regulates socialisation. The Federation may by law without prejudice to the claims to compensation and with a due observance of the rules governing expropriation—convert into social properties such private economic undertakings as are suitable for socialisation. It may assign to itself or to the states, or to the local committees, a share in the management of economic undertakings or of their combination or otherwise secure for itself a decisive influence therein. Further more in case of urgent needs, the Federation may provide for the compulsory formation of self-governing syndicates out of economic undertakings and their combination, with a view to their management on social lines—the motive being to secure the co-operation of all productive sections of the community, to secure the participation of both employers and employees in the management, and to regulate on principles of social economy the production, manufacture, distribution, uses and prices, as well as import and export of economic commodities. Upon their demand, co-operative, industrial, and trading societies and their unions are to be incorporated into the socialised economic system, due regard being had to their Constitution and their secular character.

Labour, intellectual work, fine arts, etc., are all protected. Freedom to combine for protection of labour, etc. and the leave and pay of labourers are guaranteed. Health insurance, maternity insurance, insurance against old age and infirmities are all guaranteed. Women are guaranteed general minimum of social rights. Every German is given a chance to earn a living by economic labour.

Article 164.—The interests of the independent middle class engaged in agriculture, industry and trade are to be furthered both in legislation and administration. It must be protected against excessive burdens and against the risk of absorption.

Article 165.—Co-operation between workers and employers are recognised, and agreement enforced in regard to wages and conditions of labour. Bills of fundamental importance in relation to matters of social and economic policy, before being introduced in Reichstag shall be submitted to the Federal Government, to the Federal Economic Council, for an expression of its opinion.

Article 107.—There must be administrative courts, in virtue of laws both in the Federation and the State, for the protection of the individuals against orders and decrees of the administrative authorities.

The fundamental rights of the individual are enunciated from Article 109 onwards.—All are equal before the law—men and women have the same political rights and duties, privileges and disadvantages of both arising from birth and rank within the sphere of public law are abolished. Article 114—Freedom to move from one place to another, to acquire land and to follow any calling. Organisation of Federal Economic Council and the system of council under them are reviewed by Oppenheim in his book on the 'German Federation'. He says one more organ of Government claims attention, the Federal Economic Council to which as will presently appear, a subsidiary share in legislation is assigned by the constitution. This is a body of an entirely novel character, without parallel in the public law of any foreign state. "It is hardly necessary to repeat here that anything in the nature of a class regime, any institution suggestive of a proletarian dictatorship, either in the central government or in that of the states, is absolutely inconsistent with both the letter and spirit of the constitution. As a reporter of the committee of the constitution explained "the basic aim in setting up the council, is to establish by the side of the political organisation of the state, an independent economic organisation which is to be entrusted with the task of solving economic problems with the aid of the economic forces themselves." The root idea appears to be a logical deduction from the philosophy of Hegel developed in the economic field by his disciple Lawrence Vonstein, that industry is always monopolised by capital every time it is used by any organ of government. A similar range of thoughts inspires Saint Simon and culminated in the Marxian Doctrine of Class Conflict—which in Russia, "was solved by the organisation of the struggle of the proletariat which is the essence of the system of councils as set up in the Russian Soviet Republic." Mr. Oppenheim pleads for a via media between these extremes and he finds the solution only on proceeding on democratic lines. "That is, without in any way denying the reality of conflicting interests, the school of thought at once attempts to provide organisation, through which they can be harmonised and legalised". It is essential that in a matter of such social importance, both parties should leave off their attempt to run on parallel grooves and reconcile their conflict, leave out their idea of the one dominating the other, and to meet on a footing of perfect equality. The attempt was to decentralise democracy into two units, political and economical. "Moreover the democratic principle favouring detachment, gave a powerful impulse to the tendency towards self-government in the economic as in every other sphere. Democracy in the German Constitution is not only the ruling political principle, its spirit also permeates the whole of the social and in particular the economic fabric. The age of autocratic Government and of the absolute supremacy of capital in industry belongs to the past". These were the foundations of the German constitution and as we will see later on, the Indian constitution also puts both political democracy and economic democracy on a footing of perfect equality, as laid down clearly in their declaration of rights contained in the preamble.

The fundamental rights mentioned in the German Constitution are limits imposed on the omnipotence of the state by assigning to the individual the sphere within which it was free to move in complete independence, immune from all official interference. The Declaration of 1789 mentioned it as an inalienable heritage belonging to man under the dispensation of the Law of Nature (Droits de l'homme) or as Droits due citoyen or as originating in a constitutional grant, i.e., in positive law, as for the first time in their charters constitutionnelle of Louis the XVIII of 1814, where they are treated under the significant heading: "Droit public des Français". It was from the latter source that American constitution introduced the Fundamental Rights in their constitution, either directly, or through the medium of the Chapter 'Des Droits des Belges' in the Constitution of 1830.

The Weimer Constitution, specifically mentions fundamental rights, though the Imperial constitution of 1871 and the Republican constitution of 1875 do not contain fundamental rights. Both the Prussian and the Government drafts leading up to the Weimer constitution, contain short sections enumerating fundamental rights, which was finally adopted by the National Assembly after much difference of opinion and discussion. It was called by Dr. Nauman as the German people's political bible, as a primer of German Public Law. Both the German constitution of 1849 and the Prussian constitution of 1848 and 1850 mention fundamental rights. They speak of them not merely as bricks in the building but also as the bread of the life of the constitution.

This system of German Government, underwent great changes by the growth of the National Socialist Party headed by Hitler in 1923. Hitler's 'Mein kampf' defines, and defends the necessity for a strong middle class in its programme of the National Socialist Party. Germany enters the Third Reich. Before the Nazis came to power, the collective economic organisation was mainly intended to protect individual rights and interest. Trusts abounded in industries, and the German Trade Associations enjoyed great powers. The public were accustomed to the use of the co-operative societies, labour relations were dependent on collective bargains, labour unions were amalgamated in the social democratic Free unions. Nearly 90 per cent. of trade and commerce were regulated by collective agreement between industrial unions and representative bodies of employer, and not between individuals and unions. The Nazis before they came to power, established "plant cells" in almost every organisation of governmental activity. These cells were units under which, certain trusted individuals in each organisation, were entrusted with effective power to control and regulate organisations. After the Nazis took charge of the Government, these cells were organised into the "Nationalist Socialist Planned Self-organisation". Regional labour trustees were appointed to safeguard labour wages, in 1933. Labour structure was absorbed in German Labour Front, a new organisation. In January 1934, the law for the organisation for the Nazi labour, enumerated the principles of capital and labour relations, as one of social responsibility fastened on the employer as 'leader', to be supervised by Government labour trustees. In 1934, organisation of labour front was made to agitate for labour problems. The Reich Chamber of Economics, was constituted as the head of the commercial organisation under the Minister of Economics, with 13 main divisions and 2 separate divisions, supervised by the Chamber of Commerce, and in 1936 the Labour front incorporated the Reich Chamber of Economics as its Economic Department. Thus the whole of Government industries came under the direct control of the Reich.

The essence of the German scheme as embodied in Articles I and II of the Law for the Organisation of National Labour are:—1. In a business enterprise, the owner as leader, and the employees as followers, shall work together to further the purpose of the enterprise, and for the common good of the nation and of the state. 2. As between the leader of the enterprise and the followers, the leaders may call for decisions concerning the enterprise. "He is to take care of the welfare of the followers. The followers are to keep faith with him in a spirit of solidarity in a common enterprise".

In Germany, the method of approach in farm policy was similar to the labour front in business. An institution called the 'Reichsnährstand' an agricultural Corporation, was formed, whose purpose was to cement a perpetual bond between the soil and the peasant. By introducing a Farm Inheritance Law, the Entailed Farms law of 1933 which was intended to preserve the Farms of German agriculture in blocks of small and medium sized holdings. The policies and purposes to be adopted in the matter, were left to experts in the organisation and in the Government agencies controlling them. The farming class is treated with great favour by Germany and given personal protection. In comparing this with Indian Agriculture, it might be remarked that the transition from the patriarchal family living on undivided common land, to a joint family which by partition lives upon land in its exclusive possession, as described by Mr. Maine in his book on Hindu Law, must be presumed to have been intended for the preservation of blocks of small and medium sized holdings in India. The religious conception of a joint family law of survivorship and inheritance must have been adopted as a practical and empirical mode, under legal cover, of conserving these small blocks without being frivolously distributed by fragmentation.

The Irish Free State also embodies fundamental rights in its constitution. The country is mainly dependent on agriculture and there are not many industrial towns in Irish Free State. The official Year Book published by Northern Ireland is itself a sufficient proof that the economic life of Ulster is the same as the rest of Ireland. Agriculture is the main industry of the province. All land have been completely nationalised by the State. Mr. Justice Hanna in his book "The Statute Law of the Irish Free State" gives us valuable information regarding the mode of purchase of land adopted by the Government in nationalising the industry. All net income by way of rents from lands were calculated on the average basis of 75 per cent. of their rents and capitalised value was calculated at 15 years' purchase of the above basis with 10 per cent addition. Land bonds were issued to the landholders carrying interest at 4 per cent. The tenants repurchased these lands on an annuity basis. The Agricultural Credit Corporation of the State advanced money to Government as well as the tenants to redeem holdings and for making advances towards purchase by tenants of the proprietors' rights. In distributing lands, an average of 10 acres per individual is reckoned. These are valuable data for the planning Commission in determining ceiling on large holdings, and the mode of purchase of properties, which may be suitably adapted to Indian conditions of agriculture.

The Soviet Constitution, which is based on the principle 'He who does not work cannot eat' has completely nationalised all the means or sources of production. The Soviet Republic of 1918 in Article 22 says that "the Russian Socialist Federal Soviet Republic, recognising the equality of all citizens before the law, irrespective of race or nationality declares it contrary to the fundamental laws of the Republic to institute or tolerate privileges or any prerogative whatsoever, founded on such grounds, or to repress national morals or in any way limit their rights."

Article 23.—In the present interests of the workers classes, the Russian Socialist Federal Soviet Republic deprives individuals and sections of the community of any privileges which may be used by them to the detriment of the social revolution. The All Russian Congress of Soviets is the supreme authority of the Russian Socialist Federal Soviet Republic. The Constitution divides property into two categories: 1. Means of production; 2. Articles of consumption. All means of production belong to the state, i.e., socialised i.e., land, waters, forests, mills, factories, railways, transport, trades, the banks, concerns, municipal corporation, etc. Articles of consumption are personal property under which category are included dwelling houses, furniture, utensils, clothing, etc., besides food. Means of production are socialised and left under the charge of co-operative societies, public organisations, etc. All citizens under Soviet Union have an equal right to a life of well-being. This does not mean that the standard of life of all is the same, that wealth is divided among them equally. Personal property consist equally of money and the articles of consumption, only rarely of means of production. Rural inhabitants, collective farmers, may have their subsidiary plots and cultivate them, and keep cattle and poultry and pigs and acquire implements. Their subsidiary holdings are not intended to serve the principal purpose of being means of livelihood but only to supplement the income derived from collective or social production. Personal properties are at the disposal of the owner and may be bought or sold or donated or pledged but they should not be used as a means of exploiting labour, or be the object of profiteering or usury. On the death of the owner, personal property passes to his heirs. The constitution makes specific provision for safety of personal property. Persons intending to build houses are given free gifts of plots and free building materials; furniture, etc. and cows can be purchased on easy terms. Loans are granted by the State on two per cent interest on instalment system.

Private enterprise is allowed to those persons who do not desire to take part in socialised or collective enterprise. It may be farming, handicraft or in one of the learned jobs or professions. Private enterprises must depend only on individual labour and not hired labour. In Latvia, Lithuania and Esthonia farming can be done with private labour or in private owned workshop, but not more than three labourers can be engaged.

Property is owned jointly, each one having a distinct share and inherited by each one's heirs. Bequests are held jointly if made to two or more persons. "The system of property relations established by the law and constitution of U.S.S.R. is based on the principle of harmonising the interests of Society with the interest of the individual citizen. Socialist Property promotes the augmentation of the national wealth and of the national income of the Soviet Union, and hence the improvement of the standard of living of its citizens. It makes it possible for the people to plan their national economy in their own interests. It was the socialist ownership of the Soviet people of the means of production that enabled them to defeat Nazi invaders and to uphold the liberty and independence of their country". Andrey Y. Vyshinsky says that in no democratic constitution of the capitalistic type have fundamental obligations been attached to fundamental rights, and that the Soviets pride themselves in having fundamental rights and obligations in their constitution under section 3. The Soviet principle of completely nationalising all means of production will not be suitable to Indian conditions of agriculture, its Property Law or the Personal Law of the Hindus as mentioned earlier in my Article on Land Reforms in India, published in the Madras Law Journal on 11th December, 1952 and Madras Law Weekly on 21st February, 1953. It might cause acute financial depression in India if land which is the credit structure of the whole fabric should cease to be a species of private property. Agricultural and commercial debts and credits will have to be disowned, and wiped off. Inheritance Law will have to be abolished. Religion will cease to have any spiritual motive force. Under these conditions, the Soviet Constitution will not serve the purpose of giving us a stable constitution suited to our traditions but a nearer approach towards the other continental and Irish Constitution may be made with a view to finding out a compromise between extreme political democracy and radical communism. Sir M. Visweswarayya's book on Planned Economy in India gives a very valuable guide. "The Indian plan must avoid Communistic tendencies". "Despite its many efforts, even Russian Communism has not been able to eschew capitalism altogether. In Communism, there is still inequality of earned income "each one to earn according to his ability". (2) There is private ownership of capital. (3) Inheritance is allowed. This was first abolished and then Exception Bill was passed allowing inheritance of personal property. (4) There is receipt of unearned incomes by individuals provided that the income of the rich is not too large a proportion of what is available for all.

The Japanese Constitution also speaks of freedom of person and liberty of the subject "within the limits of the law" and that measures may be necessary to be taken for the public benefit and should be provided by law.

The Constitution of the Polish Republic of 1921 in Chapter 5 talks of general duties and social rights and in Article 99 expressly reserves power for the state to determine what kind of property and within that limits, property can be in exclusive ownership of the state, on grounds of public utility and also the limits to be imposed on citizens. Land must not be a subject of unlimited alienation being one of the principal factors of the life of the Nation. The Laws shall prescribe the degree in which the state has the right of compulsory purchases of real property, and of controlling the transfer of such property in conformity with the principle that the agrarian structure of Polish Republic ought to be based on agricultural holdings capable of normal productivity and of being privately owned. Dwelling house is inviolable and labour is given special protection. This illustrates that agricultural holdings in India also should be of a reasonable size capable of normal productivity and privately owned. Land must be an economic unit capable of maintaining a family with absorbing interest and no use will be served by reducing the size of the holdings making them uneconomical and inefficient for management.

The Constitution of the Kingdom of Serbs, Croats and Slovenes in 1921 lays down provisions of fundamental rights and social and economic plans and gives the right for the states to intervene in economic relations between citizens in a spirit of justice and in order to avert social conflict. Agricultural insurance shall be regulated by special regulation. Insurance against unemployment, disease, old age, etc., are provided. Private property is guaranteed but it should not be injurious to the interests of the community. The scope, extent, and limits of private ownership can be regulated by Law. Expropriation is wholly for legitimate public utility and with fair compensation. Article 43 lays down that a maximum extent of landed property, and the cases in which a minimum holding of land may not be alienated, shall be determined by law. An economic council under Article 44 is constituted to determine and decide on economic and social legislation. The significance of this constitution to Indian agriculture is the provision for insurance of various types which can be secured by Parliament in implementing the Five-year plan and besides regulating the minimum extent of land to be cultivated by any individual or family and the scope for the establishment of an Economic Council in India to regulate the social and economic relations in their application to problems coming under Parts III and IV of the Indian Constitution.

Now that we have made a study of some of the outstanding Continental constitutions working out the principle of economic democracy either as a measure of social reform or as a measure of an economic revolution, each in its own way, it is our purpose to emphasise this aspect of the supreme importance given to fundamental rights of the individual, uniformly in all the constitutions. It cannot also but be remarked that except in Russia, in every other constitution, special provision has been provided for the acquisition of individual property on fair and adequate compensation. (Weaver 'Constitutional Law', page 553.) But it must also be remarked that none of these constitutions give the individual his true place either in the state the society or the nation. Dominance of the state over individual initiative to the extent of expropriating it for one reason or the other is the guiding theme of the continental constitutional philosophy. The Indian Constitution breathes an entirely different atmosphere where individual character can mould itself according to the spiritual traditions inherited by every Indian and at the same time realising the fraternity of man as the common bond of allegiance to the nation or nations as we shall see hereunder.

The conception of individual subordination to society, to the extent of annihilating individuality, and not merely individual liberty, has not been approved by political thought in England and America, and the present day tendency for public opinion in these states is crystallising towards defining individual rights on a mathematical formula of minimum rights and maximum rights either in Industry, Finance, Commerce or Agriculture. ('Province and Function of Law' by Stone, page 774.) The ideal of welfare state is making rapid extension in all these states and has also permeated the Indian Constitution. Great spiritual energy and social amelioration was released to the masses in India by the historic temple entry proclamation in Travancore initiated by the Maha Rajah of Travancore on the advice of Sir C. P. Ramaswami Ayyar, the then Diwan of Travancore, and which was followed by other states and provinces. The Labour and Trade Union movements were recognised and strengthened by the Indian National Congress. Prohibition was introduced in Madras on the initiative of Sri C. Rajagopalachari, Premier of Madras and his example was followed by other provinces and states, thus securing decency of living to the poor man, besides setting up a proper moral code to both the rich and the poor. The last war has demonstrated, that unless economic democracy is established in some form of social adjustment or compromise, though not based essentially on rights, the never ending class struggle will perpetuate international conflicts of the worst type, thereby increasing postwar problems of unemployment, inflation, poverty, sickness, etc.

Paul M. Sweezy writing on (Socialism) says, that socialism is any device or doctrine whose aim is to save individuals from any of the difficulties or hardship of the struggle for existence and the competition of life by the intervention of the state. In England, the principle of socialist democracy, or democratic socialism which will be the apter word, is coming to be recognised, and the Fabian Society has contributed much towards the growth of socialistic ideas consistent with democracy. The Encyclopædia of Britannica, 13th Edition, defines socialism as follows :— "According to James Borar, socialism is that theory which aims at securing by the action of central democratic authority, a better distribution, and in due subordination thereto, a better production of wealth than now prevails. State socialism in England is opposed to the theory of regimentation of the individual. Only selected industries are nationalised for appropriate reasons, e.g., the Railways, Coal, Iron, Electricity, Iron ore, etc. There are different types of social insurance and poor laws" (vide Conflicting Factors of Economic Development by Harol G. Moulton 1947).

Devy Thompson writing on this subject in his book 'On the Democratic Ideal' says, that the precise meaning of economic democracy is still a matter of profound dispute among democrats. A few laws stand out, but as yet they form no pattern. It involves permanently such distribution of wealth as will prevent the present extremes of poverty and wealth, the prevention of large scale unemployment, and provide security of work without exploitation of workers for the private fortunes of a few, but he says its observance in agriculture is still a matter of controversy in England and France, that is, whether the states should own land and control it. Leaders of political thought in England like G. K. Chesterton and Bertrand Russel advocate 'Distribution' of private property as a preserver of liberty and social justice and social security and personal dignity, which arises whenever a man owns a little bit of property and is himself an owner producer (see 'Principles of Reconstruction' by Bertrand Russel, page 137). Small capitalism, according to him, must exist and emulate by the side of socialism in order to preserve democracy.

The labour party in England in their manifesto declare that they are committed to a policy of liberalising the administration in order to have a socialised and economically just Government and they contemplated in the last resort expropriation of property for compensation. Sir Stafford Cripps in his book on 'Democracy up-to-date', page 108, says that "civilization is placed to-day with the necessity of devising forms of Government which will weld into one composite whole, the efficiency of totalitarian control and planning in the economic field with the cultural and political freedom that democracy alone can provide. To stress the unessential liberties, or to demand the continuance of privilege and the licence for a limited class in society in the circumstances of to-day, is to invite the rapid destruction of democracy". Mr. Cripps suggests that the House of Lords should be retained only for revisional legislation, and not as a check on the power of the commons in initiating social legislation. Essential liberties must be guaranteed, and unessentials should be curtailed in public interest. Liberty to hold opinions, liberty to influence opinions, liberty to register opinions and economic liberty are important. Unemployment must be made a state responsibility, and employment insurance and poor law must be strengthened. Unemployment benefits, national health insurance, compulsory education, etc., are to be provided by the State. Workmen's combines should be organised and regulated by proper safeguards. The significance of these statements are of absorbing interest, and of real practical value to conditions prevailing in India, and the proposals of the Planning Commission may as well adopt the suggestions mentioned by Cripps. The observations of Sir Alexander Macven in his book on 'Towards Freedom' are worth noting on the aspects of distribution of wealth, and the need to preserve spiritual and religious liberty.

The American Constitution, has by judicial interpretation by the Supreme Court, extended the sphere of individual rights especially of workmen and labourers so as to be adjusted to the social and economic environments of the people. (See the Constitution and social economic changes by Rottschäfer.) An enumeration under Article 10, that enumeration in the Constitution of certain fundamental rights shall not be construed to deny or disparage others retained by the people, is wide enough to embrace various rights to work, to proper wages, to be protected from disease, etc., which workmen can always agitate for (see 'Regulation of Public Utilities' by M. Clay). America, particularly United States, has raised the standard of living of its people by its high level of industrialisation and it may take centuries for other countries with depleted financial resources like India to achieve in the course of 25 or 50 years what America has achieved after 150 years of strenuous planning and execution. But even America to-day stands in danger of losing its hold on its people if it does not provide for adequate translation of the people's wishes into Governmental policies (see Browder 'Communism in the United States'). Besides, in the interests of international peace and security, American standard of judging individual liberty must have a slight shift towards the recognition of the needs of an international society suffering from economic want and poverty. "In fact it would be necessary to raise the standard of living of countries like India and China if the surplus productive capacity of the United States is to be absorbed. With a higher standard of living and an increased purchasing power, the vast millions of India and China would be the potential customers of the surplus production of American factories. It is in the collective security of all nations of the world that we must seek the economic security of highly industrialised countries like the United States. It is to be expected that in the post-war reconstruction of the world there would be a rational system of distribution and consumption, so that the world will not again see the distressing phenomenon of poverty in the midst of plenty" (Sir R. K. Shanmugham Chetty's speeches on India and America, page 49). There must be a compromise between pure individualism and rank communism, the two conflicting ideologies of to-day represented by America and Russia respectively. A compromise based on social justice which the Hon'ble Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru himself visualises in his autobiography (at page 594) is what is now called as democratic socialism or a just balance between capital and labour, between wealth and poverty, a balance which the early constitutions of the 20th century really aspired for, but which in the result was upset by the development of dictatorship based on one party rule. Thomas Wilson in "Modern Capitalism and Economic Progress" (pages 123-132) says "Democratic socialism does not demand expropriation but promises fair compensation. The private ownership and control of capital is one of the foundations of democracy. If the ownership is found to be too much concentrated, steps should be taken to mitigate the evil and encourage the growth of smaller properties. This may be done by taxation like death duties. Levelling down will help but there must be a building up from below and the latter is more important of the two methods".

Now it has been given to India to give the lead to the rest of the world by enacting the constitution of the sovereign Republican Democracy of India in 1947, based on justice, economic and social, wherein there shall be equality before the law for all its citizens, and equality of status and equality of opportunity for all to earn their livelihood. The Indian democracy is a synthesis of principles drawn from both political democracies like America, England, France, Australia, Canada, etc., as well as economic or social democracies like the early 20th century Germany and Poland and the latter Russian and Irish constitutions. The constitution of 1935 itself provided for certain fundamental rights under sections 298 and 299. It was Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru that took up the question of fundamental rights and safeguards on the lines of postwar Poland, Esthonia, Zeckoslovakia, Latvia and other states of Europe. The Simon Commission rejected that idea. The first Round Table Conference took up the question of minorities. The Viceroy's consultative committee in 1932 considered a long list of fundamental rights. The whole matter was taken up in the 3rd Round Table Conference. Mahatma Gandhi declared in one of his speeches in the Round Table Conference in London in 1931 that the interest of the dumb millions alone was the supreme motive power of the Congress, and that the Congress will sacrifice every interest for the sake of the interest of these dumb millions. The Joint Select Committee on the Indian Constitution discarded the idea of implementing 'Fundamental Rights'. They agreed with Sir John Simon in discarding it that the most effective method of ensuring the destruction of fundamental rights was, according to them, to include a declaration of its existence in a constitutional document. They were not ready either to amend the preamble to the constitution of 1919 wherein responsible government is to be achieved only by stages. The 3rd Round Table Conference went into the question and finally only a few rights were incorporated into the scheme of the Act. The English Magna Carta, the Petition of Right, the American Bill of Rights, etc., influenced the growth of fundamental rights in England and India (Refer International Law and Human Rights, page 127 by Laoderpatch). The problem of economic democracy was recognised in India by the Karachi Congress as a supreme necessity, and as a measure of social advance.

Now it was at the same time that the United Nations Organisation in 1947 constituted the Human Rights Commission for preparing a universal declaration of human rights, and these rights were passed unanimously by the General Assembly of the United Nations in December 1948 in Paris. The Charter of the United Nations and the articles of the International Labour Organisation, Philadelphia, reassured social rights and socialism of material resources to all nations.

The Indian Constitution has recognised the sanctity and validity of these recommendations and in Chapter IV of the Constitution styled as 'Directive Principles of State Policy' has enumerated several principles with a view to effect democratic socialism in the Indian Constitution, by virtue of social and economic advancement of the masses and particularly in Article 51, the Constitution empowers State Legislatures to pass laws for the promotion of international peace and security.

Part III defines and guarantees protection of individual liberty restricted in its operation by public interest. Part IV defines and guarantees in an indirect way the same liberties to the individual considered as a part of the society or the community, and by implication enables State Legislatures to pass measures of social and economic reform without prejudice to the rights mentioned in Part III. Part IV is really the impact of socialistic forces on Part III which is political democracy. The result of their conjoint constitutional effect as a result of progressive interpretation by the judiciary will in due course establish democratic socialism in India. That Part IV is subservient to Part III is laid down by the Supreme Court Judgment in State of Madras v. Champakam Durairajan, (1951) 1 M.L.J. 621, but at the same time it is a matter of profound satisfaction that the judgment of the Supreme Court in 1952 S.C.R. 839, Behar Zamindari Case contains observations that goes to show that law after all is an instrument of social progress. Vide (Sir Alladi Krishnaswami Aiyar's speech in the Andhra University): "The flexibility and capacity for growth and adaptation is the peculiar boast and excellence of the common law". Vide observations of Justice Mathews of American Supreme Court in Huntado v. California, (1884) 110 U.S. 576, Re, Due Process Clause, of the Fourteenth Amendment. The recent judgment in the Supreme Court, Delhi, reported in The Hindu, on 22nd February, called the 'Bihar Sathi Lands Restoration Act Appeal' lays down the fundamental right of the citizen to have equality before the law, a principle well recognised in all progressive forms of government. Following upon the abolition of feudal systems of land-revenue like zamindari and jagirdari, what is to be the next step in Indian land policy?

Besides the observations made by me in regard to the applicability of principles of continental constitutions to the Indian problem, I might also suggest that an Economic Development Council financed by an Agricultural Finance Corporation in India is really necessary as a further step in the direction of solving social and economic reform schemes. The Council may be a Parliamentary Committee composed of all the members of the parties who might initiate legislations if their scheme is finally approved by the Supreme Court, on a reference for opinion by the President under Art. 143 of the Constitution as being consistent with fundamental rights of the citizen in a progressive society, and such legislation may be passed in Parliament as a reasonable restriction of fundamental rights. Refer Sir M. Visveswarayya's work on 'Planned Economy of India'.

There is large scope for development and practice of social and economic development in India under the leadership of eminent statesmen like the Hon'ble Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru, Prime Minister of India, and the recent report of the Planning Commission has made a sincere attempt to solve the economic problems of the country under the Five-Year Plan. It is also gratifying to note that the plan is capable of modifications to suit growing needs, and suitable amendments may be made for the purpose of doing economic justice. The caution given by Mr. Attlee, Prime Minister of the former Labour Ministry in England, that in India with a majority of poverty-stricken people, democratic socialism may fall, and end in communism, should be remembered and sufficient safeguards should be imposed in introducing economic reforms in order to prevent this fall. A few details of the plan in my opinion as already expressed, may be modified to suit, the personal and property law of the Hindu community, and certain suggestions which advise caution in immediate implementation of them, have alone to be considered, but what strikes me most, and to which frank expression must be given, is the magnitude of the great step towards social and economic progress in India on the goal towards the realisation of democratic socialism which has been made by the strenuous work in drawing up the five-year plan, which promises to increase national income and per capita income in India doublefold, in the course of 25 years. Two things stand out for special mention, in the interests of the stability, through rigidity of the constitution, one is, the recognition of middle class standard of living as one to be guaranteed by the constitution as in the continental constitutions, and secondly, the need to stress on adequate rents and adequate compensation for expropriation of property, whether purchased by Government directly or by the tenant by legal provision. "Basis of valuation must be fair valuation of property used for convenience of public, and there must be establishment of an irreducible minimum beyond which legislators and committees must not go in the exercise of their discretion to fix fair and reasonable rates", vide *Smyth v. Ames*¹. The process of industrialisation of the country will naturally raise the level of the lower classes to the middle class. An equal distribution of land may not be possible either considering shortage of landed wealth in proportion to population or efficiency of an economic holding of all absorbing interest, a fact which has been well recognised by the Planning Commission in its recent report. But lands of the upper denomination may be acquired on compensation in order to distribute them to really needy poor and unemployed landless people. Radhakamal Mukerjee in his work on 'Economic Problem of Modern India', page 240, suggests example of Denmark for copying the principle of land purchase by tenants. See also 'The Northern Countries in the World Economy' published by the Delegates in 1933.

Millions of acres of virgin land have already yielded to the plough, bringing large produce, on being supplied with water from the newly constructed irrigation schemes and the schemes now proposed to be financed under the Five-year plan, will open out further possibilities of fresh lands being brought under cultivation thus, solving the acute food problem in the country permanently.

The world socialist Conference has been organised as an effective weapon for combating communism, and surely India will give the lead to the rest of the world in proclaiming its gospels of non-violence and by implementing its constitutional provisions in a progressive way, in order to take in judicial precedents, customs, conventions, etc., which will conduce to social progress in the Indian Society. Well may we hope that India will declare by the constitutional guarantees to the Indian Society and to the world, that its constitution has been adopted to suit progressive ideas whereby every individual, whether rich or poor, master or servant, capitalist or labourer, will be treated as a 'Partner in a joint enterprise', where society will not treat him as a mere instrument to its ends, but as a living organism shaping and co-operating in the working of the machinery of Government. This is the key note of the preamble 'Fraternity assuring the dignity of the individual and the unity of the nation' and may we add, the unity of the nations too.

The Hindu Ideal of Dharma is comprised in the following words :

“ मातृवत् परदारेषु परद्रव्येषु लोष्टवत् ।

आत्मवत्सर्वभूतेषु यः पश्यति स पण्डितः ॥

i.e., Look upon other's wife as your mother.

Look upon other's property as a piece of stone (i.e., don't claim it as of right),

Look upon others (all the rest of the world), their interests as your own (i.e., duty to render help to others in suffering).

He who follows this precept, is the really learned man ! In other words, it is the Hindu fundamental obligation to relieve the poor, and make necessary sacrifices for the same. May we hope that the great saint like Acharya Vinova Bhava, in canvassing for gifts of land, to be in turn gifted to landless unemployed labourers, be not only successful by getting proper response from rich landlords, but that many other charitable institutions may be built for the purpose of succouring the helpless, and hunger-stricken peasants, workers, and labourers in India !

"HIGH COURT FOR THE ANDHRA STATE."

By

S. VAIDYANATHAN, B.A., B.L., Advocate, Supreme Court of India and High Court, Madras.

On the establishment of the Andhra State by Act of Parliament under Article 3, Schedule I of the Constitution will be amended by adding 'Andhra' to Part A of the said Schedule. The question arises, what is the position of the Madras High Court, vis a vis, the newly established Andhra State? Under Article 214, which lays down that there shall be a High Court for each State ('State' here means a Part A State — vide Article 152), the Madras High Court will continue to be the High Court for the residuary State of Madras. As regards Andhra, two views are possible. One view is that immediately on the establishment of the Andhra State as a Part A State the jurisdiction of the Madras High Court is automatically excluded over the territory of the new State, and a separate High Court for the Andhra State will have to be established by supplemental and consequential Parliamentary legislation as provided by Article 4 and such legislation should be brought into operation simultaneously with the Act creating the new State under Article 3. If for some reason it is found neither feasible nor expedient to adopt this course, the alternative is for Parliament to make a law under clause (a) of Article 230 read with item No. 79 of List I of Schedule VII extending the jurisdiction of the High Court of Madras to the Andhra State. If neither of these courses is adopted, there will be violation of the mandatory provisions of Article 214.

According to the other view, the existing Madras High Court will be the High Court for the Andhra State also right from its birth as a Part A State, as the mere creation of the new State does not by itself without express Parliamentary legislation in that behalf, operate to exclude the jurisdiction of the High Court of Madras over the Andhra State (see also Article 225). In this view no legislation under clause (a) of Article 230 is required to confer on the Madras High Court "an extended jurisdiction" over the Andhra State. If, however, it is intended to have a separate High Court for Andhra with its principal seat in the new State itself, it is not only necessary according to this view to establish by legislation a High Court for Andhra within that State, but it is also necessary for Parliament to make a law under clause (b) of Article 230 read with item 79 of List I of Schedule VII, excluding the jurisdiction of the Madras High Court over the Andhra State.

It is submitted that having regard to the spirit and scheme of the Constitution, the first of the two views discussed above appears to be the sounder one.

SUMMARY OF ENGLISH CASES.

MANWARING v. BILLINGTON, (1952) 2 All E.R. 747 (C.A.).

Factories Act—Statutory duty of employer—If could be delegated—Delegation—What amounts to—Disobedience of express instructions of employer—Injury to workman—Liability of employer.

There is a very great distinction between the instructions by an employer to a workman as to how a particular task is to be performed and the delegation of a statutory duty imposed on the employer. To be a delegation of a statutory duty it must be made clear that it is a statutory duty that is being delegated and that what is being said is not mere instruction common to all workmen as to how the workmen should carry out the work.

An employer could not be expected personally to fix every ladder used by his men during painting operations, nor personally to supervise every operation, in the course of which the use of ladders was necessary. If he gave clear and adequate directions as to lashing and securing the ladders, he was doing what a reasonable employer was entitled to do.

WHITELEY v. WILSON, (1952) 2 All E.R. 940 (C.A.).

Rent Restriction Act, 1939—Premises—Dwelling house or shop—How determined.

Whether a structure is a dwelling house, or is an office, or constitutes other business premises, is a question of fact in the particular case to be determined on the evidence and that in marginal cases the Court may properly consider whether the business use or the business occupation does not so far predominate as to exclude from material significance the fact that there may be some part of the premises which can be said to be used for residential purposes.

The question in cases where the subject-matter of the tenancy is one building used partly as a dwelling house and partly as a shop, and no purpose is specified in the tenancy agreement, is whether the building should in a broad sense be regarded on the one hand, as a dwelling house which is partly or even substantially used as a shop, or, on the other hand, as a shop which is used in part for residential purposes.

BARTHOLOMEW v. BARTHOLOMEW, (1952) 2 All E.R. 1035 (C.A.).

Divorce—Husband and wife—Desertion—Constructive desertion—What is—When a ground of divorce.

To establish a right to a decree for divorce on the ground of constructive desertion it is necessary, it has been said time and again, to prove an actual intention to bring the matrimonial consortium to an end. Although the intention can be inferred from the circumstances, no such inference can be drawn unless the conduct relied on is of a grave and convincing character, equivalent to driving the other spouse away.

The fact that a wife is lazy and is dirty is not of necessity something which shows she is determined to get rid of her husband. She may be dirty because she is lazy or lacks energy.

BOOK REVIEWS.

INTERNATIONAL MILITARY TRIBUNAL FOR THE FAR EAST, published by Sanyal & Company, 1-1A, College Square (East), Calcutta 12. Price Rs. 40.

• This book is a verbatim reprint of the dissenting opinion of Justice R. B. Pal of India who was one of the Members of the Bench that was constituted to try the Japanese War Crimes after the World War II. It is not the province of a reviewer to go into the merits of the opinions expressed by the learned Judge or the Majority of the Board. Suffice to say the judgment now placed before the public in book form is a masterpiece of logic and constitutes an interesting and useful reading.

After the end of the World War II the victorious Allied Powers constituted a International Military Tribunal for the Far East for the trial of Japanese leaders who were charged with crimes against peace and humanity. The entire set-up, procedure, evidence, etc., during the trial appears to have gone very much against the trained judicial mind of the learned Judge. The learned Judge in his dissenting judgment in the United States of America and other Allied Powers v. Arakisadao and others, has held that every one of the accused must be found not guilty of the charges and should be acquitted. According to the learned Judge the entire trial was gone through by the victorious Nations to attain a political end under cover of judicial appearance.

The book makes an excellent reading and for its exposition of the first principles of law and procedure in a new field, it stands unequalled. Students of International Law of War and Peace will find the book very useful.

The book is well got up and the printing and binding and the quality of paper is excellent, quite in keeping with the subject it deals with, which is of lasting interest. A number of interesting photographic Art plates adds to the reading value of the book.

OUTLINES OF INDIAN LEGAL HISTORY by M. P. Jain, LL.M., Lecturer, Faculty of Law, University of Delhi. Price Rs. 12. Dhanwantri Medical and Law Book House, 152, Elgin Road, Delhi, 6.

• This history of any system of Jurisprudence is not without its attraction to the practising lawyer. However, its real utilitarian importance is only for the students. This book is obviously intended to meet the requirements of the students of the LL.B. and LL.M. classes of the Delhi University. Barrington Cowell's 'History of Courts and Legislative Authorities in India' there is no book on the subject which the students could use. The author of this book is well equipped for the task he has achieved as he has been closely associated with the teaching of the subject in the University. The book will be found useful by students in other Universities too where the course of study comprises the subject of "Legal History."

The author has taken considerable pains in collecting a great volume of matter covering a large period and presenting it in a short compass with a precision and analysis that makes the book readable and useful. The later chapters relating to recent developments in the administration of justice are very instructive.

DIGEST OF DECISIONS OF THE LABOUR APPELLATE TRIBUNAL OF INDIA compiled by N. K. Khare and N. N. Akruwala with a Foreword by Sri K. P. Lakshmana Rao, President, Bombay Bench, Labour Appellate Tribunal. Price Rs. 10, Published by Indian Legal Publications, Ahmedabad.

A book of 115 pages has over 30 pages allotted for its Index and Table of Cases. The digesting of cases could have been more analytical and exhaustive. As it is, the reader is likely to get mixed in the Statute-heading and subject-heading. The subject-heading should be in bold types and the catchwords in italics to facilitate easy reference. Being first of its attempt in a new sphere of case digesting there is considerable scope for improvement. As a book of reference to those interested in labour problems the digest will be of great help. Though the decisions of these Tribunals are not precedents in the strict sense known to lawyers and jurists, still much of the law gets clarified in these decisions and their growing importance cannot be overlooked. A Digest of these decisions is a welcome effort and will receive much support from the public for whom they are intended.

THE EMPLOYEES' STATE INSURANCE ACT (XXXIV OF 1948) (LABOUR CODE, Vol. IV) Edited by N. M. Shah, LL.B., Pleader, 1953. Price Rs. 7-8-0. Published by Chandrakant Chimanlal Vora, Law Publishers, Ahmedabad.

This small book with its bold printing, heavy binding and gold letters has unnecessarily increased its price. It reproduces the text of the Employees' State Insurance Act with the Central Rules and Regulations including the recent Provident Fund Regulations. Some State Rules of Bombay and Uttar Pradesh are also added. This little book purports to be the fourth volume of a Labour Code, three volumes of which have already been published and two more are in the press. More volumes are in the scheme of publication. Obviously, each Act relating to Labour Legislation is sought to be published as one volume. If that is so the need is all the greater to bring out the volumes at a lower price so that the entire Code will be within the reach of all. At the rates till now announced, the cost of the whole code when complete will be prohibitive.

NOTES OF INDIAN CASES.

SATYAVATHI v. STATE OF MADRAS, (1952) 1 M.L.J. 41.

Article 31 of the Constitution of India provides that no person shall be deprived of his property save by authority of law and that no property, movable or immovable, shall be taken possession of or acquired for public purposes without payment of compensation. Whether the acquisition of land for providing house-sites for Harijans would be a "public purpose" within the meaning of Article 31 had to be considered in the above case. The fifth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States includes a provision: "Nor shall private property be taken for public use, without just compensation." Likewise, Article 29 of the Japanese Constitution, 1946, says: "Private property may be taken for public use upon just compensation therefor." In India itself section 299 of the Government of India Act, 1935, had provided: "Neither the Federal nor a Provincial Legislature shall have power to make any law authorising the compulsory acquisition for public purposes of any land unless the law provides for the payment of compensation for the property acquired." There is no definition, however, of 'public purpose' in any of our legislative enactments to afford us a clue to the meaning of the term, save one in the Land Acquisition Act, which is only a partially inclusive and not an exhaustive definition. Section 3 (f) of that Act provides that the expression "public purpose" includes the provision of village sites in districts in which the Provincial Government shall have declared by notification in the Official Gazette that it is customary for the Government to make such provision, and section 40 (1) (b) would seem to equate a 'public purpose' with 'some work likely to prove useful to the public'. It is true that general definitions are to be avoided where the avoidance is possible, *Hamabhai Framjee v. Secretary of State for India*¹. What should be the test of a 'public purpose' will, however, have to be indicated. It is here that the decisions of the Supreme Court of America construing the term 'public use' in the American Constitution become valuable. The power to take private property for public uses is generally called the 'right of eminent domain' and belongs to every independent Government as an incident of sovereignty and requires no constitutional recognition, *United States v. Jones*². [The doctrine is an offspring of political necessity, and is based upon an implied reservation by Government that private property acquired by its citizens under its protection may be taken or its use controlled for public benefit irrespective of the wishes of the owner]. 'Public use' includes the appropriation of lands or other property by the State for its own uses in order to enable it to perform its proper functions, *Kohl v. United States*³, Cherokee Nation v. Southern Kansas Railway Co.,⁴. It will not include the taking by a State of the private property of one person without the owner's consent for the private use of another for that will not be due process of law and will be a violation of the 14th Article of Amendment of the Constitution of the United States, *Missouri Pacific Railway Co., v. Nebraska, ex. rel. Board of Transportation*¹. What is a 'public use' frequently and largely depends on the facts and circumstances surrounding the particular subject-matter in regard to which the character of the use is questioned and it is not essential that the entire community, or even any considerable portion thereof, should directly enjoy or participate in an improvement in order to constitute a public use. In that view it was held that to irrigate lands and bring into possible cultivation large masses of otherwise worthless lands would seem to be a public purpose and a matter of public interest not confined to the landowners or even to any one section of the State, *Fallbrook Irrigation District v. Bradley*². So also lands taken in a city for public park or square, whether advantageous to the public for recreation, help or business can be deemed to be for a public purpose, *Shoemaker v. United States*³. Even the acquisition of land to provide water for one individual from a stream in which he has an interest, to irrigate his land which otherwise would remain absolutely valueless, will be deemed in certain circumstances to be for 'public use.' In *Clark v. Nash*⁴, Peckham, J., observed: "This Court has stated that what is a public use may frequently and largely depend upon the facts surrounding the object It is true that in the *Fallbrook case*², the question was whether the use of the water was a public use when a corporation sought to take land by condemnation under a state statute, for the purpose of making reservoirs and digging ditches to supply landowners with the water the company proposed to obtain and save for such purpose. This Court held that such use was public. The case did not directly involve the right of a single individual to condemn land under a statute providing for that condemnation. We are, however, disposed to agree with the Utah Court with regard to the validity of the state statute which provides under the circumstances stated in the act for the condemnation of the land of one individual for the purpose of allowing another individual to obtain water from a stream in which he has an interest to irrigate his land which otherwise would remain absolutely valueless." It would thus seem that the range of 'public use' which is very elastic, and must depend on the circumstances of each case, will include taking of land for performance of functions of state and it is not necessary that the entire community or even any considerable portion of it should directly enjoy or participate in any improvement. Even benefit immediately to one individual may be 'public use' in special circumstances. In *Moses v. Marland*⁵, it was held by Bruce J., that a place used for a public purpose means not a place used in the public interest but a place to which the public can demand admission or to which they are invited to come. But that was with reference to the words "any other public purpose" used in the London Building Act, 1894, and cannot help in the context of the Indian Constitution. In Hamabhai Framjee v. Secretary of State for India,⁶ there was a resumption of inam lands by Government for building residences for its officers to be let to them on rent. On a question whether the acquisition was one for a public purpose, Batchelor, J., observed: "It is enough to say that, in my opinion, whatever else it may mean (it) must include a 'purpose,' that is an object or aim in which the general interest of the community, as opposed to the particular interest of individuals is directly and vitally concerned." In affirming the conclusions of the High Court, the Judicial Committee, on appeal said inter alia: "The argument of the appellants is really rested upon the view that there cannot be a public purpose in taking land if that land when taken is not in some way or other made available to the public at large. Their Lordships do not agree with this view." Part XVI of the Constitution contains special provisions for safeguarding and promoting the rights of Scheduled Castes and Tribes. In the Fifth Part of the Schedule to the Constitution (Scheduled Castes) Order, 1950, made by the President in the exercise of the powers conferred by clause (1) of Article 341 of the Constitution of India, the Adi-Andhras are included in the list of Scheduled Castes. The advancement and development of the interests of that community are thus an object of special concern by Government as forming part of the policy underlying the Constitution. Acquisition of land for providing residential sites for members of Adi-Andhra community would be as much a public purpose as the acquisition of land for providing residences for Government servants was held to be in *Hamabhai Framjee's case*¹. The decision in the instant case that such acquisition is not opposed to Article 32 of the Constitution is thus in accord with authority.

THAMSI GOUNDAN v. KANNI AMMAL, (1952) 1 M.L.J. 68.

The question raised in this case was whether section 488, Criminal Procedure Code, is repugnant to Article 14 of the Constitution by reason of its provision for the award of maintenance to wives deserted by their husbands while there is no similar provision in favour of husbands deserted by their wives. Article 14 of the Constitution provides: "The State shall not deny to any person equality before the law or the equal protection of the laws within the territory of India." The phrase "equality before the law" has been explained by Professor Jennings to mean that "among equals the law should be equal and should be equally administered, that like should be treated alike."² Section 40 (1) of the Constitution of Eire expressly declares that equality before the law "shall not be held to mean that the State shall not in its enactments have due regard to differences of capacity, physical or moral, and of social function." Article 14 corresponds to the 'equal protection clause' of the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States of America which declares that "no state shall deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws." The range and sweep of the phrase "equal protection of the laws" are vividly set forth by Professor Willis who observed: "It forbids class legislation but does not forbid classification which rests upon reasonable grounds of distinction. It does not prohibit legislation, which is limited either in the objects to which it is directed or by the territory within which it is to operate. It merely requires that all persons subjected to such legislation shall be treated alike under like circumstances and conditions both in the privileges conferred and the liabilities imposed. The inhibition of the amendment was designed to prevent any person or class of persons from being singled out as a special subject for discriminating and hostile legislation. It does not take from the states the power to classify but permits to them the exercise of a wide scope of discretion, and nullifies what they do only when it is without any reasonable basis. Mathematical nicety and perfect equality are not required. Similarity, not identity of treatment, is enough. If any state of facts can reasonably be conceived to sustain a classification, the existence of that state of facts must be assumed. One who assails a classification must carry the burden of showing that it does not rest upon any reasonable basis."³ In *Yick Wo v. Hopkins*⁴, it was pointed out that equal protection of laws is a pledge of the protection of equal laws. It was stated in *Southern Railway Company v. Greene*⁵, that this means subjection to equal laws applying alike to all in the same situation. In view of the foregoing, while recognising that Article 14 of the Constitution provides one of the most valuable and important guarantees in the Constitution which should not be allowed to be whittled down, it was at the same time recognised that there can be classification which should, however, never be arbitrary but must always rest upon some real and substantial distinction bearing a reasonable and just relation to the things in respect to which the classification is made, see *Charanjit Lal Chowdhury v. The Union of India*⁵, Om

*Parkash v. The State*¹, *Sheoshankar v. The State of Madhya Pradesh*², *Asiatic Engineering Company v. Achhuram*³, *S. B. Trading Company v. Shyamal Ramchandra*⁴. It has been held that a classification is reasonable if it rests on differences pertinent to the subject in respect of which such classification is made, *Power Manufacturing Company v. Saunders*⁵. It cannot be disputed that women as a class are weaker than men. It is familiar knowledge that women still labour under legal disabilities and discrimination in the domain of property law and in other directions. It is also one of the policies underlying the Constitution to afford special protection for women. The third clause in Article 15 declares that the State shall always be competent to make special provision for women and children. It is thus clear that both on principle and on authority the provision in section 488, Criminal Procedure Code, for the award of maintenance to wives abandoned or deserted by their husbands does not in any way contravene Article 14 of the Constitution.

ARAVAMUDHA IYENGAR v. RAMASWAMI BHATTAR, (1952) 1 M.L.J. 251.

In so far as this decision holds that a person, male or female, who has not attained the age of majority in Hindu Law, i.e., 16 years cannot validly adopt, it is no mere copybook decision but one laying down a definite test in place of one dependent on the facts of each case, namely, the attainment of the age of discretion by the adopter. Certain dicta in the judgment, relating to the limits of a widow's capacity to adopt, call for critical examination. In reviewing the principles laid down by the Judicial Committee in *Amarendra v. Sanatan Singh*⁶, and their effect on what had been stated in *Madana Mohan Deo v. Purushothama Deo*⁷, after stating—"The full legal capacity to continue the line means continuance of the line in one of two ways, i.e., either by leaving a natural or adopted son, or a widow capable of bringing into existence a son by adoption. The test is to find out whether these conditions existed at the time of the son's death." Satyanarayana Rao, J., went on to add: "If they did not exist, the power did not terminate. If they existed the power came to an end and in certain circumstances, e.g., if the son's widow dies without making an adoption, the mother's power may be revived. If the object of adoption is the religious one of perpetuating the line with a view to make a permanent arrangement for the administration of the spiritual wants of the deceased, the object is not achieved when the continuance of the line came to a standstill. There must be some power somewhere to continue the line, and, if the person lower down dies without providing for the continuance of the line, the power of the person higher up revives and continues" (italics ours). The theory of the revival of the power of the person higher up when the continuance of the line comes to a standstill postulated in the remarks italicised above does not receive any countenance from and in fact runs against the observations of the Privy Council in *Amarendra's case*⁶. The limiting principle formulated by Chandavarkar, J., in *Ramakrishna v. Shama Rao*⁸, was: "Where a Hindu dies leaving a widow and a son, and that son dies leaving a natural born or adopted son or leaving no son but his own widow to continue the line by means of adoption, the power of the former widow is extinguished and can never afterwards be revived." The last part of the observation expressly states that the power perishes and repudiates categorically the theory of the revival of the power under any circumstances whatsoever. The principle so stated by Chandavarkar, J., was in terms approved by the Privy Council in *Madana Mohana Deo's case*⁷. There Lord Haldane observed: "Their Lordships are in agreement with the principle laid down in the judgment of the Full Court of Bombay as delivered by the learned Judge, and they are of opinion, on the facts of the present case, the principle must be taken as applying so as to have brought the authority to adopt conferred on Adi-konda's widow to an end when Brojo, the son she originally adopted, died after attaining full legal capacity to continue the line either by the birth of a natural born son or by adoption to him of a son by his own widow." It is noteworthy that the power of Adikonda's widow is spoken of as having come to an 'end.' In *Amarendra's case*¹, itself, explaining the phrase "full legal capacity" used by Lord Haldane in his judgment in the earlier case, Sir George Lowndes said: "Their Lordships think that the words 'full legal capacity' cannot be dissociated from the rest of the passage cited, and that they cannot be taken as indicating a particular moment in the son's life when the mother's power is extinguished. The qualification that follows then shows that the continuance referred to is a continuance in one of two defined ways, either by the birth of a natural son or by the adoption of a son to him by his own widow and the test is to be whether these conditions existed at the time of the son's death. The passage under consideration is . . . clearly intended to be a restatement in a more critical form of the conclusion to which the Bombay High Court had come and which was affirmed in the same sentence only a few lines before, viz., that the power of adoption would be extinguished on the son's death by the survival of either a grandson or the son's widow." Be it noted that the Privy Council once again talks of the power being "extinguished" and once again emphasises that the critical time is the time of the son's death with reference to which only and not with reference to subsequent events the existence of the power falls to be determined. The only reservation made was thus stated: "Whether in order to bring this principle into play the son's widow should herself be clothed with the power of adoption is left open and it is not necessary for their Lordships to consider this in the present case as Bibhudendra died unmarried." On these authorities, it is clear that where at the time of son's death there was a son's widow who could at some time have adopted, the power of the mother comes to an end and is extinguished beyond the possibility of revival. Whether the son's widow subsequently fails to adopt or refuses to adopt or dies without adopting or remarries are events which cannot be relevant to the purpose. For, as recognised by the learned Judge himself in the instant case, the material point of time is the time of the son's death. In *Ramchandra v. Muralidhar*² one R died leaving a widow G and a son S. Sometime later the son died leaving a widow aged about 11 or 12 years. The latter could not have adopted on her husband's death as she had not then attained her years of discretion. Nevertheless it was held that adoption by G will be void. The learned Judges took the view that since at the time of the son's death there was his widow who can adopt to him at some time though not immediately the power of R's widow had been totally extinguished. In *Chanbasappa v. Madivalappa*³, a person had died leaving his wife and an adopted son. Subsequently the latter died leaving two daughters but no widow. It was held that, in the circumstances, the power of the adoptive mother of the deceased to adopt again remained unaffected. In Nagpur, the theory of revival has found countenance in cases where the daughter-in-law remarried and thereafter the mother-in-law adopted to her husband, *Bapuji Ramji v. Gargaram Madhorao*⁴, *Govinda v. Shenpad*⁵. In the first of these cases, Stone, C.J., observed: "The real difficulty lies in the question: Does the power revive if the son's widow dies or otherwise becomes incapable of adopting before she (i.e., the son's widow) adopts? We fully bear in mind the warning given by the Judicial Committee in *Raghunadha v. Brojo Kishore*⁶, that it is the duty of the Court to keep the power (to adopt) strictly within the limits which the law has assigned to it. We contrast this with the warning given in *Amarendra v. Sanatan Singh*¹: "great caution should be observed in shutting the door upon any authorised adoption by the widow of a sonless man." The difficulty is to find the boundary line. In *Vijaisinghi v. Shivasangji*⁷ the Judicial Committee observe: "In the present case the natural son B with his wife D having ceased to exist for the purpose of continuing the line in the Ahima family, his mother C was entitled to make an adoption to secure that object." "It is, of course, true that D there never became a widow and so never attracted the idea that once a widow the grandwidow's power is for ever gone. Can we, however, have a rule which says that if B and D die together C's power which was suspended while either of them lived (was interposed), revives, but if B dies on Monday and D on Tuesday (a thing which frequently happens in time of plague) C's power, which was ended by D's becoming a widow for a day does not revive? The Hindu Law has anomalies but this anomaly would be founded entirely on Judge-made difficulties."¹ The Court held that the grand-widow's power of adoption stood revived if the son's widow contracted a remarriage without having adopted to her deceased husband. The Nagpur view was considered by the Bombay High Court in *Shamrao v. Bhimrao*² and Chagla, C.J., observed: "In order to determine whether a widow has the power to adopt or not on the death of her son the test that has got to be applied is, has that son left a grandson or has that son left a widow. If either of the contingencies is present, then the widow has no longer the power to adopt." Excepting thus for the support afforded by the Nagpur decisions there is practically no warrant for the theory of revival of a widow's power of adoption and in fact the theory is opposed to the law as set out by the Judicial Committee in *Amarendra's case*³.

PERAMANAYAKAM PILLAI v. SIVARAMAN, (1952) 1 M.L.J. 308 (F.B.).

This is a Full Bench decision of importance concerning the rights of a purchaser from a member of a Mitakshara coparcenary. The decisions on the matter reveal different pulls. In legal theory, the alienee steps into the shoes of the alienor and takes the interest conveyed subject to the same limitations and conditions as the alienor. Except through and in the right of the alienor he cannot have any claims against the joint family. The working out of the alienee's equity has, however, caused not a little embarrassment in the logic of the law which had to be gathered from a bewildering array of decisions not all of them harmonious or easy to harmonise. This aspect of the matter was vividly put by the Judges in the instant case. Viswanatha Sastry, J., observed: "the touching refrain of the respondent's argument was 'overrule me if you please, but at least say something logical and consistent with the Mitakshara doctrine'," and replied: "Bluntly, I say, it is not possible to find a logical solution of an illogical problem." The learned Judge recalled the observations of Farran, C.J., in *Gurlingappa v. Nandappa*⁴—"The position of the purchaser of the interests of a Hindu coparcener in part or the whole of a joint estate is very anomalous. It is impossible to work out his rights on an exact logical basis"—and the references by Lord Dunedin in *Brij Narain v. Mangal Prasad*⁵ to the Hindu joint family law as "illogical" and "anomalous." Raghava Rao, J., felt: "True it is that consistency on abstract grounds of logic cannot always prevail in the realm of judge-made law. It may also be that as said by Lord Halsbury once, law is not a logical science. But if the dictum of the learned law lord cannot as appears from *Rangaswami Goundan v. Nachiappa Goundan*⁶ avail as a source of consolation for presuming an illogical extension of principle in interpreting the existing case-law on a subject, it can hardly be doubted or disputed that only logical applications and extensions should stand encouraged and all illogical applications and extensions of legal principles should be discouraged."

A Full Bench decision of four Judges had held in *Rangaswami v. Krishnien*⁷ that the share to be awarded to an alienee from a coparcener should be fixed with reference to the coparcenary at the time of the partition. But a Full Bench decision, again of four Judges, had later on in *Chinnu Pillai v. Kalimuthu Chetty*⁸, declared that the share was to be computed as on the date of the alienation. In *Muthukumara Sthapathiar v. Sivanarayana*¹, Jackson, J., sitting with Mockett, J., sought to effect a reconciliation between the Mitakshara doctrine of absolute refusal of recognition of alienation of joint family property by a coparcener and the rule of equity recognising the right of a purchaser for value, by holding that the fractional share of an alienee from a coparcener stood fixed as on the date of the alienation but there was no hotchpot hooked to it, and that the properties in which the alienee was entitled to share were those existing at the time of the partition. But in *Dharma Rao v. Bapanayya*², it was ruled that the view in *Chinnu Pillai's case*³, had become settled law and no question of reconciling it with the earlier Full Bench ruling could arise at all. It was felt by both Viswanatha Sastri and Raghava Rao, JJ., in the instant case, that that decision had not done justice to the nature of the issue involved. But while Viswanatha Sastri, J., would regard the authority of the decision of the Full Bench in *Chinnu Pillai's case*³ as settled and the matter one of stare decisis though if the matter was res integra his inclination would be to take views which may be considered "heretical," Raghava Rao, J., was emphatic that there was really no question of stare decisis. While Viswanatha Sastri, J., remarked: "The respondent's advocate hopes that the ghost of *Rangaswami v. Krishnien*⁴, which was buried 40 years ago may walk again, nay, he anticipates a flesh and blood resurrection. All that I say is that such miracles, if they happen, will reduce transactions affecting property to a mere gamble"—Raghava Rao, J., hoped that the conflict between the two Full Bench rulings is one which ought to be resolved in a proper manner in a case in which the question on which the conflict exists actually arises for determination in future, the terms of the reference to the Full Bench in the instant case not warranting the consideration of the question. Be that as it may, it falls to be noted that three learned Judges have taken the view that the decision in *Chinnu Pillai's case*³, has become a matter of stare decisis and is no longer open to further consideration.

Another point which the instant case had to consider was whether in a coparcener's suit for recovery of his share in property alienated by another coparcener impugning the validity of the alienation, if it is found that a portion of the consideration had been applied for binding purposes, he can recover his share without paying his quota of the common burden as a condition precedent. In *Vadivelam v. Natesam*⁵, the principle to be applied was formulated as follows: "According to accepted equitable principles, in the absence of anything appearing to the contrary, the consideration for the sale must be distributed over the whole of the property sold in proportion to the value of each part The valid portion of the consideration as well as the invalid portion must be distributed over each of the half shares of the plaintiff and Chinnappa respectively." In *Venkatapathi v. Papiiah*⁶, it was, however, observed, "In such a case the only equity that can be worked out in favour of the vendee would be to uphold the sale of the alienor's share and to allot the whole of the consideration as consideration for that share." A majority of the Full Bench have held in the instant case in favour of the former view, while Raghava Rao, J., thought that the latter view was the more acceptable.

ANNAGOUDA NATHGOUDA v. COURT OF WARDS, SATARA, (1952) 1 M.L.J. 414 (S. C.).

In this case the Supreme Court decides a vexata questio. The conflict of judicial opinion which had existed as to the applicability of the provisions of the Hindu Law of Inheritance (Amendment) Act, of 1929 to cases of Stridhana succession is resolved and it is declared that the Act is inapplicable to ascertain the heirs to the stridhana property of a maiden. The preamble to the Act is quite clear that the object of the Act was to alter the order in which certain heirs of a Hindu male dying intestate are entitled to succeed to his estate. Again section 1, clause 2 lays down expressly that the "Act applies only to persons who but for the passing of this Act would have been subject to the law of Mitakshara in respect of the provisions herein enacted, and it applies to such persons in respect only of the property of males not held in coparcenary and not disposed of by will." The Act thus operates only in regard to the separate property of a Hindu male who dies intestate. That the propositus should be a male is a condition precedent. In *Sakuntalabai v. Court of Wards*¹, Stone, C.J., and Vivian Bose, J., held that where the subject of enquiry is not who is entitled to a male's estate the Act cannot apply. So the Act cannot be invoked in regard to succession to stridhana property. The Madras High Court took the same view in Manda Mahalakshamma v. Mantravadi Suryanarayana Sastry,² and *Kuppuswami Asari v. Manickasari*³. In the latter case it was stated that the rule of succession to stridhana property laid down in the Mitakshara has not been in any way altered by Act II of 1929. In *Talukraj Kuer v. Bacha Kuer*⁴, in dissenting from the rulings of the Lahore High Court on the point. Manohar Lall, J., observed: "I cannot understand how the succession to the property of a female could be governed by Act II of 1929 which distinctly states that it shall only apply to the succession to the property left by a male." A contrary view was taken in *Mt. Charjo v. Dinanath*⁵, where it was held that in cases of succession to stridhana in default of heirs to a married woman including her husband it is the husband's heirs on that date that should take and therefore Act II of 1929 will apply. Tek Chand, J., observed: "It is quite true that the Act is very limited in scope. It, in terms, regulates succession only to the separate property of a Hindu male dying in intestacy. It does not purport to alter the law in respect of the devolution of other property or the property of a female The rule of succession to stridhana as laid down in the Mitakshara is that in the absence of the issue of the female holder, it devolves on her husband, and if he is dead, it descends in the same way as if it had belonged to the husband himself. To ascertain as to who the heirs of the husband are, we must ex necessitate rei refer to the law governing succession to the property of the husband in force at the time when succession opened out." A similar view was taken by the Bombay High Court in *Raghunandan v. Keshavrao*⁶, where the father's sister's son was preferred to the paternal grandfather's brother's son's son as stridhana heir to the property of a maiden. The Lahore High Court followed its previous decision, in *Kehar Singh v. Attar Singh*⁷. The Allahabad High Court also followed that view in *Indar Pal Singh v. Mt. Humangi Devi*⁸. The Supreme Court has now disapproved of the latter view. It has held that where the enquiry is for the purpose of finding out who the successor to the estate of a female owner is, the operation of Act II of 1929 is excluded by its express terms and for that purpose the Act is to be treated as non-existent. In other words the stridhana heirs are to be ascertained with reference to the general provisions of the Hindu law of inheritance ignoring the statutory heirs who are introduced by the Act.

ARUNACHALA CHETTIAR v. VADLA KOUNDAN, (1952) 1 M.L.J. 400.

This decision deals with a point on which there is not much authority. It holds that where after an execution sale and before its confirmation the judgment-debtor died, a confirmation order without impleading the legal representatives of the judgment-debtor will be a nullity. Order 21, rules 89, 90 and 91 of the Civil Procedure Code provide for the preferring of applications to set aside a sale and rule 92 states that where no application under any of the rules is made or where an application made is disallowed the Court shall make an order confirming the sale and the sale thereupon shall become absolute. Confirmation is thus a condition precedent for the sale to become absolute. Also when once a sale has been held, in the absence of any application to set it aside the Court has no jurisdiction to refuse to confirm it. In other words confirmation is automatic. The title of the purchaser dates only from confirmation. The question still remains whether an order of confirmation can be passed without the presence of the parties who are sought to be bound. The language of sub-clause 3 of rule 92 that no suit to set aside an order made under this rule shall be brought by any person against whom such order is made would suggest that the bar will operate only if the party sought to be affected had notice, and conversely a person who had no notice and against whom therefore the order could not be deemed to have been passed will not be bound by it. In *Kamakhya Dutt Ram v. Shyam Lal*¹, a sale of property in execution had taken place in the lifetime of the judgment-debtor and had been confirmed without bringing the deceased's legal representatives on the record of the execution case and without notice to them. It was held by Wazir Hasan, Ag. C.J., and Misra, J., that the confirmation was not on that account invalid. It was observed: "The sale had taken place in the lifetime of the judgment-debtor and there are no provisions in the Civil Procedure Code which require legal representatives of a judgment-debtor who has died after the sale, to be brought on the record for purposes of confirmation. The case may be different if a judgment-debtor dies before the date of the sale and the sale takes place behind the back of his legal representatives." The observation fails to take note of the spirit behind rule 92 (3) of Order 21. In view of it, the position adopted in the case under review seems to be more acceptable.

ABDUL AZEEZ v. PATHUMMA BI, (1952) 1 M.L.J. 463.

This decision draws attention to the definite cleavage of judicial opinion which exists in regard to the precise scope of section 2 (a) of the Indian Majority Act. Section 3 of the Act lays down that every person domiciled in India shall be deemed to have attained his majority when he shall have completed his age of eighteen years and not before. So till completion of eighteen years a person is a minor. And Order 32, rule 1 of the Civil Procedure Code, provides that every suit by a minor shall be instituted in his name by a person who in such suit shall be called the next friend of the minor. It follows that a suit by a person who has not completed the age of eighteen years can be instituted only by a next friend. Section 2 (a) of the Majority Act has, however, laid down that nothing contained in that Act shall affect the capacity of any person to act in the matter of marriage, dower, divorce and adoption. The question is whether these words can be taken to control the provision in Order 32, rule 1, Civil Procedure Code and dispense with the requirement of a next friend where the suit in question concerns the matters specified in section 2 (a). The expression "capacity to act in the matter of marriage" is ambiguous in import and unhappy, *Maung Tun Aung v. Ma E Kyi*². It is also not very apt as applied to dower though it is full of meaning as applied to the other three classes, *Abi Dhumisa Bibi v. Mahammad Fathiuddin*³. In *Puyikuth Ithayi Umah v. Kairhirapokil Mamod*⁴, it was pointed out by Turner, C.J. and Tarrant, J., that the words must be taken to refer to the capacity to contract which is limited by section 11 of the Contract Act and not to the capacity to sue which is purely a question of procedure and regulated by the Civil Procedure Code. In that view it was held that a suit by a Mapilla woman against her husband and her father-in-law for past maintenance, dower and stridhana cannot be brought without being represented by a next friend, though she had attained puberty and was a major according to the Muslim personal law inasmuch as she was a minor, under the general law being not even 15 years old. This decision was followed in *Abi Dhu-nimsa Bibi v. Mahammad Fathiuddin*¹, where it was held that a Muslim wife who was a major under her personal law but not under the Majority Act cannot make a valid relinquishment of her dower. It was pointed out by the learned Judges that the object of section 2 (a) was to confer a privilege and not to endanger ordinary civil rights and that the ordinary law was intended to take its course in respect of the correlative rights flowing out of marriage, etc., that the word "act" only meant initiate to the religious act or ceremony. In *Maung Tun Aung v. Ma E Kyi*², it was observed that the words "capacity to act in the matter of marriage" meant capacity to be a party to a valid marriage and related to the acts of the parties by which the status is changed and could not apply to a pre-nuptial agreement to contract a marriage in future. The scope of the expression "capacity to act in the matter of marriage" etc., fell to be examined in *Najmunnissa Begum v. Sirajuddin Ahmad Khan*³, by the Patna High Court and Mohamad Noor, J., observed in the course of his judgment: "The provisions of the section govern only the performance of marriage or effecting of divorce by persons who though not majors according to the Act are so according to their personal law. But once a marriage has been performed and the dower has been settled, the dower becomes a property of the wife like her any other property. The dower is a debt payable to the wife and any transfer of this debt, or foregoing it altogether or any portion of it are not matters in any way connected with marriage and such acts must be governed by the ordinary law of the land." Yet another point favouring a restricted interpretation of the word "act" in section 2 (a) of the Majority Act is brought out in the decision of the Lucknow Chief Court in *Usman Ali Khan v. Mt. Khatton Banu*⁴, where it is observed: "dower and divorce are themselves connected with marriage, and if the words 'to act in the matter of marriage' were given the expanded meaning . . . then it would only be necessary to say, 'the capacity of any person to act in the following matters, namely, marriage and adoption' . . . These words must be construed in a restricted sense and . . . 'to act in the matter of marriage' means only to enter into the contract of marriage". The learned Judge concluded by holding that section 2 (a) merely relieves a party of some of the consequences of minority, but the party remains a minor none the less, and that being so, the provisions of Order 32, rule 1, Civil Procedure Code, still apply and in respect of the institution of a suit the party will have to act through a next friend only. A different view as to the meaning of the words 'to act in the matter of marriage, etc.', has been taken in decisions of the Bombay, Calcutta and Allahabad High Courts. In *Bai Shirinbai v. Kharshedji*⁵, Farran, C.J., observed that what section 2 (a) of the Majority Act stated was about 'capacity to act' and not about 'capacity to contract' and hence the former words will take in capacity to sue as well. In *Mozharul Islam v. Abdul Ghani Ala*⁶, Suhrawardy, J., took the view that 'act in the matter of dower' meant the doing of 'all acts in relation thereto'. And in *Mt. Fatima Khatun v. Fazlal Karim Mea*⁷, adopting a similar wide construction, Cumming and Mukherji, JJ., held that capacity to act in the matter of divorce will include a capacity in a minor husband to delegate to his wife a power of divorce. So also on similar lines of reasoning, in *Naksetan Bibi v. Habibar Rahaman*⁸, Akram, J., held that the words 'act in the matter of divorce' are wide enough to include the institution of a suit for dissolution of her marriage by a minor who under her personal law may have attained the age of majority. In *Qasim Husain v. Bibi Kaniz Sakina*¹ the Allahabad High Court held that the settlement of dower as well as its relinquishment will fall within the exceptions contained in section 2. On a review of the different lines of reasoning it looks as if the view taken by the Madras High Court is more acceptable. Words take colour from the setting in which they occur and the context in which they are employed. The Majority Act is essentially concerned with substantive law. In matters of procedure the Civil Procedure Code is exhaustive on the matters with which it deals and there is no saving of personal laws to any extent. Also to give a wide construction to the words "act in the matter of marriage" will make otiose the reference to acting in the matter of dower and divorce. Prima facie acting in the matter of marriage means doing everything till the marriage and participating therein. It cannot refer to correlative rights or consequences flowing from it. Again the right of suit is a remedy and not a consequence of marriage.

DEVANUGRAHAM, In re, (1952) 1 M.L.J. 550.

This decision is of interest for its statement, that section 403, Criminal Procedure Code, is nothing more than an elaboration of the principle which underlies Article 20 (2) of the Constitution of India, that no citizen should be put in jeopardy of his life or liberty more than once. It is a time-honoured maxim of English common law that a man, whether he has been acquitted or convicted should not be tried again for the same offence. At the same time that law had recognised that if the case were one where the tribunal was ex facie wholly unauthorised, and the accusation and the accused plainly coram non judice the matter would be entirely different and in such a case the pretended adjudication of the usurping tribunal would appear to be a mere nullity, not merely voidable but void. See *Reg v. Justices of Antrim*². In that view it was held that where the conviction of a prisoner was technically a nullity, a second trial was not barred. The plea of autrefois convict will be of no avail when the first indictment was invalid and when on that account no judgment could have been given, because the life of the defendant was never before in jeopardy³. In *Rex v. Bowman*⁴ the prisoner had been convicted on a day to which the case had not been adjourned properly and the conviction was on that ground held to be a nullity and not to preclude a fresh trial. In *Rex v. Bates*⁵, a prisoner had been convicted on an indictment charging him with an offence under section 2 of the Explosive Substances Act, 1883. Section 7 of that Act required the consent of the Attorney-General to the preferment of the indictment and such consent not having been obtained it was held that there was no jurisdiction to try the indictment and the conviction was therefore a nullity. In Rex v. Marsham: *Ex parte Emmeline Pethick Lawrence*⁶ a person had been convicted by the Magistrate of assaulting a police constable in the execution of his duty, but by some inadvertence the constable who was assaulted gave his evidence at the hearing of the charge without being sworn. On the Magistrate's attention being called to this irregularity, he later in the same day reheard the case, all the evidence being given upon oath. The Magistrate again convicted the person. It was held that as the accused had not been in peril at the time of the second hearing the second conviction was good. Lord Alverstone, C.J., observed: "In order to set aside the second conviction the applicant must show that the Magistrate has done something on the previous hearing which either exhausted his jurisdiction to rehear or which made it unjust that the applicant should be put on her trial in regard to the offence charged. In my judgment the Magistrate, finding out that upon the first hearing he had before him evidence which was not admissible and had therefore not heard and determined the case according to law, was entitled in the exercise of his jurisdiction to have the case heard and tried before him on proper evidence". In India there are two statutory provisions which bear on the matter; namely, section 403 of the Criminal Procedure Code and Article 20 (2) of the Constitution of India. Section 403 states inter alia that a person who has once been tried by a Court of competent jurisdiction for an offence and convicted or acquitted of such offence, shall, while such conviction or acquittal remains in force, not be liable to be tried again for the same offence. Article 20 (2) of the Constitution provides: "No person shall be prosecuted and punished for the same offence more than once". In *Basdeo Agarwalla v. King-Emperor*¹, the Federal Court had pointed out that a prosecution launched without a valid sanction is a nullity. The position was carried further by the Judicial Committee in *Yusofalli Mulla Noorbhoy v. The King*², where it was pointed out that the whole basis of section 403 (1), Criminal Procedure Code, is that the first trial should have been before a Court competent to hear and determine the case and to record a verdict of conviction or acquittal and that a Court cannot be competent to hear and determine a prosecution the institution of which is prohibited in the absence of a valid sanction. It was further held that where in a prosecution launched without a sanction as required by law, an order of acquittal is passed, it would not, on the omission of the Government to appeal against it become binding, because the order being a nullity there is nothing to appeal against. It was also laid down that an order of acquittal passed in such a prosecution cannot be pleaded as a bar to a subsequent prosecution on the same facts but after obtaining a proper sanction. The decision is perhaps of larger interest in so far as it considered the scope of section 403 and whether it precludes appeal to the common law rule on the matter. The question whether section 403 constitutes a complete code in India upon the subject of autrefois acquit and autrefois convict or whether in a proper case the common law can be called in aid to supplement the provisions of the section was left open, but it was stated by the Judicial Committee that to rely apart from the terms of section 403 upon the common law rule that no man should be placed in jeopardy twice, it must be shown that the first trial was before a Court competent to pass a valid order of acquittal or conviction and for this purpose there is no distinction between a conviction and an acquittal. Now Article 20 of the Constitution bars double punishment for the same offence. The language of the Article has given rise to a number of questions. One of these relates to the construction of the words "prosecuted and punished". If construed in the literal sense, taking the word "and" conjunctively, it would mean that a second trial would not be precluded unless the accused had been not only prosecuted but was also punished as well on a former occasion for the same offence. That would mean that the protection afforded by autrefois acquit will not be available. If on the other hand the word "and" is to be interpreted disjunctively the clause will not only include the plea of autrefois acquit but would also prevent a fresh prosecution. In *Gopalakrishna Naidu v. State of Madhya Pradesh*³ it is pointed out that the word "and" in Article 20 cannot be read as "or", that though by construing the Article literally the protection given by the Constitution will not be as extensive as that given by section 403, Criminal Procedure Code, to a person who has been tried for an offence, there is no reason why the literal meaning should be departed from. In the instant case also it is held that the word "and" has certainly been used in a conjunctive and not a disjunctive sense because to hold differently would be reading into the Article something which is not there. As to the argument that in that view Article 20 (2) would not cover other cases known to the existing law either with reference to the permissibility of fresh prosecutions or with reference to the non-maintainability thereof it is pointed out that this is so for the reason that the criminal law of the land "can hereafter be amended in the ordinary way for the purpose of altering the existing law subject to the provision in clause 2 of Article 20 which being one of the fundamental rights cannot be taken away or abridged or contravened." In this view the instant case decides that where an accused is discharged for want of sanction there is no punishment and when a man is punished departmentally there is no prosecution and therefore Article 20 (2) of the Constitution of India does not take away the right to institute a second prosecution when the first is found to be a nullity by reason of want of sanction, a pre-requisite for the maintaining of the prosecution.

OFFICIAL ASSIGNEE v. NARAYANA MUDALIAR, (1952) 1 M.L.J. 662.

Competence to contract is covered by section 11 of the Indian Contract Act. It provides that every person is competent to contract who is of the age of majority according to the law to which he is subject, and who is of sound mind, and is not disqualified from contracting by any law to which he is subject. Section 103-A of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act and section 73 of the Provincial Insolvency Act enumerate the disqualifications arising on insolvency but there is nothing in them to disqualify an insolvent from entering into a contract. In *Morgan v. Knight*¹, it was held by Erle, C.J., that a person may become insolvent a second time before he has received his final discharge under the first insolvency. The principle has been followed in *Dossa Gopal v. Bhanji*². These decisions suggest that insolvency is not a disqualification precluding a person from contracting and there is nothing in law to prevent an insolvent who has not yet obtained his discharge from borrowing again or making himself liable financially and in that way get himself adjudicated bankrupt on the basis of the debts not covered by the prior insolvency. Consistently with this one finds that in regard to debts incurred after adjudication they are not provable in insolvency and a creditor is remitted to his ordinary remedy at law. Thus a debt incurred on a promissory note executed by the insolvent after the adjudication cannot be proved under section 34 of the Provincial Insolvency Act and the creditor can file a suit for its recovery, *Kallu v. Agha Salim*³, *Hiralal v. Tulsi Ram*⁴. In *Sriram v. Ram Chunder*⁵, it was held that in respect of a debt contracted subsequent to adjudication and prior to discharge, leave of Court was not necessary for its enforcement and that section 28 (2) does not apply. Similarly in *Gustasp Behram Irani v. Bhagvandas Sobharam*⁶, it was held that the debt or liability would not be provable and section 46 (2) of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act would not apply if the debtor had become subject to the liability by reason of any obligation incurred after the date of the order of adjudication. The instant decision is in line with these authorities in holding that there is nothing in any of the provisions of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act which prohibits expressly or impliedly an insolvent from borrowing or entering into contracts giving rise to financial liability after adjudication and prior to discharge and that the liability under the contract so entered can be enforced in appropriate proceedings and that it would be wrong to say that no Court has got any power or jurisdiction to entertain a suit against an insolvent on the basis of a debt incurred by him while an undischarged insolvent.

RAVIPATI SITARAMAYYA, In re, (1952) 1 M.L.J. 690.

This decision deals with a point which occurs only rarely but is still of unusual interest. Difference of opinion in referred trials and murder cases involving life and death arises in exceptional cases only. It does however arise. Section 378, Criminal Procedure Code, provides for a resolution of differences of opinions in referred trials on the submission of sentences for confirmation by the High Court. Section 429 applies to references to a third Judge in other cases. It reads: "When the Judges composing the Court of appeal are equally divided in opinion, the case, with their opinion thereon, shall be laid before another Judge of the same Court, and such Judge after such hearing as he thinks fit shall deliver his opinion, and the judgment or order shall follow such opinion." It is clear that both sections 378 and 429 make it mandatory for the judgment or opinion of the Court to follow the opinion of the third Judge. There is, however, a dearth of case-law defining the scope of the third Judge's method of approach to such a reference. In *Daulat Ram v. Emperor*¹, it is said that the case laid before the third Judge is the complete case of the prisoner as to whom the Judges are divided in opinion and that it is his duty to consider all the points involved before he delivers his opinion upon the case. In *Khetri Bewa v. State*², it has been suggested that the hearing before the third Judge need not be a full hearing and then giving an independent opinion, but that all that is required is that the hearing should only consist of judging the respective merits of the two conflicting opinions of the two learned Judges for the purpose of deciding whether to agree or disagree with any one of them. The instant case deals in particular with the method of approach to be adopted by a third Judge in references under section 378 or section 429 and to the sentence which such Judge could pass. In *Empress v. Debi Singh*³, Mahmood, J., favoured the view that where the difference of opinion related to the weight of evidence as to the propriety of conviction, the opinion of the Judge as to acquittal should generally prevail. And it is stated that in R.T. No. 31 of 1951, the learned third Judge observed: "Where the main question at issue is identity of the assailants. . . the very fact, that one of the two learned Judges, who had to decide that question was of the view, that the identity of the accused with those assailants had not been established beyond all reasonable doubt, should suffice to establish the basis for such a reasonable doubt the benefit of which, of course, the accused have to get. In my opinion, a third Judge to whom the question is referred under section 378. . . should normally accept that finding, unless the compelling necessity of conclusive evidence on record drives him to deny the existence of any basis for a reasonable doubt." This line of approach would to some extent affect the complete freedom which seems to be available to the third Judge on the language, for instance, of section 429 to form his opinion. It would give as it were a sort of weightage in effect to the opinion of the Judge who had favoured an acquittal. That it ought not to be so seems to be the view of Edge, C.J., in *Empress v. Bundu and another*⁴. There the learned Chief Justice observed: "When Judges unfortunately differ in opinion, I conceive it to be the duty of each Judge to express and act upon the opinion which he himself has definitely arrived at. Before so expressing himself he should of course carefully weigh the reasons adduced by his brother Judge for forming a different opinion; but if those reasons do not commend themselves to his mind, he must not in the exercise of his duty, allow the fact that his brother Judge has arrived at a different conclusion, to influence his conduct whether his view—to take a criminal case—be in favour of a conviction or of an acquittal. There would be no meaning in sections 378 and 429 if it was intended that the opinion of one Judge in favour of an acquittal should prevail." The approach to be made by the third Judge on a reference consequent on difference of opinion between the two appellate Judges has been considered in *Md. Illias Mistri v. The King*⁵, where it was stated: "There can be no doubt upon the wording of the section (429) that the whole case is now before me, which means not only that I am at liberty, but that it is also my duty to examine the whole of the evidence for myself and come to a final judgment. It is not a case of merely weighing the opinion of one learned Judge against that of the other deciding which of these opinions I should accept." Even as in a first appeal the entire case is liable to be examined so also the third Judge has the whole case before him. There is much to commend this view. As to the sentence which the third Judge may on such reference pass, there are conflicting opinions set out in the instant judgment. One of the learned Judges felt that the third Judge cannot pass a death sentence in a case where the Judge favouring conviction, thinks a sentence of transportation will be adequate and appropriate while the other Judge favoured acquittal and that the Bench referring the case can always express their opinion that in the event of the conviction being confirmed a sentence of transportation is the appropriate one in which case the third Judge would be bound by the opinion. The other learned Judge took the view that no such fetter can be imposed on the third Judge and that he is at liberty to express and act upon the opinion he arrives at and can pass a sentence of death even though one Judge has favoured an acquittal and the other has awarded a sentence of transportation for life in convicting the accused. In *Ramaswami Goundan v. Emperor*¹, the Sessions Judge had convicted the accused on a charge of murder and sentenced him to death. On appeal, Subrahmanya Ayyar, Offg. C.J., confirmed the conviction and commuted the sentence to transportation for life. Boddam, J., set aside the conviction and sentence and acquitted the accused. On a reference under sections 378 and 429, Criminal Procedure Code, Bhashyam Ayyangar, J., confirmed the sentence passed by the Sessions Judge and dismissed the appeal. There is no doubt no advertence to the question whether the third Judge on reference was competent to pass any sentence that he liked. The fact, however, remains that he exercised such a power and there is nothing in the statutory provisions against such exercise. Also if the entire case is before the third Judge on the reference there is no reason to hold that he cannot have a discretion in the matter of passing the sentence.

NAGI REDDI v. DURAIRAJA NAIDU, (1952) 1 M.L.J. 746 (S.C.).

This is an instructive decision relating to surrender by a Hindu widow. It is now bootless to inquire what foundation is afforded by the texts of Hindu law regarding the principles of surrender. For in any case it is settled by long practice and confirmed by decisions that a Hindu widow can renounce in favour of the nearest reversioner if there be only one or of all the reversioners nearest in degree if more than one at the moment, *Rangaswami Goundan v. Nachiappa Goundan*². The basis of it is the effacement of the widow's interest and not the ex facie transfer by which such effacement is brought about, *Sitanna v. Viranna*³. Being an effacement or renunciation by her, it follows that the surrender can only be in favour of the nearest reversioner or reversioners. No surrender and acceleration can possibly be made in favour of anybody except the next heir of the husband. In favour of a stranger there can be an act of transfer but not one of renunciation. The position cannot be different where the surrender purports to be made in favour of the next heir and another. In such a case admittedly what passes to the next heir is not the totality of the interest of the widow, the entire estate of the husband, but something less. In *Abhaya Pada Trivedi v. Ram Kinkar Trivedi*⁴, the surrender had been made by a widow in favour of her husband's brother and three sons of another brother of the husband. It was argued that it cannot be considered a surrender in favour of the next reversioner but was really partly a surrender and partly an alienation. Cumming, J., rejected the argument and said: "I do not think there is much substance in this contention. It is a question more of form than of substance." In *Mt. Jagrani v. Gaya*⁵, a widow had executed a deed of gift of her husband's estate in favour of her daughter and a stranger, a son of her daughter's husband's brother. It was held that it was not a valid surrender. It is, however, interesting to note that Rachhpal Singh, J., in distinguishing the previous case spoke of it as a case of surrender to the nearest reversioners and others who also were reversioners and therefore was valid. Niamatulla, J., the other learned Judge, however, observed: "but if the learned Judge meant . . . that in every case where a transfer is made in favour of the next heir and a third person jointly, the transaction amounts to a surrender in favour of the presumptive heir and an assignment by the latter of half to the other, I regret, I am unable to endorse the proposition of law." In *Bala v. Baya*⁶, a Hindu widow made a gift of the entire estate of her husband in favour of her daughter and her husband jointly, the daughter being the next heir at the time. It was held it was not a valid surrender inasmuch as it was not a gift in favour of the daughter alone. The facts of the case were similar to those of the Bombay case and the Supreme Court held that the surrender in those circumstances was invalid. The instant case is of importance really in regard to another aspect of the law of surrender. It had been argued that the transaction can be looked upon as a surrender by the widow in favour of her daughter, and a conveyance by the latter of half of the estate in favour of her husband. The basis for the argument was sought in the view taken in *Nobokishore Sarma Roy v. Hari Nath Sarma Roy*¹, where Sir Richard Garth, C.J., had observed that if it is once established as a matter of law that a widow may relinquish her estate in favour of her husband's heir for the time being, it seems impossible to prevent any alienation which the widow and the next heir may agree to make. More as a matter of stare decisis than for any other reason it had been held that such a transaction if it related to the entire estate could be supported on the theory of surrender. In *Debi Prosad Chowdhury v. Golap Bhagat*², Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C.J., observed apropos of *Nobokishore's case*¹: "The road to the decision in *Nobokishore's case*¹ was not without its difficulties, but the learned Judges felt it had to be travelled that titles might be quieted." Certain observations of the Judicial Committee in the *Gounden case*³ lent countenance to the view that the position reached in *Nobokishore's case*¹ was not open to review hereafter. Lord Dunedin had said: "The surrender, once exercised in favour of the nearest reversioner or reversioners, the estate became his or theirs, and it was an obvious extension of this doctrine to hold that inasmuch as he or they were in title to convey to a third party, it came to the same thing if the conveyance was made by the widow with his or their consent. This was decided to be possible by *Nobokishore's case*¹. The judgment went upon the principle of surrender and it might do so for the surrender there was of the whole estate." That the matter is not so concluded seems clear from the observations of the Privy Council in *Narayana-swami Aiyar v. Rama Ayyar*⁴. There one Thayammal whose two daughters Thailammal and Lakshmiammal were the nearest reversioners had executed deeds by which her husband's estate was passed to remoter persons. It was found that the daughters had not consented to the transaction. It was observed by the Privy Council: "It was, however, argued that the surrender by the widow was valid because the daughters Thailammal and Lakshmiammal consented to the transactions carried out by the deeds of July, 1867, so as to efface their own interests and that consequently not only the interest of the widow, but also the interests of her daughters in the property were effaced. Their Lordships are relieved from the necessity of expressing any opinion on the important question of law involved in this contention in view of their above-mentioned conclusion that it was not proved that the daughters did in fact consent or acquiesce in the said transactions". It is really difficult to see how an alienation otherwise unauthorised can acquire sanctity by the blessings of a person who himself has no right in the property but is merely an expectant heir and which expectation may never come to fruition. Also it seems strange that mere consent should be regarded as equivalent to a conveyance by the reversioner in favour of a stranger, particularly when the widow never gave the property to the next heir but gave it directly to the stranger. Again it is quite possible that the widow would never have given it to him even if he wanted it and it is not even certain that if he got it, he would ever have sold it, *Ali Mohammad v. Mt. Mughlani*⁵. It is difficult to say in the first place why a surrender should be presumed at all when the property is given directly to the stranger. Further if the actual reversioner at the time of the widow's death is a person different from the one who gave consent there seems to be no justification for holding that he would be bound by the consent expressed by a person who had nothing but a chance of succession at that time and which chance did not materialise at all. In view of these and other weaknesses inherent in the position indicated in *Nobokishore's case*¹ the Supreme Court in the instant case observed: "It may be necessary for this Court at some time or other to reconsider the whole law on this subject. It seems probable that the Privy Council did not subject the decision in *Nobokishore's case*¹ to a critical examination from the point of view of the doctrine of surrender, as the transfer in that case was upheld on the ground of legal necessity as well."

APPALANARASIMHALU v. BOARD OF REVENUE, MADRAS, (1952) 1 M.L.J. 641.

Section 57 (1) of the Stamp Act gives power to the Chief Controlling Revenue Authority to state any case referred to it under section 56 (2) or otherwise coming to its notice and refer such case to the High Court. The scope of the power as well as the duty which it engenders are matters of considerable interest. In *Julius v. Lord Bishop of Oxford*¹, with reference to the provision in section 3 of the Church Discipline Act, 3 and 4 Vic., c. 86, that it shall be lawful for the Bishop of the Diocese within which the offence was alleged to have been committed to issue a commission for the purpose of inquiry, Lord Cairns, L.C., observed: "They confer a faculty or power, and they do not of themselves do more than confer a faculty or power. But there may be something in the nature of the thing empowered to be done, something in the object for which it is to be done, something in the title of the person or persons for whose benefit the power is to be exercised, which may couple the power with a duty, and make it the duty of the person in whom the power is reposed, to exercise that power when called upon to do so." In *Alcock Ashdown & Co. v. Chief Revenue Authority, Bombay*², on the wording of section 51 of the Indian Income-tax Act, stating that the Chief Revenue Authority may state a case, after recognising that "when a capacity or power is given to a public authority, there may be circumstances which couple with the power a duty to exercise it," Lord Phillimore went on to observe: "In their Lordships' view, always supposing there is a serious point of law to be considered there does lie a duty upon the Chief Revenue Authority to state a case for the opinion of the Court and if he does not appreciate that there is such a serious point it is in the power of the Court to control him and to order him to state a case." The Bombay High Court had to consider the scope of section 57 of the Stamp Act in *The Chief Controlling Revenue Authority, Bombay v. Maharashtra Sugar Mills, Ltd.*³, and it was pointed out that it would be no safeguard at all if section 57 (1) were to be interpreted as giving a power to the Revenue Authority without any duty being coupled with it and therefore the subject must be held definitely to have a right given to it in certain cases to have a case referred to the High Court and that right makes it obligatory upon the Revenue Authority to exercise the power given to it for the benefit of the subject. It was held that when a serious question of law is involved there is a duty cast upon the Chief Controlling Revenue Authority to state a case under section 57 (1) and the subject has a right to have such a case determined by the High Court and that duty can be enforced by section 45 of the Specific Relief Act. On appeal, the Supreme Court of India has in *Chief Controlling Revenue Authority v. Maharashtra Sugar Mills, Ltd.*⁴, affirmed the judgment of the High Court and stated that the power contained in section 57 is in the nature of an obligation or is coupled with an obligation and can be demanded to be used also by the parties affected by the assessment of the stamp duty. Kania, C.J., observed: "It is coupled with a duty cast on him as a public officer to do the right thing and when an important and intricate question of law in respect of the construction of a document arises, as a public servant it is his duty to make the reference." In the instant case, the principle thus enunciated has been followed and it was held that if the public servant omitted to do so, the Court can issue a mandamus to direct him to discharge that duty and make a reference.

 PARRY AND CO. v. COMMERCIAL EMPLOYEES ASSOCIATION, (1952) 1 M.L.J. 813 (S.C.)

Both these are decisions of the Supreme Court relating to the issue of certiorari. The former case arose in relation to the Motor Vehicles Act—Act IV of 1939, and the latter with reference to the Madras Shops and Establishments Act—Act XXXVI of 1947. In both cases the issue of the writ by the High Court was set aside. Both decisions draw pointed attention to the fact that however extensive the jurisdiction of the High Court under Article 226 of the Constitution may be, it is not so wide or large as to enable the High Court to convert itself into a Court of appeal and examine for itself the correctness of the decisions impugned. In the first case it is also stated that where the remedies for the redress of grievances or the correction of errors are found in the statute itself, it is to those remedies that resort must generally be had and not to certiorari. The second case suggests that in spite of statutory provision laying down that the decision of the Special Authority or Tribunal (for instance, the Labour Commissioner) would be final and incapable of being challenged in any Court of law, the superior Court is not absolutely deprived of the power to issue a writ of certiorari, although it can do so only on the ground of either a manifest defect of jurisdiction in the Tribunal that made the order or of a manifest fraud in the party procuring it. An ambitious claim for certiorari is to be seen in the language of, Holt, C.J., in *Viner's Abridgment*¹ that "there is no Court or jurisdiction which can withstand a certiorari." It had also been said that the King's Bench will never "allow a nullity to remain upon the record whatever be the power or competence of the King's Bench Court as regards the question in issue," *Re Heaphy*², *Lalor v. Bland*³. These were however decisions of the Irish Courts. The English practice is that the writ will issue only in respect of matters which are within the Court's jurisdiction.⁴ Even if decisions of special tribunals may have been declared to be final and certiorari taken away certiorari may be granted where the inferior Court has acted without or in excess of jurisdiction, for, in such a case the Court has not brought itself within the terms of the statute taking away certiorari, *Colonial Bank of Australia v. Willan*⁵. The enunciation mentioning the circumstances under which the writ will be granted, generally quoted in this connection is that of Atkin, L.J., in *Rex v. Electricity Commissioners*⁶. The Lord Justice laid down: "Wherever any body of persons having legal authority to determine questions affecting the rights of subjects and having the duty to act judicially act in excess of their legal authority they are subject to the controlling jurisdiction of the King's Bench Division exercised in these writs." And in *Rex v. Chancellor of St. Edmundsbury and Ipswich Diocese*⁷, Evershed, L.J., observed: "Whenever, as a result of the establishment by Act of Parliament of some new jurisdiction or some new tribunal exercising judicial or quasi-judicial functions, it is necessary to consider the application thereto of well-established forms of remedy, the Court will not be afraid to extend the older principles to new circumstances." This is a valuable statement supporting the trend reflected in the second of the instant decisions.

MURUGAPPA CHETTI & SONS v. COMMISSIONER OF INCOME-TAX, MADRAS, (1952) 2 M.L.J. 17.

It is familiar knowledge that there is nothing precluding the karta or manager of a joint Hindu family from holding offices and positions of a remunerative character. In such cases, the question often arises whether the income earned will appertain to the joint family of which he is the karta or will be his self-acquired or separate property. The yardstick applied in all such cases is to find out from the facts of each case whether the acquisition is referable to any detriment to the paternal estate. In regard to the case of a manager holding the office of managing agent of a company, Chagla, J., remarked: "To my mind it is impossible to contend that the mere office of managing agents without any benefits attaching to it can never be deemed to be joint family property," *Ramchandra v. Chinubhai*⁸. In *Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa v. Darsanram*⁹, two undivided families represented by their respective managers owned a limited company and the managers received certain sums as directors' fees. It was held for purposes of section 3 of the Income-tax Act that the amounts must be regarded as their personal earnings and not as the income of the joint family, inasmuch as joint family property had not been spent in earning the remuneration by way of directors' fees. Haridas

Purushottam, In re¹, illustrates when the income could be regarded as joint family property. There an assessee was partner in a Mill as karta, of a joint family consisting of himself and his sons, the other partners being his two divided brothers. In 1918 these three with five others purchased a Mill in partnership, the assessee being partner as karta of his family. In 1920, the eight partners promoted a limited company which took over the Mill of the 1918 partnership. Under an agreement between the partnership and the new company, the eight partners who sold the Mill to the company became the Managing Agents of the new company. The assessee got the opportunity of being appointed a Managing Agent directly from the sale of the Mill which in part was the joint family property of himself and his sons. In the circumstances, it was held by Stone, C.J. and Chagla, J., that the assessee's share of the income from the Managing Agency must be treated as income of the family. In *Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras v. Sankaralinga Ayyar*², the shares necessary for qualifying for the managing directorship of a concern were acquired by the karta from out of the family funds. But inasmuch as it cannot be said that his appointment was on behalf of and for the benefit of the family and inasmuch as the remuneration earned was in consideration of the services which he rendered to the company, it was held that the remuneration will ordinarily be self-acquisition only unless thrown into the common stock. It was observed that so long as there is no detriment to the family property and so long as the corpus or the income of the family property is not utilised or spent in making the acquisition or in earning the remuneration, the latter cannot be treated as joint family property. The instant case is in line with these authorities in holding that the commission earned under a managing agency agreement by the karta of a coparcenary would prima facie be his individual property unless it is shown that the rights were acquired by utilising joint family funds.

MARIYAMUMMA v. UMMAR KUTTI, (1952) 2 M.L.J. 43.

This decision deals with an interesting question under section 13 of the Madras Survey and Boundaries Act of 1923. Section 13 provides for the notification in the District Gazette of the completion of the survey and provides that "unless the survey so notified is modified by a decree of the civil Court under the provisions of section 14 the record of the survey shall be conclusive proof that the boundaries determined and recorded therein have been correctly determined and recorded." Different views have been taken in regard to the scope of the finality postulated. In *Nagaratnam Pillai v. Guruswami Pilai*³, Byers, J., held that it is only the boundaries determined and recorded that are conclusively established and the finality refers therefore to the boundaries and not to the question of title. The learned Judge said: "The meaning of these words is self-evident. . . . The contention of the learned Advocate-General that the bar imposed by section 14 of the new Act applies only to the correctness of the boundaries and not to questions of title must be upheld." A somewhat different view was taken by Abdur Rahman, J., in *Ponnuswami v. Mariappa Servai*⁴. He observed: "It was contended . . . that the Survey Officer might have had the power to determine the boundary . . . or recording it as undisputed, but he had no power to determine the question of title of the plot in dispute. The contention is not sound in my opinion. It may be that if the dispute merely related to the title of the plot in dispute as distinguished from a dispute as to its boundary, the order passed by the Survey Officer would not have become final. But when as a result of the Survey Officer's order or of the decision of the appellate authority from that order, the limit of a person's boundary has been determined and recorded the question of title as to the area falling within that boundary must be in the absence of any claim as to acquisition of title by prescription or otherwise held to have been equally determined as being implicit in that order or decision and would not be liable to attack after the expiry of the period provided under section 14 of the Act for the institution of a civil suit." Thus if the lands are not adjoining each other and if there is no dispute with reference to the boundaries a pure question of title cannot be decided by the Survey Officer and if for the purpose of the survey he regards one person as the owner that will not be conclusive. But if the two properties adjoin and in the course of survey whether there is boundary dispute or not it becomes necessary to decide the exact boundary line between the two plots such determination involves with it as a matter of logic determination of the title to the disputed portion as well. The matter had also been considered by the Orissa High Court in *Narayana Deo v. Venkátappa Rao*¹, where it was held that whether the decision of the survey officer in determining boundaries will affect title to a piece of land lying within the said boundaries would depend very much on the nature of the claim to that land and the questions that fell for decision before him. Thus if the claim to the land were based on the ground that it lay within a particular village belonging to one of the parties and the Survey Officer while determining the boundaries holds that the plot lies in the adjacent village, such determination of the boundary unless set aside by a suit under section 14 will undoubtedly conclude title in respect of the plot. But if the rival claim has nothing to do with the question as to whether the plot lies within the boundary of one village or of the adjacent village it will not entail that result. The view of Abdur Rahman, J., as well as that of the Orissa High Court have found approval in *Krishna Chandra v. Ramamurthy Pantulu*². Raja-mannar, C.J., said: "We agree with Abdur Rahman, J., that there may be a case in which the result of a boundary fixed by the Survey Officer becoming conclusive under section 13 of the Act may have an indirect effect on the title to an area covered by the boundary. To take a concrete example, if adjacent survey numbers say 1 and 2, belong to two persons A and B and either after dispute or without any dispute the Survey Officer proceeds to fix the boundary between these two survey numbers 1 and 2, and on doing so he marks the boundary in such a way as to include a portion of what is really survey number 2 as part of survey number 1, it may be that after the lapse of the period specified in section 14 of the Act, B the owner of survey number 2 would be precluded from challenging the correctness of the boundary and would virtually lose his title to that part of the survey number belonging to him which had been wrongly included in survey number 1 on account of the wrong boundary fixed by the Survey Officer. It is obvious, however, that strictly speaking, this is not because the Survey Officer has any jurisdiction to determine a question of title. It is the indirect result of fixing the boundary." The learned Chief Justice added that in their opinion a correct construction had been placed on sections 13 and 14 by the Orissa High Court. In the case under notice, a survey officer after demarcating the boundary of a plot of land bearing a survey number gave notice to the registered holders of that number and when they found that more land than what they were legitimately entitled to had been included in that number they kept quiet. The party whose land had been wrongly included in that number was not given any notice. It was held, in the circumstances that the Survey Officer's decision will not be binding upon the real owners of the excess land included in the survey number.

VENKATA RAO v. VENKATARATNAM, (1952) 2 M.L.J. 60.

Statutory provision regarding relief to be given in the case of usurious transactions of loan of money is contained in section 3, sub-section 1 of the Usurious Loans Act of 1918. Under that section where the Court has reason to believe (a) that the interest is excessive and (b) that the transaction was, as between the parties thereto, substantially unfair, the Court may exercise any of the powers specified therein. For the section to apply two conditions should be satisfied. The Court should find (i) the interest excessive and (ii) the transaction substantially unfair. Either circumstance alone will not suffice. In Madras, the provision has been amended by Act VIII of 1937. Under the amended provision the Court if it has reason to believe that the transaction was as between the parties thereto substantially unfair can exercise any of the powers mentioned there. Whereas under the Central enactment the conjunction of two factors was necessary to give relief, under the State legislation the second requirement alone was needed. The a mending Act also inserted a new Explanation 1 to the effect: "If the interest is excessive, the Court shall presume that the transaction was substantially unfair; but such presumption may be rebutted by proof of special circumstances justifying the rate of interest." Thus it comes to this. If the interest is excessive the Court shall presume the transaction to be substantially unfair and give relief. Whether the interest in any case is excessive or not is necessarily a question of fact. From the decided cases a few rules affording guidance have emerged. In *Samuel v. Newbould*¹, apropos of the word 'excessive,' Lord James observed: "What amounts to excessive interest is to be determined by the tribunal in each case; the question of risk being a material matter for consideration The word 'excessive' applied to interest is, of course, a relative and elastic term impossible of absolute definition. But we know the general rule of interest in commercial transactions and in loans on perfect security But in respect of ordinary loans deviations from these guides, dependent upon the facts of each case, must doubtless be expected and ought to be allowed. But such deviation must be reasonable in relation to facts." In *In re a Debtor*², Cozens-Hardy, L.J., remarked that in considering whether the interest is excessive the Court must have regard to all the circumstances of the case. In *Carringtons, Ltd. v. Smith*³, Channell, J., stated: "There can be no standard rate on personal loans, and where the parties are reasonably on terms of equality a Judge cannot, I think, do better than adopt what they themselves have agreed on, although of course, when that is not the case he has to adjudge what is reasonable as best as he can under the circumstances." This statement was approved by the Court of Appeal in *Reading Trust, Ltd. v. Spero*⁴. In the case of secured loans the rate of interest is regarded as excessive if it be extraordinary, such as higher than 10 per cent. or even less, *Part v. Bond*⁵. In *Chethambaram Chettiar v. Loo Thom Poo*⁶, the Privy Council had to consider the question with reference to the Usurious Loans Act—Act IV of 1937 of Malaya. That provision corresponded to section 3 (1) of the Indian Act of 1918. It was held that the charge of 24 per cent. interest per annum should be deemed to be unfair and it was scaled down to 15 per cent. The transaction was one by way of secured debt. In the United Provinces, the Central Act has been amended by the State Act XXIII of 1934 and the Legislature itself has laid down principles on which the excessiveness or otherwise of the interest is to be judged. And it was held in *Lala Ram Narain v. Thakur Chandrika Prasad*⁷, that all cases coming before the Courts after the passing of the local amending Act must be decided according to the principles laid in the Act. In *Gajraj Singh v. Muhammad Mushtaq Ali*⁸, which was a case under the Central Act of 1918, 12 per cent. simple interest was held to be a fair, proper and reasonable rate inasmuch as the mortgagor had given ample security for the loan and there were no incumbrances on the property. In *Narasimham v. Premgya*⁹, it was observed by Horwill, J.: "This Court has frequently held that 9 per cent. is a very liberal remuneration for a secured debt. One has to remember that the times have changed a great deal since some of the decisions relied on were made and rates of interest are now very much lower than what they were a decade or two ago. I am certainly not prepared to say that a creditor suffers hardship because he gets no more than 9 per cent. simple interest on a secured debt." The decision in *Venkataraju v. Venkataramana*¹⁰, held that where a mortgage of the year 1922 had stipulated for compound interest at 9 per cent. per annum it was not excessive. It is of interest to note that where a father in a joint Hindu family had made a mortgage of ancestral property carrying compound interest at 36 per cent. per annum with quarterly rests, in *Ram Bhujwan Prasad Singh v. Nathu Ram*¹¹, the Judicial Committee reduced it to simple interest at 1 per cent. per mensem. The nature of interest in the case of simple loans fell to be considered by the Privy Council in *Narain Das v. Abinash Chandra*¹², where with reference to an interest of 12 per cent. per annum allowed by the lower Court, Lord Buckmaster said: "The rate is 12 per cent. It appears according to our notions in this country, a high rate of interest, but that has nothing whatever to do with the matter which their Lordships have to consider. It may very well be that having regard to the local conditions in India it is a very proper and reasonable rate to impose, and their Lordships see no reason whatever why any alteration should be made as to the amount." In a case under the Usurious Loans Act of 1918, it was considered in *Ziaul Rahman v. Mt. Ganga Dei*¹, that prima facie and in the absence of special circumstances 12 per cent. per annum will be a fair and proper rate of interest. In the United Provinces where the amending Act of 1934 had fixed limits within which the Courts can exercise discretion in *Sarsuit Prasad v. Lala Baijnath Singh*², the learned Judges observed: "We are to be guided by the law as it stands in these provinces at present. The United Provinces Act XXIII of 1934 has fixed limits within which a Court has discretion to hold whether a certain rate of interest is excessive or not. Proviso 3 added by the local Act to section 3 (2) (b), Usurious Loans Act of 1918, provides that in the case of unsecured debts, the Court shall deem the interest excessive if the rate exceeds 24 per cent. per annum and proviso 5 lays down that if the rate does not exceed 9 per cent. per annum, the Court shall not deem it to be excessive. If therefore the stipulated rate ranges between 9 per cent. and 24 per cent. the Court has discretion, of course with due regard to all the circumstances, to hold that it is excessive." In *Sevugan Chettiar v. Chinnaaswami Chettiar*³, where the note carried interest at 24 per cent., interest at 12 per cent. per annum was awarded. The points that emerge from these decisions are: (i) the term 'excessive' does not admit of being defined absolutely; (ii) whether interest is excessive in any case must be determined with reference to all the circumstances of the case; (iii) the risk involved, the parties having been on reasonable terms of equality, the nature of the times as well as the locality of the debt will be relevant in this behalf; and (iv) in the case of secured debts the rate of interest is excessive if extraordinary, that is, if more than 9 per cent. normally, whereas in the case of simple loans 12 per cent. per annum will be a fair and proper rate. The instant case has taken the view that 12 per cent. simple interest is a proper rate.

VENKATAPERUMAL NAIDU v. RATHNASABAPATHI CHETTIAR, (1952) 2 M.L.J. 241.

In regard to the nature of the lien of an unpaid vendor of land different views have been held. While the Madras High Court has been guided by the language of section 55 of the Transfer of Property Act, the Allahabad and Calcutta High Courts have permitted equitable considerations to come in. In *Subrahmanya Ayyar v. Poovan*⁴, a sale deed had been executed in the plaintiff's favour more than seven years before suit but the purchase money had not been paid and the vendors had continued in possession of the land. In a suit by the plaintiff for a declaration of his right and recovery of possession, it was held that the unpaid vendor's charge on the property sold for the purchase money was a lien which will give him the right to retain possession till the purchase money was paid and the lien was extinguished by such payment. The same view was taken in *Rama Ayyar v. Vanamamalai Ayyar*⁵. This conclusion was held to be wrong in *Velayutha Chetti v. Govindasami Naicken*⁶, where it was pointed out that the unpaid vendor had only a right to retain the title deeds under section 55 (3) and to a charge for the unpaid purchase money under section 55 (4) (b) while the vendee was entitled to possession under section 55 (1) (f), and, consequently, the vendor cannot retain possession of the property sold against the vendee. When the case was reheard later due to the appellant being dead at the time of the first hearing, the learned Judges laid down⁷, that it is not competent to the Courts in a suit for possession by the vendee to pass a decree conditional on the vendee paying the balance of the purchase money and that the provisions of the statute cannot be controlled by equities in favour of the vendor. This view has since then been consistently followed in Madras, Krishnamma

v. *Kotipalli Mali*¹, *Poomalai Padayachi v. Annamalai Padayachi*². In the last case Somayya, J., held that a vendee who has not paid the purchase money for the lands bought by him is entitled to a decree against the vendor for possession of such lands and the Court cannot make the decree conditional on payment of the purchase money, nor can it decree payment of the price to the defendant in the vendee's suit. In *Baij Nath Singh v. Paltu*³, the Allahabad High Court has held in favour of such a conditional decree being passed. And in *Nilmadhab v. Hara Proshad*⁴, the Calcutta High Court has held that where the vendor has a lien for the unpaid balance of the purchase money the right of the purchaser to obtain possession under section 55 (1) (f) and the right of the vendor to realise the unpaid balance of the purchase money under section 55 (4) (b) may be enforced in one suit. In *Basingava v. Chinnava*⁵, while recognising the force of the argument founded on the statutory provisions, the Bombay High Court at the same time held itself against a multiplicity of suits for the working out of the rights of parties. Patkar, J., said : "Though I feel difficulty in giving effect to the equitable principle of vendor's lien which is not recognised in the Transfer of Property Act, I do not think there is any insuperable objection to recognise the statutory charge provided in section 55 (4) (b), Transfer of Property Act, and to incorporate the statutory charge in the decree in the suit brought by the purchaser for recovery of possession". The instant case has stuck to the view taken in Madras and held that a mortgagee from the vendor would be in no better position than the vendor for this purpose.

UNION OF INDIA v. HIRA DEVI, (1952) 2 M.L.J. 265 (S.C.).

In this case the Supreme Court holds that provident fund money being exempt from attachment and inalienable, no execution can lie normally against such a sum and execution cannot be sought against the provident fund money by the appointment of a receiver. Section 60 (1) (k) of the Civil Procedure Code exempts from attachment and sale 'compulsory deposits' and other sums in or derived from any fund to which the Provident Funds Act (XIX of 1925) applies. 'Compulsory deposit' is defined in section 2 (a) of the Provident Funds Act as a subscription to or deposit in a Provident Fund which under the rules of the Fund, is not until the happening of some specified contingency repayable on demand otherwise than for the purpose of payment of premia in respect of a policy of life insurance (or the payment of subscriptions or premia in respect of a family pension fund). Section 3 (1) of the Act provides that such a deposit cannot be assigned or charged and is also not liable to attachment. The prohibition against assignment or attachment of these deposits is based on grounds of public policy. And it stands to reason that where such prohibition is absolute it should not be allowed to be defeated and the deposit reached by a creditor through equitable execution. That the object of the legislation should not be permitted to be frustrated or circumvented was brought out in *Lucas v. Harris*⁶; in the comparable context of section 141 of the Army Act of 1881. Apropos of the question of the appointment of a receiver to collect the pension of an army officer, Lindley, L.J., stated : "In considering whether a receiver of a retired officer's pension ought to be appointed, not only the language but the object of section 141 of the Army Act, 1881, must be looked to ; and the object of the section would, in my opinion, be defeated and not advanced if a receiver were appointed". Lopes, L.J., observed : "It is beyond dispute that the object of the legislature was to secure for officers . . . a provision which would keep them from want and would enable them to retain a respectable social position. I do not see how this object could be effected unless those pensions were made absolutely inalienable, preventing not only the person himself assigning his interest in the pension, but also preventing the pension being seized or attached under a garnishee order, or by an execution or other process of law. Unless protection is given to this extent the object which the Legislature had in view is frustrated, and a strange anomaly would exist. A person with a pension would not be able to utilise his pension to pay a debt beforehand, but immediately his creditor had obtained judgment might be deprived of his pension by attachment, equitable execution or some other legal process. It is impossible to suppose that the Legislature could have intended such an anomaly". In the teeth of this forceful reasoning no other view seems possible in regard to a compulsory deposit as well. The decision of the Judicial Committee in *Rajendra Narain Singh v. Sundara Bibi*¹, however, gave rise to a current of thought that though the property may not be liable to attachment still it could be reached via equitable execution. One of two brothers who were parties to a compromise was declared under it to have a right of maintenance in 16 villages enumerated, the right being conferred expressly without power to transfer. A decree-holder sought to proceed against the right of maintenance by having a receiver appointed to realise the rents and profits so that the decretal amount may be paid out of the said realisation as far as possible. It was held it was a fit case for the appointment of a receiver. Lord Shaw observed: "Their Lordships are of opinion that the right of maintenance is in point of law not attachable and not saleable; they think that section 60 of the Civil Procedure Code, head (n) precludes an application for that purpose. The proper remedy lies in a fitting case, in the appointment of a receiver for realising the rents and profits of the property paying out of the same a sufficient and adequate sum for the maintenance of the judgment-debtor and his family, and applying the balance if any to the liquidation of the judgment-debtor's debt". In *Nawab Bahadur of Murshidabad v. Karnani Industrial Bank, Ltd.*², it was held that since the Nawab had a disposing power over the rents and profits assigned to him to maintain his dignity and station, no question of public policy was involved and though the corpus itself was inalienable a receiver of the rents and profits could be appointed. In *Secretary of State v. Bai Somi*³, Beaumont, C.J., distinguished *Rajendra Narain's case*¹ as one proceeding on the finding that the property involved there was not future maintenance and therefore was not made unattachable by the Civil Procedure Code. It was pointed out that if the Privy Council had held that an exempted payment could be reached in execution by the appointment of a receiver the protection afforded by section 60 would become to a great extent lost. In *Dominion of India v. Ashutosh Das and others*⁴, Roxburgh, J., remarked: "surely it is an improper use of that equitable remedy to employ it to avoid a very definite bar created by statute law to achieving the very object for which the receiver is appointed". A number of cases had however taken *Rajendra Narain's case*¹ as laying down that though a property may not be attachable a receiver could be appointed in respect of it in execution, *Secretary of State v. Venkata Lakshamma*⁵, *Janakinath v. Pramatha Nath*⁶. In the decision under examination, the Supreme Court has explained what exactly is the true scope of the decision in *Rajendra's case*¹. It is observed: "Taking the prayer of the judgment-creditor to be that the right of maintenance be proceeded against, their Lordships observed that the right was in point of law not attachable and not saleable. If it was an assignment of properties for maintenance the amount of which was not fixed, it was open to the judgment-creditor to get a receiver appointed subject to the condition that whatever may remain after making provision for the maintenance of the judgment-debtor should be made available for the satisfaction of the decree debt. The right to maintenance could not be attached or sold. In so far as the decree-holder sought to attach this right and deprive the judgment-debtor of his maintenance, he was not entitled to do so, but where his application for the appointment of a receiver was more comprehensive and sought to get at any remaining income after satisfying the maintenance claim, the appointment of a receiver for the purpose was justified. The decision of the Privy Council does not appear to lay down anything beyond this. In our opinion it is not an authority for the general proposition that even though there is a statutory prohibition against attachment and alienation of a particular species of property, it can be reached by another mode of execution, viz., the appointment of a receiver". By this decision the law is brought into line with the principles laid down in *Lucas's case*⁷.

Nagaratna Mudali v. Mayandi Venkatesa Mudali.
C. R. P. No. 368 of 1952.

Court-fees Act (VII of 1870), section 7 (v) and Article 17-B—Suit by coparcener for partition of joint family properties—Some members of the coparcenary adjudicated insolvents—Official Receiver in possession of the properties—Proper Court-fee payable.

In a suit for partition of family properties by one branch of the joint family and where certain members of the joint family have been adjudicated insolvent and the Official Receiver as representing their interests was authorised to sell the properties the proper Court-fee payable is under Article 17-B of the Court-fees Act and not under section 7 (v). The effect of the insolvency is not to put an end to the joint possession of the coparceners and whatever the rights of the Official Receiver might be, the coparceners must be deemed to be in possession at least constructively of all the joint family properties.

Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908), Order 21, rule 69—Sale commencing on a specified date and continuing De die in diem—If amounts to adjournment—Leave of Court—When necessary—Selling Officer—Agent or delegate of Court—Powers of.

If an execution sale commenced on a specified date is continued from day to day, it is not a case of an adjourned sale and the sale might be continued for any length of time if the circumstances of the case warrant it. A continuance of a sale is not tantamount to any adjournment.

But where the sale warrant contains a positive direction that the same should be returned on or before a particular date, the selling officer becomes functus officio on the expiry of that date and his power to sell gets terminated by efflux of time. Any sale after the expiry of the time fixed for return of warrant is without jurisdiction and there can be no question of any implied extension of time.

A selling officer is not an agent of the Court and he is at best a delegate of the Court. Any action of a delegated authority in excess of such authority is illegal and ultra vires and such acts cannot be ratified subsequently by the Court.

Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908), section 47—Decree—Execution—Property vesting in legatees subsequent to attachment—Right of decree-holder to proceed with the execution—Right of suit—When available.

The rights of an attaching creditor have to be determined as on the date of attachment. The fact that subsequently the property attached has vested under a will upon other persons is of no consequence. Such properties can be validly seized in execution of the decree and the decree-holder need not file a regular suit to enforce his rights.

An heir-at-law though a legal representative within the meaning of section 2 (11), Civil Procedure Code, a decree-holder cannot proceed in execution against the properties of the deceased in the hands of legatees under a will but his claim can be enforced by a suit.

Where a subsequent mortgagee undertook to discharge a prior encumbrance on a property of the plaintiff but failed to do so as a result of which the property was sold by the prior mortgagee and the plaintiff filed a suit for damages ;

Held, that Article 83 of the Limitation Act applies to such cases and the period should be computed from the date on which the sale was confirmed, thus finally extinguishing the right of the plaintiff, as well as the defendant to redeem the mortgage. The damage sustained by the plaintiff was on the final extinction of the right to redeem the mortgage and the extinction is on the date of the confirmation of the sale.

A dedication of lands to a temple by a Zamindarini, who is only a limited owner, cannot enure beyond her life-time under section 4 of the Madras Impartible Estates Act II of 1904. The mere fact that the income has been reared even after her life-time as trust property cannot amount to a dedication in favour of the temple. Wrong admissions in ignorance of legal rights have no force. Where the successor in interest spends the income there could be no conviction on a charge of criminal breach of trust as the dedication of the corpus itself is no longer in force.

An agreement of sale under which the promisor agreed to sell certain lands to the promisee at any time the promisee paid the sale-price is not an executory contract capable of being specifically enforced but is only an offer which could become a contract only by acceptance of that by payment of the price.

But where the whole beneficial interest in the property is not in the promisor and the promisor has admitted that the property was purchased by him only for the benefit of and at the request of the promisee, the suit could be viewed as one for recovering possession of the properties under section 94 of the Indian Trusts Act. The only right of the promisor was to get back the price advanced by him for the purchase of the property for the benefit of the promisee.

In such a case there being no express trust section 10 of the Limitation Act has no application and the residuary article is to be applied.

Except under exceptional circumstances to apply section 562 (1), Criminal Procedure Code, to all first offences of drunkenness is neither the intention of the law, nor will it be consistent with common sense. In all such cases the antecedents of the offenders and the circumstances of the offence must be considered individually.

It is no part of a court's function to speculate on undetected offences. To presume on no evidence, that a man committing an offence must have committed several offences before which went undetected is not proper.

It is not proper to say that the spread of drink to classes not addicted to it before is to be treated more indulgently than the continuance of drink among the classes addicted to it before. Nor should offenders be left off on the ground of their backwardness.

The word 'offence' means a thing punishable under the Penal Code or any special or local law. The special law contemplated are laws such as those that create fresh offences; i.e., laws making punishable certain things which are not already punishable under the Penal Code. But other Acts are those that create no fresh offences but merely provide a supplementary or alternative punishment of offences already primarily punishable under the Penal Code or which can be dealt with under the preventive or reformatory provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

The Madras Act I of 1947 (now Act XXIII of 1949) is not a special law. It can be considered a local law applicable to the State of Madras. A local law does not necessarily include all the rules made under the provisions of a local law. Where a local law declares a breach of the rules made under its authority to be punishable, then a breach of such rules might constitute an offence within the meaning of section 40 of the Penal Code.

A person cannot be convicted of escape unless the custody in which he was detained was lawful. A person about to be arrested is entitled to know under what power the constable is arresting him and if he specifies certain power which the person knows the constable has not got, he is entitled to object to such arrest and escape from custody, such custody not being a lawful one.

A detention and a rescue by others and the escape by the detainee will attract the application of section 225-B, Indian Penal Code, provided the detention was lawful.

Kotiah v. Raghavulu.
Appeal No. 570 of 1948.

Contract—Specific performance—Vendor's title defective at the time of the contract becoming perfect after the contract—Right of vendor to sue for specific performance.

It is true that a person who has entered into a contract to sell a property as his property cannot compel the purchaser to accept a conveyance of that property from a stranger. But where the vendor has been able to make good his title before the close of the action, he can sue the purchaser for specific performance of the contract even though at the time of the agreement he (the vendor) had no legal or equitable title to it and his title was in any way defective.

It is open to the purchaser if he thought fit, to have declined the contract as soon as he discovered that the plaintiff had no title; but if he does not do so it was sufficient that at the hearing a good title could be made by the vendor.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Articles 91 and 144—Applicability—Suit to set aside a document which is void and inoperative.

Article 91 of the Limitation Act has no application where the instrument sought to be cancelled is void and inoperative as the article presupposes that a suit is necessary under the law to set aside the instrument. In the case of an invalid instrument which is void there is no need to move the Court to set it aside and only voidable instruments require a decree of Court to set it aside. To such a suit the period of limitation applicable is under Article 144 and not Article 91. If in such a suit there is a prayer for cancellation of the instrument it can only be regarded as ancillary to the substantive prayer for possession and can be treated as a surplusage.

Case-law reviewed.

When a deed of one character is executed on a representation that it is of a different character then it is wholly void and inoperative. Such a deed does not require to be set aside under Article 91 and a suit to recover possession of the properties comprised therein would be governed by Articles 142 and 144 of the Limitation Act.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), section 43—Scope of—If applies to cases of alienation prohibited by section 6 (a) of the Act—Conditions to attract section 43 to transfers.

Where a transferor in fact purports to transfer an expectancy or property which he had no right to transfer without making any representation that he had authority to transfer, then section 43 of the Transfer of Property Act will not help the transferee. Similarly, if both the transferor and transferee knew the truth, the section cannot be invoked by the transferee. Section 43 proceeds on the fundamental assumption that an erroneous or fraudulent representation by a transferor induced the transferee to part with the consideration without knowing the true facts and therefore such a transferee should be allowed to claim from the transferor; if he subsequently acquires any title to the property, that the transfer should operate on that title.

A transfer which was made on an erroneous representation may, in fact and in effect, be a transfer of an expectancy, which is prohibited by the Statute. That does not prevent section 43 from operating in such cases. 65 M.L.J. 588, overruled. 29 M.L.J. 733, approved.

Per Subba Rao, J.—The mere fact that the subject-matter of the transfer is untransferable by reason of some statutory restriction or principles of public policy cannot take the case out of the operation of section 43, Transfer of Property Act. The want of title or a prohibition against transfer in a property affects the title purported to be conveyed. In either case, the transferee does not acquire title but that does not affect the competency of the transferor. The case of a transfer by a person legally competent to transfer is different from the case of a person not legally competent to transfer. In the former case the transferor is bound to make good his representation and in the latter his representation itself cannot bind him as he has no legal competency. If this distinction is borne in mind it is possible to reconcile the provision of section 43 and section 6 (a) of the Transfer of Property Act.

It is not necessary that previous sanction of Court should be obtained by the Official Liquidators for instituting criminal proceedings against a defaulting mana-

In the absence of specific terms that sanction should be previously obtained, it follows, as a necessary corollary, that the sanction required by the Official Liquidators could be given by the Court at any time, even after the proceedings have actually been instituted or even in the course of the proceedings.

Non-compliance with formal requirements in the matter of the description of the applicants cannot and will not amount to any violation of section 177 of the Companies Act, where there is substantial compliance with its provisions.

Section 282-A of the Companies Act does not offend against Article 20 (2) of the Constitution of India.

Failure to frame rules under section 45-G of the Banking Companies Act does not vitiate any proceedings taken under the Act as per the Original Side Rules or the Companies Act and the rules framed thereunder.

In the absence of necessity the karnavan cannot ordinarily grant a mercharth or renew an old kanom; long in advance of the expiry of the prior term. But such transactions are only voidable and not void. The test prescribed in regard to the act of management is whether the karnavan acted bona fide and one test for an act of alienation is whether there was necessity or benefit to the estate. In the former role his powers approximate to that of a trustee or of guardian and in the latter role to that of manager of joint family.

Criminal Procedure Code (V of 1898), section 145—Power of Sub-Divisional Magistrate to drop the proceedings under—Stay by High Court in revision—Scope—Powers in revision.

Proceedings under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, can be terminated at any stage when the Magistrate for valid and adequate reasons considers that there is no likelihood of the breach of the peace. Such reasons must, however, be apparent on the face of the record.

The High Court can set aside an order of the Magistrate if it offends against the elementary rule founded on the desire of the Courts to place the parties to a proceeding on a footing of absolute equality. As a necessary implication to the power of setting aside, the High Court can also order stay before further mischief is effected.

The High Court will however interfere in revision with orders under section 145 and section 146, Criminal Procedure Code, only under exceptional circumstances and that too only when no discretion has been exercised or when that discretion was wrongly exercised.

There must appear on the face of the judgment or of the order complained of or on the record some ground—which need not always be a ground of law—to induce the High Court to think that the evidence ought to be examined in order to see whether there has been miscarriage of justice.

Where a Magistrate drops proceedings he must show reasons ex facie and though those orders need not be written elaborately like a judgment still they should follow the pattern of judgments to enable the revising authority to find out whether the lower Court has applied its mind to the point and came to its conclusion for valid and adequate reasons.

Criminal trial—Identification proceedings—Whether evidence—Admissibility—Accused if can demand an identification parade—Evidence Act, section 9.

There is no section in the Evidence Act which makes the identification proceedings evidence at all. But under section 9 of the Evidence Act the evidence of the identification proceedings are facts which establish the identity of the accused persons and are themselves relevant.

There is no provision in the Criminal Procedure Code which entitles an accused to demand that an identification parade should be held at or before the enquiry or at the trial. An identification parade belongs to the stage of investigation by the police. Identification parades are held not for the purpose of giving defence advocates material to work on, but in order to satisfy the investigating officer of the bona fides of the prosecution witnesses. The evidence as to identification ought in each case to be subjected to a close and careful scrutiny.

Madras Buildings (Lease and Rent Control) Act, 1949, (as amended by Act VIII of 1951), section 7 (2) (vi) proviso—Applicability, section 12-B—Revisional powers of High Court—Limits.

Before the amended provision of the Madras Buildings (Lease and Rent Control) Act could be put into force, it is necessary that the Rent Controller must be moved in express terms by the defaulting tenant to consider the question of his default as not being wilful. It is only then that the Rent Controller could be held to be satisfied or not satisfied as to whether the delay was wilful or was not wilful.

The power which the High Court is called upon to exercise is not an appellate jurisdiction but revisional so that where the tenant has not asked for the indulgence provided for by the statute, the Rent Controller cannot be found to be in error in not holding the default in question to be not wilful. Nor can the Small Cause Court, which later on deals with the matter, be held to be wrong in not entertaining the point, if for the first time sought to be raised before it.

The indulgence created by the amending Act is not a matter of right which could be claimed as a matter of course by the defaulting tenant. It is an indulgence to be exercised in favour of the litigant only on the Rent Controller being satisfied in the manner provided by the amendment of the statute.

Quære :—Whether the terms of section 115, Civil Procedure Code and the terms of section 12-B of Madras Act XXV of 1949 are not ad idem and whether the powers under section 12-B are wider than under section 115, Civil Procedure Code?

One of the great principles of civilized jurisprudence which is a part of the law in Britain and which has been adopted in this country is that no man shall be a Judge in his own cause. Closely allied to this principle is the other salutary principle that it is of fundamental importance that justice should not only be done but manifestly and undoubtedly seem to be done. The combined result of these two well-established principles is that irrespective of the possibility or otherwise of actual partiality being proved, the constitution of a tribunal entrusted with judicial or quasi-judicial functions is deemed to be bad if and when it deals with any case in which it can be said that one of the members of that body is among the suitors or litigants before the body. If a member of a Hindu joint family who was given a certain sum from the joint family funds and who goes out of the family in the sense of leaving the family house and starts a business of his own individually or in partnership and by virtue of his exertions he prospers in his business and acquires properties it will not be justifiable to hold that either the business or his properties would be joint family properties. The trend of judicial opinion has been as far as possible to recognise properties acquired out of the individual exertions of a member of a joint family to be his self-acquisition.

If a member of the family is inclined to start a trade and for that purpose he gets assistance by way of a contribution from the joint family funds without any further assistance from the joint family and goes and starts a business and acquires properties it is reasonable to extend the principle of Hindu Gains of Learning Act (XXX of 1930) to such a case. There is no real distinction between the cases of a member getting himself educated out of the joint family funds and employing himself somewhere earning and acquiring properties and a member getting a cash contribution from the family and starting a trade on his own account. Unless it is shown that the joint family did not stop with the contribution but continued to take interest and the business was subsequently carried on with the assistance of the joint family it should not be held that the business is a family business.

If a Court comes to the conclusion that an ostensible sale taken along with an agreement is not in reality a sale but only a mortgage then it follows that the mortgage is a mortgage by conditional sale. It could not be any other kind of mortgage or even an anomalous mortgage. (1946) 1 M.L.J. 342, followed. A.I.R. 1934 Nag. 18, dissented from. A.I.R. 1931 Bom. 371, considered.

The word 'deemed' in the proviso has evidently been used because ostensibly the transaction is only a sale. When the condition of reconveyance is embodied in the same document it is open to the Court to hold that what purports to be a sale is really a mortgage. Then it can be said that the sale is 'deemed' to be a mortgage.

What the proviso says is that when the condition is not embodied in the same document in no case shall a sale be deemed to be a mortgage.

Hindu Married Women's Right to Separate Residence and Maintenance Act (XIX of 1946)—Section 2 (4) and (7)—'Marries again'—'Justifiable cause'—Meaning of.

On a proper construction of the language in clause (4) of section 2 of Act XIX of 1946, the words 'marries again' could only refer to a future marriage, that is, marriage after the Act. This will be a reasonable and natural construction to be put upon the words without doing violence to the language or even to the spirit of the Statute and the language does not admit of any ambiguity and is plain. To do otherwise would be to lead to inconvenient and unjust results which should always be avoided in judicial interpretation of the words of a Statute. (1950) 1 M.L.J. 63, dissented from.

The use of the general words 'justifiable cause' in section 2 (7) following specific cases in clauses (1) to (6) though need not be confined to matters which arise from the cases mentioned in the other clauses, could not, however, be extended so as to bring within it any and every cause however trivial and inconsequential. The words 'justifiable cause' may receive the plain and ordinary meaning and no limitation may be imposed upon them. The contingency of the incompatibility of two wives living together is already provided for under the Act and a further extension of the principle covered under clause (1) could not be sought for under the general words 'justifiable cause'.

'Justifiable cause' must be some cause which should be considered to be real and serious by reason of which the position of the married woman becomes miserable and cannot be invoked for temporary bickerings that are of a fleeting nature. Sentimental incompatibility of a woman with the husband cannot be treated as 'justifiable cause'.

Merely because the order for eviction by a Rent Controller is to be executed as if it were a decree by the Civil Court, it does not follow that the proceedings which have given rise to the order for eviction can be regarded as a regular suit to which the ordinary procedure of trial of suits under the Civil Procedure Code becomes applicable. As section 12-B of the Madras Act XXV of 1949 provides for the revision of an order under section 9, the High Court cannot refuse to consider on the merits a revision on the ground that a remedy by way of separate suit exists under Order 21, rule 103; of the Code of Civil Procedure.

As the law stands two courses are open, when a document is sought to be registered on an under-valuation. First of all, if the Registrar either from his own information or otherwise suspects that the valuation given is an under-valuation with intent to cheat the Government of the legitimate duty, he can ask for particulars from the party and if satisfied with its under-valuation, can refuse to register the document unless proper duty was paid. Secondly, in case where the document gets registered and the information is subsequently received that the valuation shown is an under-valuation and that the legitimate stamp duty has been intentionally evaded to defraud the State, it will be open to the Registrar to initiate a prosecution under section 27 read with section 64 of the Indian Stamp Act.

The burden of proof is upon the prosecution to show affirmatively and satisfactorily that the terms of section 27 have not been complied with. Mere non-payment of a proper stamp duty does not make a person liable for prosecution under section 64 of the Act unless it is proved that he had an intention of defrauding the Government of its stamp revenue. Section 64 (b) is not restricted to the scribe of the instrument but is wide enough to reach and punish the person who is in truth the author of the deed and is responsible for it though he writes the deed through the hand of another. It is not correct to say that a vendee of a sale-deed will never be liable under section 64 (a) or (b) and that the executant of the document alone will be liable.

Criminal Procedure Code (V of 1898)—Section 197—Prosecution under—Nature of.

Where a public servant, purporting to discharge his official duties does an unlawful act for which he is prosecuted, the question of sanction would arise only if it is found that the acts committed by him were in discharge of his official duties. It is not a pure question of law but a mixed question of law and fact and has to be decided after investigation and cannot be short-circuited by summarily throwing out the complaint. According to the plain words of section 197, Criminal Procedure Code, it deals with cases where a public servant acts or purports to act in the discharge of his official duty and the section will afford no protection where the acts complained of plainly fall outside of duty or purported duty of a public servant. In such cases no sanction is required for prosecution.

Criminal Procedure Code (V of 1898)—Section 250—Scope of—Compensation—When allowed.

It is no doubt a very salutary provision of law that is embodied in section 250, Criminal Procedure Code. It is meant to serve as a check on propensities to rush to court recklessly or to level accusations against innocent people knowing or having reason to believe they are innocent. It is not, however, to be used indiscriminately as to be a check on legitimate complaints which may be difficult of proof owing to some reason for which the complainant may not be responsible.

A Magistrate has jurisdiction to hold, after full enquiry, even after framing charge against an accused, that the charge is frivolous and vexatious. But where a Magistrate considers the evidence sufficient to justify the framing of a charge and subsequently changes his opinion he must give reasons for so changing.

Arbitration Act (X of 1940)—Section 47—Proviso—Scope.

Prima facie section 47 of the Arbitration Act governs references to arbitration by parties in a pending suit without reference to or knowledge of the Court. The Act does not provide for arbitration in pending suits except through Court. According to the Proviso to section 47, an award on the footing of an arbitration in a pending suit may only form the basis of a decree by consent.

Where in a private arbitration in a pending suit without the knowledge of the Court, arbitrators begin to differ from each other, give each other the lie, if not begin to quarrel with each other, another dispute is in consequence created and the only course is for a Court to ignore the arbitration and decide the suit on its merits.

Neither section 57 nor section 93 of the Madras Hindu Religious and Charitable Endowments Act, 1951, would on a reasonable construction of the language employed therein, amount to an ouster of the jurisdiction of the Civil Court. Merely because a provision is made giving power to the Deputy Commissioner to enquire into disputes of the nature described in section 57 it is too much to say that the Civil Court has lost its jurisdiction to try suits in which such disputes arise.

Section 93 does not appear to have any retrospective effect and refers only to suits to be filed after the new Act came into force and probably such suits cannot be filed under this Act without exhausting the remedies provided in the special Act.

The want of a succession certificate may deprive the assignee decree-holder of the remedy of the relief which he seeks in the execution petition. Madras District Municipalities Act (V of 1920), sections 129 and 131—Explanation—Supply of water for domestic consumption—Domestic consumption and use—What amounts to—Tests.

The language of section 131 of the District Municipalities Act indicates that the essential test is the user and the nature of consumption of the water to determine whether or not it is a domestic consumption and use. The nature of the user and consumption is the deciding factor. In order to make the user a non-domestic use for purposes of trade or business the water must be used as a raw material for the purpose of the trade or business as in the case of persons carrying on dyeing business or running a laundry and so on.

The mere fact that for purposes of trade or business people go to a particular premises or reside there and utilise the water would not make the user a user for trade or business. The test is to see whether the user is a domestic user or not without reference to the premises to which the water is supplied and without reference to the persons who use it.

If, however, the title of the landlord had determined during the tenancy or if there was an eviction by title paramount or even if there was no actual eviction by paramount title, there was threat of such eviction coupled with attornment to the paramount title-holder by the tenant, it is open to the tenant to show that the landlord has no title at a point of time subsequent to the inception of the tenancy. This is on the analogy of partition suits in which the share of the plaintiff is held to matter. Where the plaintiff has also prayed for declaration of his joint right in certain porambokes incapable of partition, his relief is not capable of valuation as in the case of temple or such other trust properties. (Case Referred No. 51 of 1952.)

Fugitive Offenders Act (1881), section 14—Validity—Constitution of India, Articles 13 and 14—If offended.

By reason of Article 13 (1) of the Constitution of India a section offending the said article is not struck out from the Statute book but no effect will be given to any of its provisions in regard to a person claiming that his fundamental rights are affected thereby. (1951) S.C.R. 228 and observations of Subba Rao, J., in W.P. No. 568 of 1952 (unreported), followed.

Section 14 of the Fugitive Offenders Act offends Article 14 of the Constitution of India in that it denies "the equal protection of the laws within the territory of India", that is, the laws relating to extradition and surrender of fugitive offenders and that, to that extent, section 14 is void under Article 13 (1) of the Constitution.

Section 14 of the Act is severable from the rest of Part II of the Act.

Section 14 of the Fugitive Offenders Act is inconsistent with the fundamental right of equal protection of the laws guaranteed by Article 14 of the Constitution and is to that extent void and unenforceable.

Quære.—Whether the Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881, applies to India after 26th January, 1950, when India became a Sovereign Democratic Republic?

Per Chandra Reddy, J.—The necessity for a speedy trial cannot furnish a basis for valid and reasonable classification under Article 14 of the Constitution. Speedy trial of offences may be the reason and motive for the legislation but it does not amount either to classification of offences or of cases.

In some cases classification based on geographical contiguity may be a sound one and may not be hit at by the doctrine of equal protection of laws. But under the Fugitive Offenders Act, Part II applies to the territory formerly known as British India (now Part A States) and the then Indian States (now Part B States) being governed by the procedure prescribed under Part I. If the extradition of a fugitive offender is sought from any part of a Part A State, what was designed comprehensively as British India prior to the establishment of India as a sovereign Republic, the procedure applicable is that prescribed in Part II of the Act, while if a demand for surrender of an offender is made to any Indian State, now included in the list of Part B States, a different procedure, namely, the requirements of a prima facie case has to be followed. This classification is discriminatory.

Court-Fees Act (VII of 1870), Article 17-B and section 7 (iv) (f)—Scope of—Suit for partition and accounts—Valuation—How made.

It is settled law that a relief for partition is not capable of valuation and therefore Article 17-B of Schedule II of the Court-Fees Act will apply. It is equally well established that a relief for accounting is governed by section 7 (iv) (f). It has also been held that in a suit for rendition of accounts, where the amount is ascertained and a decree granted for a specific amount, the defendant should pay ad valorem court-fee in an appeal against that decree. If a relief for partition and a relief for accounting are two distinct subject-matters they should be separately valued even though the reliefs are clubbed together in the same suit. But if the relief for accounting is implied in the relief for partition, it cannot be said that the former relief is in respect of a different subject-matter. In that case, though it is framed as a separate relief, in effect and substance it will be part of the same relief.

The language of section 109, clause (a), Civil Procedure Code, is absent in Article 133 (1) of the Constitution of India. It is only a final judgment that will fall within the category of judgment referred to in Article 133 (1) of the Constitution. An order like the one in question, viz., an order refusing to excuse the delay in filing an application cannot be treated except as a procedural order. Though it may have far reaching consequences and adversely affect the rights of parties, by itself it cannot be held to have decided the rights of parties. If as a result of the dismissal of such an application a substantive application is dismissed, or otherwise put an end to, it may then be held that there has been a final adjudication of rights and therefore there has been a final order.

The principle of constructive res judicata in execution proceedings would not be applicable to cases where the question of the amount for which execution is taken out is in dispute and it would be open to the judgment-debtor at any time in any execution proceedings to raise the objection that the amount for which execution is sought for is not the correct amount under the decree. The fact that an execution was ordered would not amount to an adjudication that the correct amount due under the decree was ascertained as the amount for which execution was ordered. It will be open always to the judgment-debtor at any stage in the execution proceedings, so long as the decree is not satisfied, to contest the correctness of the amount for which execution is sought for.

Order 34, rule 11, C.P.C., does not lay down that all mortgage-decrees shall provide for subsequent interest at a certain rate. Such interest would be payable under rule 11 of Order 34 only if the Court had awarded it by virtue of the power which it had at the time of the passing of the preliminary decree and making provision for subsequent interest.

In so far as this power is concerned, discretion is vested in courts to award interest and in what manner that discretion is to be exercised is no doubt provided under Order 34, rule 11, C.P.C. Section 34, C.P.C., is a general provision relating to interest and section 34 (2) does not confer on the Court any power to award interest but embodies a rule of construction that when a decree is silent as to interest, it must be deemed that the Court must have refused interest; and even apart from section 34 in the absence of any other provision in the decree to justify the Court coming to a conclusion that subsequent interest has been awarded, it must be held that the omission is due to the fact that the Court intended not to award such interest.

Madras Buildings (Lease and Rent Control) Act (XXV of 1949), section 12-B—Revisional powers under—If limited as under section 115, C.P.C.—If wide as a right of appeal—Scope of interference by the High Court—Orders in execution under section 9 of the Act—Finding of fact—When High Court can interfere.

The substance or effect of any enactment cannot be understood except by a construction of it in accordance with its language, and with the difference in the language that undoubtedly exists between section 12-B of Madras Act XXV of 1949 as amended by Act VIII of 1951 and the language of section 115, C.P.C., it cannot be said that a revision petition under section 12-B of the Act is canvassable only within the strict limits of section 115, Civil Procedure Code. But it is equally clear that because section 12-B is wider than the language of section 115, Civil Procedure Code, it cannot be said that it is in effect and in substance a reproduction of the appeal provision which existed prior to the amendment from orders in execution under the Act.

The distinction between revisability and appealability is a thing well-defined in actual practice. The legislature did not intend to confer a right of appeal in the strict sense of that expression when it conferred a power of revision upon the High Court in the language that it employed in section 12-B of the Act.

If an order can be held to be improper on the evidence on record the High Court will be doing the right thing in setting aside the order of the Court below. If the improbabilities which induced the Court below to reject the positive evidence were to be eschewed or excluded from consideration and there is no further ground exigible from the expressed reasoning of the Court below or from the rest of the record to justify the order passed by it the High Court can interfere in revision.

Easements—Natural rights and easements—Distinction—Right to light and air—When an easementary right—Right to enforce against trespassers.

The right to light and air may be either a natural right forming one of the incidents of property or it may be an easement. Natural rights are by law annexed to, and are inherent in, land ex jure naturae and exist prima facie in all cases as between a landowner and his neighbour; they are rights in rem and enforceable against all who may violate them. Natural right though resembling easements in some respects are clearly distinguishable from them. The essential distinction appears to lie in this that easements are acquired restrictions of the complete rights of property or to put it in another way, acquired rights abstracted from the ownership of one man and added to the ownership of another; whereas natural rights are themselves part of the complete rights of ownership, belong to the ordinary incidents of property and are ipso facto enforceable in law. Natural rights are themselves subject to restriction at the instance of easements. In the case of an easementary right there is no distinction in case of interference with light and air about the adjoining occupier being either a trespasser or an owner.

Transfer of Property Act (XV of 1882), section 53—Scope of—Actual indebtedness at the time of transfer—If necessary—Effect of declaring a transfer void under—If annuls the transaction altogether—Proof required to avoid a transaction.

It is undoubted law that when a transfer is declared void as against creditors under section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act, the result is not to annul it altogether, but only to render it inoperative as against creditors and that too only to the extent necessary to satisfy their claims, and subject to their claims the transaction is valid and enforceable. (Story's Equity Jurisprudence, section 371, cited with approval). A creditor having the right to avoid a transaction under section 53, Transfer of Property Act, can do so by any act which shows clearly and unambiguously an intention to avoid it. The right to avoid does not depend on the ability to establish fraud in a court of law, though its practical worth will be nothing without it.

It is well settled that when a decree-holder entitled to avoid a transfer of property under section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act has elected to do so by bringing the properties to sale in execution of his decree, that avoidance enures for the benefit of the auction purchaser, notwithstanding that he is not himself a creditor or a transferee.

It is not necessary that a man should be actually indebted at the time he enters into a voluntary settlement to make it fraudulent, for if a man does it with a view to his being indebted at a future time it is equally fraudulent and ought to be set aside.

In order to bring the applications in execution within the scope of section 47 two conditions must be satisfied. First is that it must be a question arising between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed. The second is that it must relate to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree. The word 'and' in this connection in section 47 (1) appears to be highly significant. It would be opening an avenue of abuse if a plaintiff were to include as defendants in a suit quite improperly, persons who are really unnecessary, and while not being able to have any issue decided as between him and them in the suit itself, be permitted to pursue remedies against them in execution under section 47, Civil Procedure Code and have them determined without the payment of any court-fee. Courts cannot take cognizance of actions where persons want to establish their rights to certain honours unconnected with any obligations or duty to perform any service. If the honours are claimed as attached inseparably to an office as part of its emoluments, then civil courts are entitled to make declaration of the rights to such honours. Without an office if one claims to be entitled to rights by virtue of his eminent position as the head of a religious sect or otherwise of some importance in the field of religion quite unconnected with any kind of service which he could be compelled or obliged to perform, it will not be open to him to have such rights agitated in a civil court. Any honours which have to be treated not as mere honours but as emoluments must relate to or be connected with an office and the performance of a duty connected with the temple. Without that connection between the emoluments and the office it cannot be held that the rights arising out of the emoluments could form part of the subject-matter of a civil suit.

It has been held that the word 'person' in section 10 of the Indian Limitation Act includes a joint family and therefore if certain properties are impressed with the character of trust, the trustee family, by becoming sub-divided, cannot throw out that character. If by an arrangement in the family, one person is to discharge certain religious duties, that does not mean that the family as such renounced the trusteeship and the other members can claim to be holding trust properties adversely to the trust. It cannot be contended for a moment that by dividing the trust properties between themselves the members (of a joint family) have in any way disclaimed the interest of the trust in the properties.

Where the review of the evidence shows that the lower Court failed to draw the correct and clear inferences from proved facts and the findings are clearly wrong and unreasonable though not perverse or foolish, the High Court will not hesitate to interfere and set aside the order of acquittal. Code of Civil Procedure (V of 1908), Order 22, rule 3—Application under—Condition requisite—Application to come on record in the place of a deceased plaintiff—If applicant should be a legal representative in the strict sense—Survival of the right to sue—Sufficiency.

To entitle one to apply under Order 22, rule 3, it is necessary that he should first establish that he is a legal representative of the deceased plaintiff and then satisfy that the right to sue has survived over to him, when alone he could be allowed to bring himself on record and continue the suit. It is sufficient under Order 22, rule 3 if it is found that the right to sue survives to the applicant who desires to bring himself on record, though he may not strictly come within the definition of 'Legal Representative' under the Code.

In order therefore to entitle a person to bring himself on record as the legal representative or as a co-plaintiff to continue the suit, what he has previously to establish is that the right to sue has survived to him even though he may not be strictly the legal representative in the sense that he represents the estate of the deceased person.

Hindu Law—Stridhana property of a woman—Right of illegitimate daughter to succeed.

An illegitimate daughter of a Hindu woman is entitled to succeed to the stridhanam of the mother, though her right beyond succeeding to her mother's estate has not been recognised. Once it is held that there exists heritable blood between the mother and the illegitimate daughter, it is rather difficult to conceive how that ceases to exist beyond the mother, that is where she claims entitled to inherit her grandmother's estate.

Illegitimacy is no bar to succession to women's stridhanam. Whatever may be the rules regarding succession of illegitimate sons to their putative father's property in so far as illegitimate stridhana heirs are concerned, either daughter or daughter's daughter or son or son's son they would be entitled to succeed to their mothers' estate in preference to the other heirs.

Hindu Women's Right to Property Act (XVIII of 1937) and the Hindu Women's Right to Property (Amendment Act) (XI of 1938) and Madras Act (XVI of 1947)—Extension to agricultural land—Validity.

The effect of what is compendiously styled as "referential legislation" is to put the sections of a former Act into a latter Act just as if they had been written into it for the first time. This form of legislation was recognised and adopted with a view to extend the provisions of the two Central Acts (XVIII of 1937) and (XI of 1938) to agricultural lands in the Governor's provinces. On a reading of the sections themselves of the Madras Act (XVI of 1947) it is clear that the intention of the Legislature was to extend the provisions of the two Central Acts to agricultural lands and by implication they were actually so extended. It was not an attempt on the part of the Legislature to amend the Central Act and the Madras Act is valid and the provisions of the two Central Acts apply to agricultural land in the province.

Hindu Women's Right to Property Act (XVIII of 1937), section 3 (2)—Scope—Status of the widow if that of a coparcener—Hindu Law rights of the widow—If enlarged by the statute—Right to question alienations as a coparcener—Right of maintenance if taken away.

The Hindu Women's Right to Property Act does not enlarge the rights of a widow except to the limited extent provided therein, namely, to ask for a partition of her husband's share which she would, however, be entitled to hold and enjoy as a Hindu women's estate, and her position and status in the joint family is not in any way affected or varied by the enactment. She continues to be a member of the joint family and does not become a coparcener however much she might have become entitled to the interest which her husband possessed in the joint family properties.

The word 'interest' in section 3 (2) of the Act cannot mean that all the right, title and interest which her husband had, she became entitled to including a right of action which he would have had to question an alienation if he had been alive. It only means the quantum of interest which the husband would be entitled to in the joint family properties.

The widow's general right to be maintained out of the joint family estate has not been taken away by the Act, since there is no reference to it. Such a right is still available and the option would rest with her to claim maintenance or a share, but not both.

It makes no difference whether the person against whom execution is sought is a party to the appeal or not, any more than whether the appeal related to the entire subject-matter of the suit or only to a part thereof. The essential requirements of a notice under this are that the addressee should be identified and must have received the communication; secondly, there should be no vagueness or indefiniteness about the person giving the notice and who must also be the person filing the suit and the notice must also give the details which are specified in that section and thirdly, two months' time allowed must expire before the suit is laid. Once these requirements are satisfied, minor details like the misdescription of the person to whom the communication is addressed would not make it an improper notice which does not comply with the requirements of section 80, Civil Procedure Code.

If after the execution of a deed of gift, the deed was delivered to the donee, but the registration of the document took place later, the acceptance of the deed after the execution would complete the gift and make it irrevocable. The acceptance by the donee must, however, be during the lifetime of the donor. The fact that the deed was executed and registered would not make it irrevocable if in fact there was no acceptance by the donee either before registration but after execution or even after registration.

If there was no delivery of the deed and the possession of the properties to the donee it may be open to the donee to prove by cogent evidence that there were other modes of acceptance, for example, a letter written immediately after the execution of the document. Anterior negotiations or talks about the transfer of property by way of gift would not amount to acceptance of the transfer of the property by gift. Acceptance may be implied but mere passive acquiescence such as standing by when the deed was executed or registered is no acceptance.

Prima facie a suit for a mere declaration that a compromise decree is not binding on a plaintiff and where no consequential relief is prayed for would fall under Article 17-A (i) of Schedule II of the Court-fees Act.

It is not correct to so construe section 9 of the Suits Valuation Act as to confer a power on the High Court to provide for a separate class of suits not falling within any of the classes mentioned in the body of the Court-fees Act or in the schedules. Nor can a rule framed under section 9 of that Act provide whether court-fee should be calculated on an ad valorem basis or on a fixed basis. Section 9 of that Act deals with that class of suits which does not admit of being satisfactorily valued and provides that the High Court may provide for the valuation of such suits. It does not interfere in any manner with the scheme relating to classification of suits provided in the body of the Court-fees Act and its schedules. If the rule were to be construed to have this effect, it would be in excess of the powers conferred by section 9 of the Suits Valuation Act.

In a suit filed to obtain a declaratory decree where no consequential relief is prayed, which does not fall within the category of suits provided for by section 7 (iv-a) of the Court-Fees Act, court-fee is not leviable on an ad valorem basis on the value of the subject-matter of the suit computed in accordance with Rule 2 of the rules framed by the High Court under section 9 of the Suits Valuation Act, in 1943.

Having regard to the modern social conditions the general presumption must be that when one of the members of a joint family insures his life the amount of the policy belongs to the assured as his separate property and does not become a joint family asset. No doubt, if there is a clear indication that the member did not intend to treat it as his separate asset, the position would be different. In a case where each of the several members of the family has taken a policy in his name the presumption becomes stronger that the policies were not part of the joint family assets.

A.A.O. No. 76 of 1949.

Malabar Law—Gift to a member of a tavazhi—Presumption as to tarwad property.

It is now settled law that if a gift is made to an entity which constitutes a tavazhi as such, then the presumption is that the donor intends that the gift should have all the incidents of tarwad property attached to it.

(1939) 1 M.L.J. 604, distinguished.

If the donees constitute a natural group according to the Marumakkathayam Law capable of acquiring and owning property, there is no reason why this presumption should not be applied to them. The degree of propinquity between the donors and the donees is immaterial and affords no test. Where a Marumakkathayam donor gives properties to the children of the same mother or to a member of a tavazhi without any express indication that an absolute alienable estate was granted, the presumption is that the donor intended to confer only an estate with all the incidents of tarwad property.

S.A. No. 1167 of 1949.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), section 92—Proviso 2—Scope of—Oral evidence to 'add to' the terms of a document—When inadmissible.

A contemporaneous oral agreement which has the effect of reducing a sale to a mortgage is not provable in view of section 92 of the Evidence Act. If, however, the parties did not seek to establish a mortgage by oral evidence but intend to prove an oral agreement to reconvey, which is a distinct transaction, Section 92 of the Evidence Act does not stand in the way. If the arrangement pleaded amounts to a single transaction of the nature of a mortgage, and if the agreement to reconvey is oral it is hit at by section 92 of the Evidence Act. The words 'adding to' occurring in section 92 of the Evidence Act contemplates the addition to the terms of the sale deed and not a collateral matter, which is added on by the agreement.

C.R.P. No. 2199 of 1951.

Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908), Order 37, rule 2—Summary suits—Leave to defend—Power of Court to extend time—Limitation Act—Article 159—Applicability.

It is true that there is no specific provision in Order 37, rule 2, Civil Procedure Code, or in the Limitation Act empowering a Court to condone a delay in appearance beyond the ten days prescribed by the summons in Form No. 4 of Schedule B, Civil Procedure Code. But if the Court has passed no decree it clearly has ample discretion to give the defendant such leave, notwithstanding the fact that he has not appeared within ten days of the service of the summons on him in Form No. 4, Appendix B of the Code.

(1949) 1 M.L.J. 514, approved.

It is somewhat incongruous that a court which, after passing a decree on default of appearance can set aside the same should have no power, before passing the decree to extend the time for applying for leave to defend.

The period of ten days fixed under Article 159 of the Limitation Act is not an inflexible one. It can be construed only as prescribing the period of ten days, when the summons does not specifically fix a date for the hearing.

Representation of the People Act (XLIII of 1951), section 85—Powers of Election Commission under—Provisions if mandatory—Election Tribunal—If subordinate to Election Commission—Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908)—Applicability—Powers of amendment to Tribunal.

On the true construction, section 85 of the Representation of the People Act does not make it imperative on the part of the Election Commission to dismiss an election petition for defective verification and secondly, whatever might be the powers of the Election Commission under section 85 when once the matter comes before the Tribunal, it is thereafter governed by section 90 (4) of the Act and under this section the Tribunal has a discretion in the matter of dismissing the petition for non-compliance with the requirements, of section 83.

The use of the word "shall" in section 85 is not conclusive and the intention of the Legislature must be gathered on a reading of the enactment as a whole. The fact that the Tribunal is given a discretion under section 90 (4) goes far to support the view that section 85 should not be construed as mandatory. The cumulative effect of the provision in section 85, proviso, section 83 (3) and section 90 (4) is to lead to the conclusion that the words "shall dismiss" in section 85 should be construed as meaning "shall have the power to dismiss".

Under section 83 (1) which makes Order 6, Civil Procedure Code, applicable to election petitions, a defective verification is a mere irregularity and does not affect the jurisdiction.

Even assuming that the only jurisdiction of an Election Commission was to dismiss a petition under section 85 still when once the matter comes up before the Tribunal under section 86, thereafter the powers of the Election Tribunal are those which are conferred on it by the statute and such powers are not controlled by the limitations on the powers of the Election Commission under the Act. The Election Tribunal is in no sense a body subordinate to the Election Commission. Both are two independent bodies operating in the same field but at different stages and with different powers.

The question whether Order 6, rule 17, Civil Procedure Code, is as such applicable to proceedings before the Election Tribunal is not free from doubt. Section 83 (3) permits only amendment of particulars included in the list or the inclusion of better particulars in regard to any matters referred to in the list and that would seem to negative a general power of amendment which the civil courts possess under Order 6, rule 17, Civil Procedure Code. Every Tribunal has inherent jurisdiction to permit clerical and formal amendments.

Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act (IV of 1938), section 23-A—Applicability—Conditions for—Sales confirmed long before the amending Act—If affected—Amending Act XXIII of 1948—Effect of.

The clause 'may apply to the Court within 90 days of such amendment or of the confirmation of the sale, whichever is later' in section 23-A of the Madras Act IV of 1938 as amended by Act XXIII of 1948 has reference only to the two conditions laid down earlier in the section, namely, where the confirmation had not taken place or where it had taken place within ninety days of the commencement of the amending Act. The expression 'whichever is later' means only 'whichever is the case'. In other words this section applies only to sales whose confirmation had not yet taken place at the commencement of the amending Act or which have been confirmed within 90 days of the commencement of the Act. The section does not touch sales which have been confirmed more than 90 days before the coming into force of the amending Act.

Constitution of India (1950), Article 227 (1)—Powers of Superintendence of High Court—Scope of.

Article 227 (1) of the Constitution of India (which is a substantial re-enactment of section 107 of the Government of India Act, 1915 and section 15 of the earlier Charter Act) has never been understood to confer a right on the High Court as such to interfere with the judicial orders and judgments made and passed by individual Judges or Division Benches of the High Court. It cannot be said that a Judge of the High Court disposing of a Civil Miscellaneous Appeal is a Court within the meaning of Art. 227 (1) of the Constitution and that the High Court has power of superintendence over him, so that it could interfere with his judgments. The power of the High Court under Art. 227 (1) is confined to subordinate Courts and judicial and quasi-judicial tribunals which are also subordinate to it. A Judge of the High Court is not as such subordinate to the High Court.

Criminal Procedure Code (V of 1898), section 93-A—Warrants from External Courts—Executability—Scope—Court—Commissioner of Police, Madras, if a Court.

Though the Commissioner of Police, Madras, may have the powers of Presidency Magistrates by virtue of section 7, Criminal Procedure Code, they are not Courts of Presidency Magistrates under the Code. In the Code wherever there is a reference to the Presidency Magistrate it could only mean and refer to the Presidency Magistrates appointed under section 18 of the Code. There is no definition of Court in any of the Acts, and certainly there is none in the Criminal Procedure Code. But a Court is ordinarily understood as a place where Justice is judicially administered.

Unless there is a special provision making section 93-A applicable to the Commissioner of Police, it will fall within the general prohibition that the Code will not apply to the Commissioner of Police.

The phrase "at some future date" in section 2 (ii) of the Order of 1943 is not the same as "on a future date". It only means at some time in future. A contract to sell goods is assignable by a seller and equally a contract to buy goods is assignable by the buyer. Constitution of India (1950), Article 133, clause (1) (b)—Leave to appeal to Supreme Court.

Where in a suit or appeal the real relief asked for is with respect to a trusteeship which is not capable of valuation as such, paragraph (i) of section 110, Civil Procedure Code and clause (1) (a) of Article 133 of the Constitution cannot in strict terms apply. Clause (1) (b) of Article 133 of the Constitution is in pari materia with the second paragraph of section 110, Civil Procedure Code. That paragraph applies to cases where the decree awards a particular sum or property of a particular value or refuses that relief, that is, where the subject-matter of the dispute is of a particular value. If it is impossible to estimate in money or by any pecuniary standard, the loss or detriment which the applicant has suffered by the passing of the decree from which it is sought to obtain leave to appeal then section 110, Civil Procedure Code, would not apply.

The subject-matter of the dispute, in the instant case, being the trusteeship and not any property, section 110 (1), Civil Procedure Code or Article 133 (1) of the Constitution would not apply.

A mere violation of rule 27-A (1) (a) of the Election Rules under Madras Act No. of 1920 is not sufficient to invalidate an election and it must further, be shown that the result of the election has been affected thereby. Rule 27-A (1) (a) requires that the ballot papers marked in such a manner as to disclose the identity of the elector should be rejected. If all the ballot papers are marked so as to violate rule 27-A (1) (a), all of them will have to be rejected and the result is there is no person who can be said to have been elected.

Criminal Procedure Code (V of 1898), sections 195 (5) and 144—Orders under—If Judicial—Additional First Class Magistrate—If subordinate to Additional District Magistrate.

The fact that under certain circumstances and for certain purposes mentioned in clause (3) of section 10 an Additional District Magistrate is considered as a subordinate to the District Magistrate clearly shows that the Additional District Magistrate does not enjoy the same status as that of a District Magistrate and by virtue of section 17 all Magistrates are subordinate to the District Magistrates.

It cannot now be disputed that the orders under section 144 Criminal Procedure Code are subject to the revisional jurisdiction of the High Court. I.L.R. 42 Mad. 64 : 35 M.L.J. 454, approved. 1923 M.W.N. 240 held to be not good law now.

If the order under section 144 is passed by an authority it must be treated as a Court when it sanctions prosecutions also. It is clear from the repeal of clause (3) of section 435, Criminal Procedure Code, that orders under section 144 is not only judicial but that the authority must be deemed to be acting as a Court.

Representation of the People Act (XLIII of 1951), section 39 (4)—Object of—Rules for counting of votes—If affects substantive rights.

It has often been observed that section 33 (6) and section 39 (4) proviso of the Representation of the People Act and similar provisions in Statutes in pari materia enact a rule of evidence and that their object is to enable the Returning Officer to satisfy himself as provided in section 33 (5) of the Act. The proviso to section 39 (4) therefore is not to prescribe ordeals for the intending candidates to undergo but to provide guides to the Returning Officer in deciding on the identity of the candidates and of the proposer and seconder.

A rule providing for a method of counting of the votes is prima facie procedural and they do not affect or impair any substantive rights. They only regulate the mode of its exercise. It may be that in certain cases changes in Rules, though they may ostensibly relate to matters of procedure, might in effect affect substantive rights.

Madras Aliyasantana Act (IX of 1949)—Section 35—Scope of—Right of an individual member to sue for partition.

The partition referred to in section 35 of Madras Act IX of 1949 is that of a branch or kavaru and an individual member who does not constitute a kavaru within the meaning of the proviso cannot ask for partition. The only right that is given by section 35 of the Act to the common ancestress by virtue of her position is to ask for a partition on behalf of the branch and not to claim her individual share in the family properties.

Section 38 of the Marumakathayam Act (Act XXII of 1933) concedes a right of partition to individual members who constituted a thavazhi. Where a member has the right to claim partition, his share or interest could be seized and sold in execution of a decree. It follows that if such right does not vest in the judgment-debtor the decree-holder cannot attach the interest of a member in the family.

Letters Patent (Madras)—Clause 15—Summary suit—High Court Original Side rules—Decision whether a particular suit would fall within the class of suits included under Order VII—Whether appealable under Clause 15 of the Letters Patent—Judgment within Clause 15—What is.

If the effect of an order, whatever its form may be, and whatever may be the nature of the application in which it is made, is to put an end to the suit or proceeding so far as the Court before which the suit or proceeding is pending is concerned, or if its effect, if it is not complied with, is to put an end to the suit or proceeding, the adjudication is a judgment within the meaning of clause 15 of the Letters Patent.

An order by the Judge in chambers, allowing an appeal from an order of the Master that a suit is properly instituted under Order 7 of the Original Side Rules is not an order which puts an end to the suit or proceeding though the party aggrieved by the order did suffer an injury for the time. It cannot be treated either as an order on an independent proceeding ancillary to the suit such as, for example, an order on an application for interim injunction or for the appointment of a receiver, which might be a judgment within the meaning of the clause.

An order which regulates the procedure according to which the suit is to be tried does not in any way affect the merits of the questions at issue between the parties by determining some right or liability.

Trust Act (II of 1882)—Sections 48 and 52—Trustees if can delegate their powers—Number of trustees—If majority of them could represent the trust—Trustees—Duties of—Trustee prohibited absolutely from getting an interest in the Trust properties.

The Trust Act does not empower the trustees to delegate their power and the Act has also given specific instances where one trustee out of two or more trustees can act so as to bind the entire trust; none of these provisions confer powers on the majority to deal with trust property by transferring them.

Under section 48 of the Indian Trusts Act where there are several trustees the property is vested in all the trustees and cannot be legally divested by only a majority of the trustees executing a document of transfer of trust property.

42 Ch.D. 23 : (1945) 1 M.L.J. 97, followed. Lewin on Trusts 15th, Edn., page 190, referred.

Even in the absence of any statutory prohibition the right course for a trustee should be, not to obtain any sale of trust property in his favour or in favour of any member of his family or an agent on his behalf however much the transaction might initially be considered to be a fair and reasonable bargain entered into in the interests of the cestui que trust. In any event, a trustee should not buy trust property, however much he may be authorised under the trust deed unless he has made an attempt to sell the estate to third parties and failed in the attempt and the only course open to him to carry out his obligation was to sell to himself.

The words 'No trustee may buy trust property, in section 52 of the Indian Trust Act does not give a discretion to the trustee but amounts to a positive prohibition.

Case-law discussed.

It is a well established principle in the Law of Trust that a trustee is under a disability to purchase trust property and this is incorporated in sections 52 and 53 of the Indian Trust Act.

Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act (IV of 1938)—Amending Act XXIII of 1948—Section 16—Scope—Party when barred from claiming the benefit of section 19.

Section 16 (1) of the Amending Act XXIII of 1948 applies to suits instituted after the commencement of the Act; clause (ii), to suits or proceedings instituted before the commencement of the Act in which no decree or order has been passed which has become final and clause (iii) to suits or proceedings in which the decree or order passed has not been executed in full before the commencement of this Act. A combined reading of the three provisions indicates that clause (ii) will apply if the decree or order had not become final before the Act and clause (iii) if the decree or order, though became final, was not satisfied before the commencement of the Act. (1952) 1 M.L.J. 264 (F.B.), followed.

Pardanashin lady—Who is—Execution of a document by pardanashin lady—Onus of proof as to voluntary nature—Presumption as to validity—Scope of.

A pardanashin lady has been defined by the Privy Council as a woman of rank, Hindu or Muhammadan, who lives in seclusion, shut in the zenana, and having no communication except from behind the parda or screen with any male person save a few privileged relations or dependants. To be entitled to the protection of the rules which apply to pardanashins, a woman need not necessarily be a 'woman of rank'; the rules are equally applicable to poor women who are illiterate and ignorant even if not pardanashin. Mere execution by a pardanashin lady, although unaccompanied by duress, protest, or obvious signs of misunderstanding or want of comprehension, is in itself no real proof of a true understanding mind in the executant. In the case of a deed executed by a pardanashin the question is not whether she knew what she was doing, had done, or proposed to do, but how her intention to act was produced; and the onus is cast on the person relying on the disposition, to establish that the transaction is one which the disponent thoroughly comprehended, and deliberately and of her own free will carried out. The mere declaration of the executant subsequently made, that she had not understood what she was doing, is not in itself conclusive. If, having regard to the proved personality of the executant, the nature of the deed, the circumstances under which it was executed, and the whole history of the parties, it is reasonably established that the deed executed was the free and intelligent act of the executant, the onus which rests upon the party relying on the deed is discharged.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), section 53-A—Applicability—Contract and instrument of transfer—Tests.

The case of an instrument of transfer is put in the alternative in section 53-A of the Transfer of Property Act. Consequently, the section applies not only to contracts of transfer as such but also to instruments of transfer. The words "not contemplated in the manner prescribed by law" have the effect of superseding the provisions not only of the Registration Act but also of the Transfer of Property Act as to registration and attestation. But the section would not apply if the instrument could not be proved for some other reason, for example, if the original is unstamped and lost so that secondary evidence becomes inadmissible.

An unregistered sale-deed which is a document in writing and which contains all the terms enabling acts of part performance unequivocally referable to it and which has changed the relative positions of the parties as to the subject-matter of the contract and which is much more than an act preparatory to the completion of a contract is certainly an instrument of transfer as contemplated in the latter portion of section 53-A.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Partition—Evidence of—Effect—Reunion—How proved—Acquisition of property by joint family manager—Presumption as to self-acquisition.

It is well settled law that an agreement between the members of a Hindu joint family whereby they appoint arbitrators to divide the joint family property among them, amounts to a severance of the joint status of the family from the date of the agreement. The legal effect of such a document cannot be controlled or altered by evidence of subsequent conduct of the parties who may after severance make physical division of the property or may decide to live together and enjoy the property in common. Once there is a division in a joint Hindu family, whether, of status or property, there is no means of avoiding the result except by a reunion, for which an agreement express or implied, is always required.

(1938) 2 M.L.J. 234 (P.C.) and (1948) 2 M.L.J. 331, followed.

When a joint family representative dies it becomes a question of pure fact as to whether he represented the joint family in a partnership business venture or embarked on it in his individual capacity. If for the purposes of starting a trade a member of a Hindu joint family got assistance by way of a contribution from the joint family funds without any further assistance from the joint family it is reasonable to extend the principle of the Hindu Gains of Learning Act to such a case. On principle there is no reason why a manager of a Hindu joint family, whether he be the eldest son or the de facto manager, should be placed under a strong disability (as compared with his urban counterpart or an educated man who leaves his village and lives in a town) as regards his right to regard the property he acquired by his own exertions, initiative and enterprise as his self-acquired property.

Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act (IV of 1938) (amending Act XXIII of 1948), section 23 (A)—“Entitled to the benefit of the Act”—Meaning of—Section 19—Rights under—If purely procedural.

The Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act is intended to help the agriculturists and therefore the expression “entitled to the benefits of the Act” should be given a liberal interpretation. It cannot be restricted to the benefits conferred under sections 8, 9 and 9-A alone. Section 19 of the Act was introduced by section 10 of the Madras Act XXIII of 1948 in order to obviate certain hardships which arose out of the decisions which held that an agriculturist cannot get the decree scaled down if he has not asked for the benefits under the Act before the decree was passed. The result of introduction of section 19 is that even though the debtor did not invoke the provisions of the Act before the decree was passed it was open to him to have the decree scaled down thereafter if he is an agriculturist. It is difficult to say that the right to get the decree reduced is only a matter of procedure. The intention is to give the benefit to such of those agriculturist-debtors who out of ignorance or for some other reason were not able to have the decree subsequently reopened and amended in view of section 19 (2). If section 19 (2) of the Act is not interpreted as granting the benefit to the agriculturists then the entire purpose and object of the Act would be nullified. The right of getting a decree amended and scaled down even after it had become final is a substantive right, and is not a procedural right.

Adverse possession—Property of tenants in common in possession of one co-tenant—When adverse to others—Proof.

Although as a general rule a possession of one co-tenant is not deemed adverse to the other co-tenants, the existence of the relation of co-tenancy does not preclude one co-tenant from establishing an adverse possession in fact as against the other co-tenants. But the burden of proving the adverse nature of his possession lies on him who sets up the title by adverse possession and the evidence with regard to that point must be viewed from that standpoint. Every case of adverse possession by a co-sharer must be considered on its own facts and the principle that the possession of one co-sharer is in law the possession of all should not be pressed too far. The true owner must be equally vigilant and it does not prevent time running if he could have obtained but did not actually obtain knowledge of the adequate, continuous and exclusive adverse possession of others.

The words 'has paid' in section 8 (2) and the words 'sums repaid' in section 8 (3) must be construed to mean 'treated as having been paid to the decree-holder.' There is, of course, no doubt that a liability to pay interest, like a liability to make any other payment, may be satisfied by a transference of assets other than cash and that a receipt in kind may be receipt of interest. Section 7 (2) of the Agriculturists' Relief Act does not prevent the decree being executed in so far as the decree is valid against the judgment-debtor. The prohibition under section 7 (2), seems to be only to the execution of the decree in excess of the scaled down debt.

The principle underlying rule 1 of order 17 of the Civil Procedure Code is that a party who is ready to proceed with the suit should be awarded such costs as can be held to be "occasioned by the adjournment," and this can be made reasonable compensation for the expenses incurred by reason of the adjournment. "Occasioned by the adjournment" is deliberately used in order that the discretion of the Court should not be restricted to the taxable costs of the day. Of course the condition imposed should not be in the nature of a penalty or punishment to the party asking for adjournment and hence, the costs awarded should in no case exceed the sum necessary for the expenses which in the opinion of the Court the party ready to proceed with the suit reasonably incurs as a result of the adjournment. Sufficient opportunity should also be given to the party to obey the order. The payment of costs may be made as a condition precedent to the adjournment.

Madras Co-operative Societies Act (VI of 1932), section 51 (1)—Scope of the words, 'touching the business of the Society'—Submitting to the jurisdiction of the Registrar—If jurisdiction of the Registrar can be questioned later.

Every activity of a Co-operative Society within the ambit of the sections of the Co-operative Societies Act, the rules and the bye-laws of the Society would be a matter 'touching the business of the Society.' If a bye-law not being ultra vires empowers a Society to do a particular act that act would be the business of the Society. Therefore the adjudication of the Deputy Registrar setting aside the election of the petitioners as directors of a Society which is provided for in the bye-laws is a decision within the jurisdiction of the Deputy Registrar.

The fact that the petitioners did not object to the jurisdiction of the Deputy Registrar before the Deputy Registrar or by carrying of the matter in revision to the Registrar does not preclude the petitioners from questioning the jurisdiction of the Deputy Registrar if it is a case of total want of jurisdiction going to the root of the matter.

It will be noticed that time will run from the date of knowledge only where the summons is not duly served. Where summons is duly served the date of the applicant's knowledge of the decree is immaterial and it may still run from the date of the decree. The summons cannot be stated to be duly served for the purposes of this article where it has been served on the defendant too late and it did not afford him an opportunity to appear at the hearing of the suit. Police Act (V of 1861), section 30 (1) and (2)—Scope of—"Thoroughfare"—Meaning of—"As occasion requires"—Scope of—Power of the police officer to pass a general prohibitory order for a remote possibility.

The mere existence of factions and the coming into being of a protracted state of what may be called cold war between factions would not come within the meaning of "occasion" under sub-section (1) of section 30 of the Police Act. Sub-section (1) is not intended to control every contingency.

Every public place will not necessarily become a thoroughfare unless that place is used as a passage for the people to pass through. In order to constitute a thoroughfare it is not essential that the public should have a right to ride or drive over it. It is enough if they have a right to walk across, but the right to pass and repass is essential.

The clause "which would, in the judgment of the Magistrate of the district, or of the sub-division of a district, if uncontrolled, be likely to cause a breach of the peace" in sub-section (2) of section 30 covers both the word "procession" and the word "assembly." In so far as it is likely to obstruct the traffic, sufficient provision exists in sub-section (1) of section 30 in the Act to exercise control. Sub-section (2) of section 30 of the Act does not contemplate a general order over a prolonged stretch of time so as to take in "assemblies" or "processions" which at the time the order is issued nobody has even thought of collecting or forming. What the sub-section visualises is something proximate, something concrete, some particular assembly or assemblies, some particular procession or processions. But it does not empower the Superintendent to lay down a general interdict.

MARCH OF LAW : 1952

During the year that has just come to a close a number of decisions have been rendered illuminating many dark corners of the different branches of law. The mills of the judiciary may grind slowly but they do it none the less steadily. An attempt is made here to review the more important of the decisions given during 1952 and reported in the columns of this Journal.

HIGH COURT : POWERS AND JURISDICTION.—In its decision in *Ponnuwami v. Returning Officer, Namakkal*¹, the Supreme Court makes it clear that the High Court has no jurisdiction under Article 226 of the Constitution in respect of matters provided for in Article 329 which covers all "electoral matters." In *Veerappa Pillai v. Raman and Raman*², the Supreme Court points out that however extensive may be the High Court's jurisdiction under Article 226, it is not extensive enough to enable the High Court to convert itself into a Court of appeal and examine for itself the correctness of the decision impugned and decide what is the proper view to be taken. *Cosmopolitan Club v. Deputy-Commercial Tax Officer*³, recognises that the High Court's power to issue directions or writs under Article 226 does not require that the petitioner should be confined or restricted to a particular writ on English precedents and a petition for certiorari cannot be dismissed on the ground that the correct remedy would be by way of mandamus or prohibition. *Chandra v. Madras State*⁴ holds that where a suit is the proper remedy the High Court will not ordinarily grant an order under Article 226. Chenchamma Naidu v. Praja Seva Transports, Ltd.,⁵ lays down that where the High Court's civil jurisdiction is invoked under Article 226, the Civil Procedure Code becomes applicable to the proceedings. In *Subbiah v. Raghavulu*⁶, it is decided that the High Court cannot interfere under Article 226 with executive direction by a magistrate to the police to take a particular action under section 107, Criminal Procedure Code. In *Ramakrishna Reddy v. State of Madras*⁷, the Supreme Court takes the view that section 2 (3) of the Contempt of Courts Act excludes the High Court's jurisdiction only in cases where the acts alleged to constitute contempt of a subordinate court are punishable as contempt under specific provisions of the Penal Code, but not where the acts merely amount to offences of other descriptions for which punishment has been provided for in the Penal Code.

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW : In *Lotus Industrials v. State of Madras*⁸, it is held that the Constitution does not preclude classification even by bodies other than the Legislature and that the division of consumers of yarn into "consumer quota holders" and others and the preferential treatment accorded to them by clause 30 of the Cotton Textiles Control Order cannot be held to be discriminatory and in contravention of Article 14 of the Constitution. *Thamsi Goundan v. Kanni Ammal*¹, takes the view that there is no infringement of Article 14 by reason of the classification in section 488, Criminal Procedure Code, in favour of women more particularly wives and that too deserted by their husbands, without a similar provision in favour of men. An interesting decision on Article 14 is that in *Rajah of Bobbili v. State of Madras*², which holds that the Madras Estates Land (Reduction of Rent) Act, 1947, does not make any distinction between one landholder and another or one tenant and another and is only an illustration of the constitutional practice of classification which is reasonable and permissible. *Ramakrishniah v. President, District Board, Nellore*³, decides that the exercise of any of the fundamental rights like the right of free speech or freedom of association cannot be made subject to the discretionary control of administrative or executive authority and Madras G.O. No. 416, Education, dated 24th February, 1939, empowering the Director of Public Instruction to forbid the existence of and dissolve any Teachers' Union not conforming to the rules and compelling teachers in Local Board or Municipal service to obtain permission of the Board or Council concerned before forming unions, etc., is void as opposed to Article 19 (1) of the Constitution. In *Shamdasani v. The Central Bank of India*⁴, the Supreme Court points out that Article 19 is intended to protect the fundamental freedoms assured to the citizen by clause 1 against State action other than the legitimate exercise of its powers to regulate private rights in the public interest and is not intended to prevent wrongful individual acts or to provide protection against merely private conduct. The decision in *Rajah of Bobbili v. State of Madras*², holds that there is no inviolable and absolute right in the landholder to collect any particular rent, that the Legislature could always provide for the ascertainment of a fair and proper rent notwithstanding any contract or usage and there is nothing in the Madras Estates Land (Reduction of Rent) Act, 1947, inconsistent with the provisions of Article 19(1) (f) read with Article 19 (5). *Vallinayagam Pillai v. State of Madras*⁵, takes the view that the right of a citizen under Article 19 (1) (g) to carry on any business should be read with Article 19 (6) which contemplates that the State may impose reasonable restrictions in the interests of the general public, and the refusal of license to a touring cinema on ground of instructions from local government is no violation of fundamental rights. The same view is taken in *Sheik Abdul Khadir, & Co. v. Subramania Pillai*⁶. The decision in *Indian Metal & Metallurgical Corporation v. Industrial Tribunal, Madras*⁷, makes it clear that the right conferred by Article 19, (1) (g) to carry on any business is not absolute, that the State has the right to regulate any business and it is not confined to public utility business only: but, if a citizen has a right to carry on a business it must follow he must have the liberty not to carry it on if he so chooses and hence an award of an Industrial Tribunal directing a person to continue to carry on a business is void as inconsistent with the Constitution. *Anantakrishnan v. State of Madras*⁸, holds that even if the right to act and plead is to be deemed comprised in the right to practise the profession guaranteed under Article 19 (1) (g) there is nothing in the Constitution to exempt such right wholly from the taxing power of the State, and the proper way to reconcile the rights guaranteed under Article 19 and the power to tax contained in the several provisions of the Constitution is that if the taxation is for legitimate revenue purposes then it is not invalid merely because it may adversely affect any of the fundamental rights. In *State of Bihar v. Sailabala Devi*⁹, the Supreme Court decides that the restrictions imposed by section 4 (1) (a) of the Indian Press (Emergency Powers) Act on freedom of speech and expression are solely directed against the undermining of the security of the State or the overthrow of it and are within the ambit of Article 19 (2) of the Constitution. *Balakrishna v. State of Madras*¹⁰, points out that the "total" prohibition of the exercise of any right cannot be justified as a "reasonable" restriction within the meaning of the expression as it occurs in Article 19 (5) and (6), and will be invalid unless it is for a short and prescribed time ; consequently, it is doubtful whether the prohibition of acquisition and installation of new looms imposed in terms by clause 12 (4) of the Cotton Textile (Control) Order, 1948, is valid having regard to the rights conferred on the citizen by Article 19 (1) (f) and (g). In Devanugraham, In re¹, it is held that Article 20 (2) does not take away the right to institute a second prosecution when the first is found to be a nullity by reason of want of necessary sanction. *Satyavathi v. State of Madras*², lays down that acquisition of lands for providing house-sites for Adi-Andhras would be a public purpose within the meaning of Article 31. *Shamdasani v. Central Bank of India*³ lays down that the words " save by authority of law " in Article 31 show that it is a prohibition of unauthorised governmental action against private property and is not intended to prevent wrongful individual acts. In *Janaki v. Srirangammal*⁴, it is pointed out that an order of the High Court rejecting an application under Order 41, rule 19, of the Civil Procedure Code, to restore and rehear an appeal dismissed for default of appearance is neither a judgment, nor a decree, nor a final order, and is a matter of procedure only, and no appeal will lie to the Supreme Court under Article 133 of the Constitution. The decision of the Supreme Court in *State of Bombay v. P. J. Naick*⁵, makes it clear that Article 166 (1) does not require a magic incantation which can only be expressed in a set formula of words and what is to be looked at is whether the substance of the requirements is there. Ramamurthi, In re⁶, emphasises that the right which is the foundation of a petition under Article 226 is a personal and individual right and the High Court's power can only be invoked at the instance of a person who has a personal grievance against an act of the State, in its executive capacity, which inflicts a legal injury on him ; and the nomination of a member to the Legislative Council by the Governor does not infringe the personal right of any elected member, even indirectly, so as to entitle him to sustain an application for the issue of a writ of certiorari. In Chakkarai Chettiar, In re⁷, it is held that a writ of quo warranto also cannot be issued unless there is infraction of a personal right and the words " and for any other purpose " in Article 226 do not mean a purpose other than the protection of the legal rights of a person. Anandan Nambiar, In re⁸, takes the view that it is only in exceptional cases that writs under the wide powers— " for any other purpose "—in Article 226 can be issued, such as for instance, where there has been a clear violation of statutory law, or when principles of natural justice have been violated, or perhaps where there has been mala fide discrimination against an individual to the detriment of his rights. It is further held that a member of the Legislative Assembly lawfully detained, though without trial under the Preventive Detention Act cannot be permitted to attend the sittings of the House, though during such period he will have the right to correspond with the Speaker and Chairman of the Committee of Privileges of the House. In *Veerappa Pillai v. Raman and Raman*⁹, the Supreme Court expresses the view that writs under Article 226 are intended to be issued by the High Court in grave cases where the subordinate tribunals, bodies, or officers act wholly without jurisdiction or in excess of it or in violation of principles of natural justice, or refuse to exercise a jurisdiction vested in them, or there is an error apparent on the face of the record and such act, error, omission, or excess has resulted in manifest injustice ; but however extensive that jurisdiction may be the High Court cannot act as a Court of appeal and thus it cannot give a direction to the Regional Transport Authority to grant permits to a particular party. *Cosmopolitan Club v. Deputy Commercial Tax Officer*¹⁰, points out that the maintainability of writ petitions under Article 226 was impossible to circumscribe, define or restrict and the writs are all discretionary, dependent on the facts of each case and the nature of the illegality or wrong alleged.

*Chazdra v. Madras State*¹, expresses the view that where a suit is the proper and adequate remedy an order under Article 226 will not ordinarily be made. In *Sambandam v. The General Manager, S.I.R.*², it is stated that the rule that the Court will not ordinarily interfere under Article 226 with an order where there is another adequate remedy available to the party is a rule of discretion only, for the guidance of the Court and not a limitation on its power. *A. K. Gopalan, In re*³, stresses the principle that the Constitution does not allow reasons of state to influence the judgment of the Court and where an impugned order is vitiated by an intention on the part of the Government to evade a judgment of the High Court setting free a person under detention, somehow or other, the order cannot be upheld notwithstanding any belief on the part of government that the judgment of the High Court was erroneous. In *Ponnuswami v. Returning Officer, Namakkal*⁴, the Supreme Court holds that jurisdiction under Article 226 stands excluded in all matters provided for in Article 329 which covers all "electoral matters." *Chenchamma Naidu v. Praga Seva Transports, Ltd.*⁵, rules that where the High Court's civil jurisdiction under Article 226 is invoked the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code will be attracted to the proceeding. *Rajaram Reddi, In re*⁶, holds that a subordinate Court should only make a reference to the High Court when it is satisfied that a case pending before it involves a real or substantial question as to the validity of an Act and a mere plea that an Act is ultra vires will not suffice. *Govindarajulu Naidu v. State of Madras*⁷, is an important decision holding that Article 286 (1) (b) is limited to the period covered by the actual exportation or importation of goods and the power of the State to impose tax at any stage before or after is not affected, and further both in Article 286 (1) (b) and 286 (2) the State's power to tax export or import or inter-state trade is taken away only in respect of sales or purchases made directly in relation to the goods which are the subject-matter of the transportation, either in inter-state or international commerce, whether such sales take place prior to the commencement of the transport or during its progress. *Sambandam v. General Manager, S.I.R.*², points out that the rule that civil posts under the Government are held at pleasure is subject to the principles in Article 310 (2) as to payment of compensation, competency of the authority terminating the service, etc. *Michael v. Venkateswaran*⁸, holds that the Constitution (Scheduled Castes) Order, 1950, is valid and within the powers conferred on the President by Article 341 (1) of the Constitution.

CONTRACTS : In *Firm of T. N. Rao v. Ramakrishnappa*⁹, it is pointed out that when a contract in writing is signed by the parties, they are bound by the terms contained therein whether they take the trouble of reading them or not, and the principle extends to cases where the contract does not actually contain the terms but a reference is made to another document or contract where those terms are to be found. *Official Assignee of Madras v. Narayana Mudaliar*¹⁰, recognises that insolvency is not a disqualification preventing a person from entering into a contract within the meaning of section 11 of the Contract Act and there is nothing in law which prevents an insolvent who has not yet obtained his discharge from borrowing or making himself liable financially. *Nagappa Chettiar v. Veeyares & Co.*¹¹ holds that budla or forward contracts in shares are not void as opposed to section 23. In *Kedar Lal Seal v. Hari Lal Seal*¹², the Supreme Court makes it clear that section 43 dealing with contribution will stand excluded by section 82 of the Transfer of Property Act where the right to contribution arises out of a mortgage. The doctrine of frustration is considered in *Narasu v. P. S. V. Iyer*¹³ and it is held that it applies where there is implied in the contracts a condition that they will cease to be operative if the basis on which they rest disappears or becomes fundamentally altered ; but, this is only a rule of construction which must yield if the agreement discloses a contrary intention; and, the fact that the contract is a continuing one extending over a period fixed or indeterminate does not exclude the application of the doctrine of frustration; and, the nature of the trade is a material element in determining whether the events which happened merely suspended the performance under the contract or put an end to it. *Lakshmana Prasad & Sons v. Achuthan Nair*¹, takes the view that a contract for purchase of a motor-car from a dealer must be deemed to be one to sell it at the controlled price inasmuch as the vendors are not expected to commit an offence by selling it at any other price, that when it is discovered later that the transaction has not taken place on that basis, the vendors are bound to return the difference in price as due to a mistake of fact, under section 72, and the purchaser is not bound to rescind the contract and return the vehicle. *Kumaraswami v. Karuppaswami*², holds that the principle that it is open to one party to keep the contract alive can have application only when the contract is executory or where there is still something to be performed under the contract and can have no application where time for performance has arrived and there has been a breach. In *S. Subba Rao v. P. K. Ginning and Pressing Factory*³, it is stated that where goods are sold by sample and the goods supplied do not conform to it, the proper forum for recovery of damages is the Court of the place of contract and not the Court in the place to which subsequently the consignment may be sent at the instance of the buyer.

SPECIFIC RELIEF ACT: It is pointed out in *Sankaralinga Nadar v. Ramaswami Nadar*⁴, that specific performance of a transaction which was for proper consideration when it was entered into could not be refused on the ground that at the time of the suit the value of the property had considerably risen; that with reference to section 22 (2) of the Specific Relief Act, the hardship should be one collateral to the contract and not in relation to a term of the contract, such as the quantum of consideration; and, the discretion exercisable under the section is one to be exercised on judicial principles and capable of correction by a Court of appeal. *Sanaga Thevar v. Thanukodi Ammal*⁵, mentions that under section 27 (b) the conditions to be satisfied are that the plaintiff must prove that the subsequent purchaser was not a purchaser for value, that he had not purchased in good faith, and that he had notice of the original contract.

COMPANY LAW: Narayanan Chettiar v. Kaleswarar Mills, Ltd.,⁶ elucidates a number of points concerning the position of the chairman of a meeting of shareholders. It holds that it is not open to a chairman to stop the meeting and dissolve it before the business is finished; it is the right of the shareholders assembled at the meeting to decide whether they should continue the business of the meeting on that day or adjourn it to a subsequent date; if the chairman without the consent of the shareholders stops the meeting and declares it dissolved, the meeting may elect another chairman and conduct the remaining business. In *Public Prosecutor v. Ustepalle Swami Chetty*⁷, it is stated that with regard to offences under the Companies Act there is no provision that an offence should be taken cognizance of only on complaint and hence any person may set the criminal law in motion. *Associated Industrial Engineers v. Jabbar Sahib*⁸, expresses the view that where a managing agency agreement provides both for an office allowance and a remuneration, it cannot be said that the amount expressly said to be payable as office allowance is in the nature of a minimum payment as remuneration within the meaning of section 87-C of the Companies Act, and the minimum payment contemplated in section 270 (1) is something different from the office allowance. *Gangipati Appayya, In re*⁹, holds that it is not open to an accused to plead in answer to a charge under section 133 (3) his prior default in respect of calling of the general body meeting.

PROPERTY LAW: *Appa Rao v. Veeranna*¹, states that an agreement to sell immoveable property does not create any interest in the said property unless a conveyance is executed; that the title of a subsequent purchaser with notice is subject to the obligation in section 91 of the Trusts Act and the liability under section 27, Specific Relief Act, to be compelled to execute a sale deed to the person in whose favour there is the prior agreement to sell; but, till such sale deed is executed the latter does not acquire any title to the same; and, the execution of a sale deed by the original owner without the subsequent purchaser joining the sale is of no avail. In *Venkataperumal Naidu v. Ratnasabapathy Chettiar*², it is ruled that the vendor's lien for purchase money will not entitle the vendor to remain in possession till the entire purchase money was paid and a mortgagee from the vendor has therefore no such right. *Ammenumma v. Beeviumma*³, takes the view that a mortgagee has a right under section 67, Transfer of Property Act, to file a suit for sale, subject only to the condition prescribed therein and such a suit will not be barred under the Civil Procedure Code by reason of a decree for sale passed on the same mortgage in a prior suit and under section 100 of the Transfer of Property Act the same principle applies to a second suit for sale to enforce a charge. *Kedar Lal Seal v. Hari Lal Seal*⁴, expresses the view that where the right to contribution arises out of a mortgage, section 82, Transfer of Property Act, excludes section 43, Contract Act and since the whole law of mortgages is now statutory the Court cannot have recourse to equitable principles however fair they may appear to be at first sight. *Rahimansa v. Madras Islamia Educational Institution*⁵, points out that the co-mortgagor redeeming is only an instance of subrogation; that the redeeming mortgagor has not merely a charge but the mortgage as to his share is extinguished; and, as to the shares of the other mortgagors he stands in the shoes of the mortgagee and that when a co-mortgagor redeems the whole property, his right as a mortgagee, relates back to the date of the mortgage which he has redeemed the benefit of priority over the subsequent mortgagees. In *Arunachalam Iyer v. Lingiah*⁶, it is held that a purchaser of properties subject to a charge created by a compromise decree, the satisfaction or discharge of which has not been obtained or has not become barred by limitation, does not get any assistance from the proviso to section 100 of the Transfer of Property Act even though he is a purchaser for value without notice of the charge. The decision in *Bahayya v. Venkataratnam*⁷ points out that the terms of the notice contained in an expired lease should not be held to be terms of the lease arising by holding over under section 116, and that section 106 does not in terms apply to agricultural leases, and that the requirements as to notice terminating the tenancy are satisfied if in fact there is reasonable notice. In *President, C. P. C. C. Society v. K. B. Haji*⁸, the view is taken that when once a proper notice has been given by the tenant and the tenancy has been properly terminated the landlord's right would be not to question the notice of termination of the tenancy but to sue for recovery of damages caused to the property.

HINDU LAW.—*Aravamudha Iyengar v. Ramaswami Bhattar*⁹ rules that adoption is both a religious as well as a secular act and as such can be done only by a major; that minority in Hindu law comes to an end only on the completion of the 16th year and the rule applies equally to males and females, to the act of adoption as well as to an authority empowering the widow to make an adoption. In *Sri Hari Rao v. Venkiah*¹⁰, it is pointed out that where a power of adoption is limited to adopting a specified boy, the adoption of any other boy would be invalid; that where the power is general and no special directions have been given, successive adoptions would be valid; and that where the power is general and special directions have been attached such directions must be strictly followed; but, if those directions become impossible of observance, then an adoption can validly be made in exercise of the general power. in adoption is considered in *Thirumaleshwara Bhatta v. Ganappaya*¹, where it is ruled that an adoptive father has no right to name a non-existent deceased wife in preference to the existing living wife as the mother of the boy so as to entitle him to succeed to the estate of such predeceased wife's father. *Thiruvathammal v. Vagunathan*², decides that the father is under a legal obligation to meet the marriage expenses of his daughter if there is joint family property, that the obligation will be only moral in the absence of such property, and where the mother has incurred the expenses of the marriage she can recover the same from her husband if he has joint family property. In *Munuswami Naidu v. Swaminatha Naidu*³, it is recognised that an illegitimate son of a Sudra is not a member of the coparcenary and has no right by birth or right to partition or joint possession and if he has been in possession of any items of property for over the statutory period the coparceners of the putative father cannot claim partition of such property. In *Gur Narain Das v. Gur Tahal Das*⁴, the Supreme Court points out that on the putative father's death, the illegitimate son succeeds as a coparcener to the separate estate of his father along with the legitimate son with a right of survivorship and is entitled to enforce partition against the legitimate son and unless exclusion and ouster are pleaded and proved he is entitled to partition though he is not in possession. The decision in *Annamalai Ammal v. Sundarathammal*⁵, holds that a father may make a gift of immovable property of the joint family to his daughter within reasonable limits, and it cannot be questioned by the sons though such a gift was made before marriage, and where it is so made it may be assumed that it was meant as a marriage portion. It is pointed out in *Pundarikakshudu v. Venkiah*⁶, that an alienation of ancestral property to purchase lands elsewhere, if not speculative and risky but beneficial to the family, will be binding on the family. The decision of the Full Bench of five Judges in *Peramanayakam Pillai v. Sivaraman*⁷, holds that section 44 of the Transfer of Property Act does not affect the Hindu Law and entitle an alienee from a coparcener to claim joint possession of the alienor's share as a tenant-in-common; that neither the alienation of his share by a coparcener nor his insolvency operates to bring about a division in status; and that the alienee's interest is to be determined with reference to the date of the alienation and not with reference to the date of the suit for partition. The decision also indicates the principles which should guide the adjustment of equities between the alienee and the non-alienating coparceners whether the suit is one by the alienee for partition or by the coparceners for avoidance of the alienation. In *Subramanian v. Kalyanarama Iyer*⁸, it is held that the share obtained by a father at a partition is the separate property of the father in which his widow will be entitled to a share. In *Chinnathayi v. K. P. Naicker*⁹, the Supreme Court recognises that a member of a joint family owning an impartible estate can on behalf of himself and his heirs renounce his right of succession but any such relinquishment must operate in favour of all the branches of the family or in favour of the head of the family as representing all its members. *Punna Lal v. Mt. Naraini*¹⁰, is an instructive decision of the Supreme Court on the liability of sons for a pre-partition debt of the father. It rules that a son is liable even after partition for the pre-partition debts of his father which are not illegal or immoral and for the payment of which no arrangement was made at the partition; that whether any arrangement made in that behalf is a proper arrangement or not will have to be decided on the facts of each case; that a decree obtained against the father alone after partition in respect of such a debt cannot be executed against the property allotted to the son at the partition because the separated share of the son cannot be said to belong to the father nor has he any disposing power over it or its profits which he can exercise for his benefit; but the position will be materially different if the sons are made parties to the suit as legal representatives of the father and a decree is passed against them limited to the assets of the deceased defendant. In *Ratna Raja Kumar v. Narayaa Rao*¹, the Supreme Court holds that the principal factor to be considered in awarding maintenance to an illegitimate son is the exact income from the properties of the putative father; that the death of the father pendente lite and the adopted son's being entitled to enjoy the property is hardly a relevant consideration; but the Court must not overlook the losses of the father in business transactions and the fact of the illegitimate son being an able-bodied person with earning capacity. *Veerraju v. Narayanamma*² points out that the quantum of maintenance claimable by the widow of a coparcener is bound up with the fortunes of the family and if the income of the family decreases she must submit to a reduction of her maintenance. In *Muthalammal v. Veeraraghavulu Nayudu*³, it is held that a widow's right to maintenance against her husband's estate in the hands of his coparcener is one which cannot be transferred or assigned when it is an inchoate right which has not crystallised into a definite sum. In *Annagouda Nathgouda v. Court of Wards, Satara*⁴, the Supreme Court has ruled that the Hindu Law of Inheritance (Amendment) Act, 1929, has a limited scope and applies only to the separate property of a Hindu male who dies intestate and therefore the stridhana heirs of a maiden have to be ascertained with reference to the general provisions of the Hindu law of inheritance ignoring the statutory heirs who have been introduced by the Act. The decision in *Krishnamachariar v. Ramabhadran*⁵, states that it is within the competence of a limited owner to incur expenditure in connection with a kanyadhana as an act of piety calculated to promote the spiritual bliss of her husband and the fact of the relationship of the kanya to the holder of the estate as daughter or grand-daughter or the fact of the indigence or affluence of the girl's father does not affect the question. *Ratnem Pillai v. Subramania Aiyar*⁶ expresses the view that whether an alienation by a widow is for necessity or benefit of the estate ought to be judged by the condition in which the estate and the widow stood at the time of the alienation and not by reference to the possibility of sales of small lots of property out of the whole estate, and an alienation of the whole corpus making the bulk of the consideration a fund to be kept for her future maintenance purposes will not be valid. In *Nagi Reddi v. Durairaja Naidu*⁷, the Supreme Court explains the basic principles of surrender and holds that a release by a widow in favour of the next heir and a stranger (the daughter and her husband) is wholly void and will not operate as a surrender of the whole estate to the next heir and a transfer of half share in it to the stranger. In *Mt. Phool Kuer v. Mt. Prem Kuer*⁸, the Supreme Court reaffirms the requisites of a surrender and points out that where the surrender of the totality of the interest of the widow was not made in favour of the next heir, it cannot operate as a valid surrender, and succession to the estate will open on the death of the widow. *Arunachala Moopanar v. Arumugha Moopanar*⁹, expresses the view that when a widow alienates a part of her husband's estate and then makes an unconditional surrender of the entire estate in favour of the nearest reversioner, it is not open to the surrenderee to recover possession and dispossess the alienee from the widow until the widow dies and the position is the same where the widow has voluntarily made a gift of a portion of the estate in favour of a donee.

MUHAMMADAN LAW.—The decision in *Ayisumina v. Mayomooty Umma*¹⁰ holds that intestate succession of property belonging to Mappillas after 1937 could not be governed by any other law except that of the Muslim Personal Law (Shariat) Application Act governing the Muslims. *Masum Vali Saheb v. Illuri Moidin Sahib*¹¹ expresses the view that a transfer by a Muhammadan to his wife of immovable property in satisfaction of her dower debt is a sale and where the property is over hundred rupees in value the transaction will not be valid in the absence of a registered instrument. In *Abdul Kadir v. Mahlarathul Kadiria Sabha*¹², it is pointed out that the sanction of the kazi to alienation of wakf property was only by way of safeguard against improper alienations, and that purpose will be amply served by insisting on sanction of it either previous or subsequent, so long as there is an assurance that the transaction would be examined on its merits and there is an inquiry whether it is supported by legal necessity or benefit to the trust.

INSOLVENCY LAW.—The decision in *Chandramouleswaran v. Krishnaswami Naidu*¹ suggests that it may be difficult under the rules for the court to give any specific notice to the other creditors when a compromise is sought to be entered into between the petitioning creditors and the debtors; but, that difficulty may be obviated by court notice being put up on the notice board of the court that the petitioning creditor is seeking to settle the matter between himself and the debtor and that the other creditors who are interested and are already on record or not may take the necessary steps to safeguard their interests. *Thirumaleshwara Bhatta v. Govinda Bhatta*² points out that on adjudication of the father as insolvent not only the share of the father but also his power to dispose of his son's share would vest in the Official Receiver under section 28 of the Provincial Insolvency Act and that fact alone would not by itself convey to the auction purchaser the share of the son unless there is indication in the document or in the sale proceedings that the Official Receiver in fact purported to exercise that power of sale and did sell the son's share as well, and where prior to the sale the son sends a notice demanding partition there will be a division in status preventing the Official Receiver from exercising the power of sale. *Nallaperumal v. Singaravelu*³ expresses the view that it is not incumbent on a creditor to satisfy the requirements of section 9 in asking for readjudication after the annulment of the original adjudication consequent on the failure of a composition scheme which intervened. In *Mohammad Hussain Sahib v. Syed Mohammad Rowther*⁴ it is pointed out that by reason of the fact that when insolvency proceedings are annulled all proceedings taken during such period and all actions done during such period also get annulled, proceedings by which certain transactions were declared void will also get annulled. *Venkateswar Chetty v. Ganapathia Pillai*⁵ holds that in regard to the starting point of limitation for an appeal on an order of adjudication the counting of the 30 days under section 75 (4) is in the case of parties to the proceeding from the date of the order of adjudication and in the case of third parties from the date of its notification in the gazette, and in so counting the period the time taken for obtaining a copy of the order of adjudication must be excluded under section 12 of the Limitation Act.

MADRAS AGRICULTURISTS RELIEF ACT.—In *Venkatasubbayya v. Mallappa*⁶ it is pointed out that to give exemption under section 4 (d) of Madras Act IV of 1938 the property must be a "house" and where on the date of incurring the debt the house was not in existence there is no exemption afforded and the debt is liable to be scaled down. *Subbarayulu Seth v. Venkataramanamma*⁷ holds that a debt contracted on the security of three houses and an independent vacant site in a Union which later on became a Panchayat, the debt cannot be regarded as a debt contracted on the security of house property alone and therefore it is liable to be scaled down. *Janakiramayya v. Ranganayakamma*⁸ states that two tests are intended by section 4 (h) for the application of the exemption, namely, (i) whether the debt is due to a woman, and (ii) whether the value of the property owned by her, either as life estate holder or as absolute owner did not exceed Rs. 6,000. *Chozhi v. Lakshmi*⁹ recognises that a party to a suit or proceeding can acquire a new right by reason of an Amending Act; but a debtor who has already obtained relief under sections 8 and 9 on the basis that the transaction was not an usufructuary mortgage as defined under section 10 (2) cannot claim relief under section 9-A conferred by the Amending Act of 1948 on the basis that the suit document is an usufructuary mortgage. *Krishnayya v. Venkatasubbarayudu*¹⁰ takes the view that even after the Amending Act XXIII of 1948 there is no change with respect to the tracing back of a debt under section 9 because in the proviso to that section nothing is said about debts renewed after the Act came into force. *Kumaraswami v. Govindaswami*¹ is an interesting decision which holds that when a mortgagee is in possession under a usufructuary mortgage of 1927 containing a condition that in case the debt was not redeemed within five years the mortgagee would become the owner, the condition was a clog on the equity of redemption; and hence the mortgagee's possession after 1932 will only be that of a mortgagee and not that of a vendee; and so section 9-A will directly apply to the case, and the animus of the mortgagee that he remained in possession as vendee is not the decisive factor for the application of the section. In *Bramaramba v. Jegannatha Rao*², it is held that section 14 is a special provision which applies when there is a debt payable by the members of a family some of whom are agriculturists and some are not, that a substantive application is not necessary for a judgment-debtor to obtain the benefit of section 14 and it is sufficient if the debtor raises the objection based on the section in his counter-affidavit in the execution petition. *Kanakammal v. Kathija Bevi*³ lays down that an application under section 19 is not one which comes under section 47, Civil Procedure Code and therefore the principle of res judicata in execution cannot apply. It also holds that it is not the bounden duty of the judgment-debtor when an execution application was pending to raise the question regarding scaling down, and if he failed to do so it is open to him at a later stage to file an application for scaling down. *Jagannadham v. Parthasarathy*⁴ takes the view that after an application under section 19 has been finally decided it is not open to the judgment-debtor to file a similar application again for taking advantage of certain amendments in the method of scaling down introduced by Act XXIII of 1948 and that neither section 16 of the Amending Act nor Explanation 1 to section 8 of Act IV of 1938 as amended gives retrospective operation to matters decided prior to the date of the amendment. *Narayanan Chettiar v. Rāshinasami Pillai*⁵ points out that a judgment-debtor would not have a right to file successive applications under section 20 or section 19 if the reliefs which he claims are the same in the several applications, but if a subsequent application is based on a provision of law not in existence at the time of a prior application of his, he will not be debarred from filing the later application simply because he had filed a prior application when the state of the law did not entitle him to the relief to which he became entitled by a subsequent change in the law. In *Venkataratnam v. Seshamma*⁶ it is decided by the Full Bench that clause (ii) of section 16 of the Amending Act of 1948 applies to proceedings instituted before the commencement of the Act but which did not become final before such commencement and that clause (iii) would apply to decrees and orders even if they had become final before the commencement of the Act provided the decrees and orders had not been executed or fully satisfied.

MADRAS ESTATES LAND ACT.—*Butchi Rajayya v. Gundu Ramanna*⁷ takes the view that lands situated in a zero tyti village forming part of a permanently settled estate do not cease to be such though they were obtained by the landholders in exchange for lands in a presettlement inam and civil courts will have no jurisdiction to entertain a suit to eject tenants from such lands. In *The District Board, Tanjore v. Noor Mohamed*⁸, the Supreme Court lays down that the burden of proving that certain lands constitute an "estate" within the meaning of section 3 (2) (d) of the Estates Land Act is upon the party who sets up the contention. The tests for determining whether land in an estate is private land are dealt with by a Full Bench in *Periannan v. A. S. Annan Kovil*⁹ which holds inter-alia that cultivation of the lands or leasing of the lands under short terms may be one mode of proof; an intention to cultivate or resume for cultivation is also a test, but mere proof that the landholder is the owner of both the varams is not sufficient to prove that the land is private land under section 3. (10). *Zemindar of Ettiapuram v. Permmal Reddi*¹ states that a custom in respect of trees which were planted or grew upon the holding subsequent to the passing of the Estates Land Act is invalid and the landlord cannot claim to levy a tax on them. *Chockalingam Chettiar v. Sivakolandu Achi*² holds that the priority given to a purchaser under section 125 can only enure to him if he is a purchaser of the holding sold for arrears of rent and will not be available to the purchaser of a holding in execution of a rent decree for costs. *Kumaraswami Chetti v. Subramania Iyer*³ points out that Order 21, rule 91, Civil Procedure Code, is not one of the provisions excluded under section 192 (1) of the Estates Land Act. In *Venkatakrishna Reddi Garu v. Venkataraju*⁴ it is made clear that section 145 (2) will equally apply to a transferee prior to the filing of the application and a transferee subsequent to that date, that once the recognition is made the transferee will become the owner for all purposes of the Act, and therefore a sale deed in execution of a rent decree without issuing notice to the purchaser of the holding is void.

STAMP ACT.—In *Lobo v. Marajul Doggu*⁵ it is pointed out that a foreign promissory note even though duly stamped according to the Indian Stamp Act, has to be stamped again before the actual endorsement of the note in favour of a person who thereafter filed a suit on the note. *Appalanarasimhalu v. Board of Revenue, Madras*⁶ explains that the power to make a reference under section 57 is not for the benefit of the revenue authority but is coupled with a duty cast on him to do the right thing and when an important and intricate question of law in respect of the construction of a document arises, it is his duty to make a reference and if he fails to do so the court can direct him to discharge that duty. The power of the State to levy stamp duty under Article 30 of the Stamp Act or under Article 25 of Schedule 1-A of the Act as amended in Madras, as enrolment fee of advocates was considered in *Anantha-krishnan v. State of Madras*⁷ and the view was expressed that inasmuch as the enrolment fee is not with the object of deliberately abridging or destroying the right to carry on the legal profession and is not so excessive or oppressive as to virtually abridge or destroy that right, it must be held to be proper and constitutional.

COURT FEES ACT.—*Kothandaraman v. Collector of Chingleput*⁸ draws attention to the fact that an appeal against the final decree will be superfluous where no new ground could be urged in such appeal which could not be urged in an appeal against the preliminary decree; but, if filed, court-fee will have to be paid. The only exceptions are account suits and mesne profit cases, as in these cases, it is the final decree that settles the actual liabilities and not the preliminary decree and in appeals against both it is only the balance that need be paid to make up in the appeal against the final decree. In all other cases ad valorem court-fee will have to be paid in both appeals. *Kalyanakrishna Ayyar v. Lakshmi Ammal*⁹ holds that in a suit by a succeeding trustee for recovery of possession of properties on the strength of the title of the temple ignoring an invalid alienation by a previous trustee, court-fee need be paid only for recovery of possession and mesne profits and no more and section 7 (IV) (a) will not be attracted. In *Venkataswami Naicker v. Chinnayapuram Co-operative Stores*¹⁰ it is held that in a suit for declaration that an award by the Registrar of Co-operative Societies is not valid and for injunction against attachment of plaintiff's properties in execution, court-fee under section 7 (iv-A) need not be paid for the declaration as the award cannot be equated with a decree of a civil or revenue court; nor will court-fee under section 7 (iv) (c) fall to be paid on the injunction. The decision in *Pappukannu Anni v. Thoppayya Mudaliar*¹¹ holds that easement suits do not fall under section 7 (iv) (c) as no question of title or possession is involved. *Akhandala Kurup v. Damodara Kurup*¹² decides that where in a plaint as it stood there was no allegation of any joint possession with other members of the family of at least one item of family property, Court-fee payable in respect of the general relief of partition and delivery of plaintiff's share will fall under section 7 (iv-A). *Palaniappa Chettiar, In re*¹, takes the view that a person who has been a party to a settlement of accounts evidenced by a document cannot seek to have the accounts reopened having the entire document set aside and so is liable to pay court-fee under section 7 (iv-A). In *Sambiah v. Venkata Reddi*² it is held that where plaintiffs seek to recover possession of lands in which they claimed occupancy rights and with whose possession they had parted with legally and peacefully and under orders of court in judicial proceedings, and where a declaration of title to the kudi-varam was sought and strangers were added, court-fee for recovery of possession will have to be paid under section 7 (iv) (c). *Muthu Naicken v. Mariappa Pillai*³ points out that a suit for redemption of a portion or share of hypothecated property must be valued on the same principle as a suit for redemption of the entire mortgage and the valuation would be the share of the mortgage amount as determined by the share in the mortgaged property to which the plaintiff lays claim. *Narayana-swami Ayyar v. Kesava Ayyar*⁴ expresses the view that where an alienee from a cosharer who got divided in status, alleging in his suit that his vendor has been in joint possession of some of the items of the suit properties as a tenant-in-common with the other cosharers, seeks to convert such constructive joint possession into separate possession, the suit will have to be valued under Article 17 and section 7 (v) does not apply.

EVIDENCE.—Pointed attention is drawn by the Supreme Court to the rules specially applicable to circumstantial evidence in *Hanumant v. State of Madhya Pradesh*⁵ where Mahajan, J., observed: "It is well to remember that in cases where the evidence is of a circumstantial nature, the circumstances from which the conclusion of guilt is to be drawn should in the first instance be fully established, and all the facts so established should be consistent only with the hypothesis of the guilt of the accused; again, the circumstances should be of a conclusive nature and tendency, and they should be such as to exclude every other hypothesis but the one proposed to be proved. In other words, there must be a chain of evidence so far complete as not to leave any reasonable ground for a conclusion consistent with the innocence of the accused; and it must be such as to show that within all human probability the act must have been done by the accused⁶". The same decision also points out that it is settled law that an admission made by a person whether amounting to a confession or not cannot be split up and part of it used against him. In *Vokkaligara Yentappa, In re*⁶, the view is expressed that sections 25 to 27 of the Evidence Act only prohibit the use of the confession against the accused and there is no prohibition of its use in favour of the accused. It is held in *Vasam Setty Appa Rao, In re*⁷ that a statement by an accused to a Prohibition Officer is not a confessional statement as he is not a police officer and hence the rule requiring corroboration of resiled statements before a court could act upon them does not apply to it. *Ramakrishnayya v. Achutharamayya*⁸ lays down that the evidence of a medical man giving opinion on what he had read but without examining the woman concerned in regard to an alleged period of gestation of over 345 days is of no value whatsoever. An exposition of the law relating to the necessity for corroboration of the complainant's evidence in the case of an offence of rape is made by the Supreme Court in *Rameshwar v. State of Rajasthan*⁹, where it is pointed out that corroboration is not a pre-requisite to conviction but the necessity therefor as a matter of prudence except where the circumstances make it safe to dispense with it, must be present to the mind of the Judge and in jury cases must find a place in the charge before conviction without corroboration. It is also held that a previous statement of the complainant can be accepted as corroboration provided the conditions prescribed in section 157, that is to say, made at or about the same time, etc., are fulfilled.

LIMITATION.—In *Venkataswami Chetty v. Ganapathia Pillai*¹, it is made clear that sections 5 and 12 of the Limitation Act are applicable to the case of an appeal by a third party against an order of adjudication. *Srinivasa Chettiar v. Arunachalam Chettiar*² holds that section 13 will apply and save limitation in respect of a suit brought against the manager of a joint Hindu family who had borrowed moneys from time to time and was afterwards away from India, inasmuch as such period of absence might be excluded in computing the period of limitation, and the presence of the junior members cannot operate to deprive the plaintiff of his right to exclude the manager's period of absence in computing limitation. *Shanmughasundaram Mudaliar v. Chidambaram Pillai*³ lays down that where a servant is a domestic servant Article 7 does not apply, but Article 10 applies to a suit for recovery of bonus due under the agreement of employment against his employer. In *Ramaswami Goundar v. Marappa Goundar*⁴ it is pointed out that an unauthorised alienation by a lawful guardian is only voidable and must be set aside within the time prescribed by Article 44 unlike an alienation by an unauthorised person which is void under the law and does not require to be set aside; and that where the transfer is operative and the question is whether it is binding on the ward or not it has to be set aside within the time prescribed by Article 44. *Natesa Thevar v. Narayanaswami Padayachi*⁵ reaffirms the view that Article 134 does not apply to court sales, and that where the mortgagor had knowledge of the fact that the properties as such were sold in court auctions and subsequently by the court auction purchasers in favour of a stranger, a suit for redemption by the purchasers of the equity of redemption from the original mortgagor will fall under Article 144 and if barred under that Article there will be no scope for the applicability of Article 148. In *Singana Sathiraju v. Merla Sathamma*⁶ it is held that an order on an execution petition "no instructions, no bids, sale stopped: execution petition closed" is not a 'final order' and a subsequent petition for execution filed after 12 years can be treated as a continuation of the earlier one. *Rambhadra Reddiar v. Ramachandra Reddiar*⁷ points out that where an unnumbered execution petition returned for filling up certain particulars was re-presented eighteen months later without the requirements being complied with and without any application for excusing the delay, and there was an endorsement that the decree-holder was not pressing the petition and that it might be dismissed, and the court ordered "not pressed; rejected", the order must be held to be a final order. *Daivanai Achi v. Kannappa Chettiar*⁸ lays down that in the case of an instalment decree after a default has occurred in the payment of instalments, an application for execution for the recovery of subsequent instalments is maintainable, where there is nothing to show that the decreeholder had previously sought to enforce the default clause, the application being governed by Article 182 (2) of the Limitation Act.

CIVIL PROCEDURE CODE.—In *Peda Rami Reddi v. Bichalu*⁹, the view is expressed that the decision in a suit under Order 21, rule 63, Civil Procedure Code, to which the claimant and the judgment-debtor were parties as co-defendants regarding the title to the property in dispute will operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit between the claimant and the representative in interest of the judgment-debtor where the title to the same property is in dispute. *Dorayya v. Adinarayana*¹⁰ states that the proceedings under the rules under Madras Act IV of 1938 are not of a summary nature and an order holding that the applicant, a mortgagor, was not an agriculturist will operate as res judicata and preclude him from raising the plea over again in a suit filed by him for possession of property and declaration that the amount due under the usufructuary mortgage was completely satisfied. *Vittal Shetty v. Parameshwari*¹¹ points out that if the order of the Judge under section 35 is not based on legal principles it can certainly be interfered with by the High Court in appeal. The nature of an order directing a precept under section 46 is considered in *Ramachandrudu v. Sait Bakraj Gulabchand Firm*¹ where it is held that such an order is merely one that tends to facilitate the execution of a decree and is not a step in the execution proceeding and as such is not appealable; nor will an order extending the time for a precept be appealable. The decision of the Supreme Court in *Union of India v. Hira Devi*² holds that provident fund money is exempt from attachment and alienation and execution cannot be sought against it by way of appointment of a receiver. Also, though salary is not attachable under section 60 except to the extent indicated, there is no such exemption as regards arrears of salary. *Pattabhi Rama Rao v. Venkata Subbamma*³ points out that where a judgment-debtor is dependent on her lands and unable to maintain herself otherwise, the fact that the whole of the cultivation is carried on through paid servants will not make the judgment-debtor any the less an agriculturist within the meaning of section 60 (1) (c). *Veleyudham v. Governor-General in Council*⁴ is an interesting decision holding that section 80 can have no application to the continuation of a suit properly instituted, when at the time of the institution the Government was not a necessary party; the fact that, during the pendency of the suit, the interest of the defendant had devolved on the Government will not attract section 80, and notice to Government in such a case is not necessary. *Palvannam Pillai v. Ganapathy Ayyar*⁵ expresses the view that a suit to declare the right of the plaintiffs to take out a funeral procession along a public road and to restrain the defendants from interfering is not barred by section 91. The scope and nature of a suit under section 92 is explained in *Mahant Pragdasji v. Narsibhai*⁶ by the Supreme Court which states that a suit under the section is one of a special nature which presupposes the existence of a public trust of a religious or charitable character and can proceed only on the allegation that there is a breach of a trust or that directions from the Court are necessary for the administration thereof; but when the case of the plaintiff fails for want of a cause of action there is no warrant for giving him a declaratory relief under section 92. *Kasi Viswanadhan v. Rudrantha*⁷ takes the view that a suit for directing the person in charge of a common fund, for whatever purpose it may be used, of a village, to render an account of the amount falls under section 92, the provisions of which must be complied with. In *Subba Rao v. Chalamayya*⁸, the Full Bench holds: (i) If a judgment or decree of the High Court varies the decision of the lower Court in respect of a matter in controversy in the proposed appeal to the Supreme Court, then there is a right of appeal not only to the person against whom the variation has been made but even to the party in whose favour it is made, provided the matter in respect of which there has been a variation is the subject-matter of the proposed appeal to the Supreme Court. (ii) If the matter in respect of which there has been a variation is not a subject-matter of the proposed appeal, then, such variation would not confer a right of appeal; and as regards matters unconnected with the matter in respect of which there has been a variation ex hypothesi, this will be the case when the variation has been completely in favour of the applicant. *Paramasivam Pillai v. Adilakshmi Ammal*⁹ favours a wide and liberal construction of the language of Order 1, rule 10 (2), Civil Procedure Code and suggests that the attempt should be always to make parties all persons who may be necessary in order that there might be a final and complete adjudication of the points involved in the suit, and where in a suit for partition a stranger claims some of the items in his own absolute right he can be added as a party. In *Subba Naicker v. Kathiresa Thevar*¹⁰, it is held that claims for rent for successive years arise under the same obligation and there can be no doubt that suits for rent attract the provisions of Order 2, rule 2, and the fact that there is likely to be a variation in the sums claimed by the landholder in the successive years by reason of new cesses being levied by Government will make no difference to the applicability of Order 2, rule 2. *Chalamiah v. Rubiah*¹¹ states that Order 9, rule 13, gives ample discretion to the court to impose terms for setting aside an ex parte decree and a direction to the defendant to deposit the costs of the suit before a certain date cannot be said to be unreasonable or punitive. In *Gurusanthayya v. Veetayya*¹ it is pointed out that the distinction between rules 2 and 3 of Order 17 is that, in order that rule 2 should apply, a party or his pleader should not be present in court whereas in the case of rule 3, even if the party or his pleader is present in court if there is failure to produce evidence, to cause the attendance of witnesses, or to perform any other act necessary to the further progress of the suit, Order 17, rule 3 applies. A point of nicety is dealt with in *Arunachala Chettiar v. Vadla Goundan*², where it is ruled that if a judgment-debtor dies after sale and before passing of confirmation order, no order of confirmation can be passed in the absence of the legal representatives of the judgment-debtor; and, if passed, it will be a nullity. *Jayalakshmi Ammal v. Subbaraya Reddiar*³ states that it cannot be said that Order 21, rule 89, is confined only to judgment-debtors or persons deriving interest from them as that would render nugatory the last alternative category of persons entitled to apply under Order 21, rule 89 (1), that is, persons holding an interest in the property such as mortgage decree-holders, charge-holders, etc., and so a decree-holder who has a charge on the concerned property can apply to set aside the execution sale. *Viswanadha Sastri v. Venkatakrishna Rao*⁴ holds that where a decree-holder himself purchases property in execution levied for a much larger amount than what was due and to his knowledge, the sale should not be allowed to stand. The decision in *Kandaswami Nadar v. Province of Madras*⁵ makes it clear that if a defendant requests the Court to dismiss a suit and grant permission to the plaintiff to file a fresh suit, when such fresh suit is filed he cannot turn round and say that the later suit is not sustainable because of the provisions of Order 23, rule 1. *Vikraman v. Krishnan Nair*⁶ reaffirms the view that a mere agreement to take the oath on the challenge made by one of the parties and accepted by the other party cannot amount to an adjustment or compromise within the meaning of Order 23, rule 3. In *Abdul Azeez v. Pathumma Bi*⁷, it is held that on a reading of Order 32, rule 1 and sections 2 (a) and 3 of the Indian Majority Act, a Muslim woman who is a major according to her personal law but is a minor according to the Majority Act cannot sue for dissolution of her marriage without being represented by a next friend and where a suit is filed without a next friend the proper course will be to return the plaint as not properly presented and not to dismiss it. *Kalidas v. Fakir Mohammad*⁸ points out that a puisne mortgagee impleaded in a suit by the first mortgagee and obtaining a preliminary decree can (even if the mortgagor has paid off the first mortgagee) apply for a final decree in the same manner as the plaintiff might have done under Order 34, rule 4 (4) of the Civil Procedure Code. In *Kuttyal v. Sanjiva Rao*⁹ it is laid down that a decree for rent in respect of a lease back which is part of a usufructuary mortgage is a claim arising under the mortgage and Order 34, rule 14, is a bar to bringing the mortgaged properties to sale in execution of such decree. *Seetharamayya v. Anjappa*¹⁰ rules that on application under Order 37, rule 3, for leave to defend, the court can certainly impose conditions when it feels that the defence lacks bona fides. In *Travancore Forward Bank Ltd. v. Gopalakrishna Chettiar*¹¹, it is pointed out that in a suit under Order 37 where leave to defend has not been granted, the fee allowable to the advocate shall be half the fee prescribed under rule 31, (b) of the Legal Practitioners Rules subject to a maximum of Rs. 500. *Peomalai Ammal v. Subbammal*¹² rules that a party who did not choose to file an appeal against the judgment of the trial court and allowed it to become final cannot in a second appeal by the opposite party invoke Order 41, rule 33. *Veerappa Goundan, In re*¹³, decides that no appeal lies under Order 43 against an order refusing to set aside an ex parte decree under section 5 (7) of the Madras Hindu Bigamous Marriage Prevention and Divorce Act, 1949, making interim provision for maintenance and for expenses of the wife who had applied for dissolution of marriage. The decision in *Rajahmundry Electric Supply Corporation v. State of Madras*¹ makes it clear that Order 45, rule 13 (2) (d), does not enable the High Court to give any direction to the successful party by way of restricting him or preventing him from exercising the rights to which he has become entitled under the final order of the High Court. *Chenchanna Naidu v. Praja Seva Transports, Ltd.*², states that where the civil jurisdiction of the High Court is invoked under Article 226 of the Constitution the Civil Procedure Code becomes applicable to the proceedings, and if there is an error apparent on the face of the record in the order quashing the proceedings under the Motor Vehicles Act, it can be set right in review under Order 47. In *Fernandez v. Ranganayukulu Chetty*³ the view is expressed that the provisions of Order 47, rule 1, are not applicable where a revision petition under the Madras Buildings (Lease and Rent Control) Act, 1949 has been dismissed. The scope of Order 47, rule 8, is explained in *Subrahmanya Iyer v. Govindaswami Moopanar*⁴ and it is held that where a Judge after allowing a review petition definitely stated that since the actual working out involved arguments the appeal itself would be reopened and reheard under Order 47, rule 8, there is no limit restricting the scope of the inquiry and the whole case can be reopened.

† CRIMINAL LAW.—In *Baluswamy, In re*⁵, it is pointed out that sections 85 and 86, Indian Penal Code, crystallise in a tabloid form the law relating to intoxication or drunkenness as a defence or plea in mitigation of a criminal offence; and that the words "state of intoxication" in section 86 mean intoxication rendering a person incapable of knowing the nature of the act in question or that he is doing what is wrong or contrary to law when he commits it; and that it would be extremely dangerous to extend the protection under the section to persons who commit serious offences under the influence of liquor in varying stages and differentiate culpability in their favour as opposed to similar offences by perfectly sober persons. An exposition by the Supreme Court of the right of private defence is contained in *Anyad Khan v. The State*⁶ where it is observed that the right under section 97 extends not only to the defence of one's own body against any offence affecting the human body but also to defending the body of any other person; that the right embraces the protection of property whether one's own or another person's against certain specified offences, like theft, robbery, mischief and criminal trespass; and that the limitations on the right and its scope are to be gathered from the sections that follow. In *Seeni Naicker v. The State*⁷, it is made clear that offences under sections 147 and 323, Indian Penal Code, are not offences relating to property and fall outside the scope of Chapter XVII of the Penal Code. *Mohiddin, In re*⁸, points out that payment of illegal gratification by whatever name called, if taken by an officer for doing a favour or abstaining from doing a disfavour, will fall within section 161, but not mamools, like Pongal, Deepavali, Dasara, or Christmas paid to peons since they are not for showing favour or disfavour in the exercise of official functions. *Narayana Reddiar, In re*⁹, holds that under the law, bribe-givers and bribe-takers are on a par and are treated as accomplices of each other and so where it is not shown that the previous statement of a bribe-giver was false or true and when such person is not bound to incriminate himself by sticking to the previous statement a prosecution against him under section 182 for tergiversation is misconceived. In *Chinnathambi, In re*¹⁰, it is held that where the accused hung his wife who had been rendered unconscious by blows believing she was dead and to make it appear to be a case of suicide, and death really resulted not from the blows but under asphyxiation, a charge under section 302 is not sustainable and the conviction could only be under section 325. *Samatham Veerabhadradu, In re*¹¹, lays down that where a person is convicted under section 302, the appellate court may where the evidence warrants it, modify the conviction to one under section 201; but where the Sessions Judge had convicted the accused under section 302 and had also found him guilty under section 319 or 411 in the alternative, acquitting him, however, of the charge under section 201, it would not be correct for the appellate court to modify the conviction to one under section 201, without the State filing an appeal against the acquittal. *Govindaswami In re*¹, emphasises that the ordinary penalty for murder is death in the absence of extenuating factors, and neither the fact of the youth of the accused that he is 16 or 17 years old nor the fact that he acted under fear or apprehension of a complaint being made against him for theft will be an extenuating circumstance. In *Bejoy Chand Patra v. State of West Bengal*², the Supreme Court has held that where an accused was charged under section 307, a conviction under section 326 will not be illegal, if, on the facts, it was open to the Sessions Judge to charge the accused alternatively, under sections 307 and 326 even in the absence of a charge under the latter section. The decision in *Periah v. Chandriah*³ points out that in wrongful restraint there need not be any stoppage of the movement; that neither the physical presence of the obstructor nor an actual assault is necessary and that fear of immediate harm restraining a man out of a place where he wished to be and has a right to be is sufficient to constitute an offence under section 341. The ingredients of the offence of kidnapping under section 363 are brought out in *Abdul Azeez, In re*⁴, as being firstly, the kidnapped was a minor; secondly the accused took or induced such person to leave out of lawful keeping; and thirdly the taking was done without the consent of the lawful guardian. In *Ramakrishna Padayachi v. The State*⁵, it is made clear that the offence under section 426 can be compounded by the person to whom the damage was caused and the offence under section 448 by the person in possession of the property trespassed upon and hence where the compounding was with a careaker the real owner will not be bound. The decision in *Ramaswami Udayar v. Raju Udayar*⁶ points out that section 498 is for the protection of the husband and not for the benefit of the wife, so much so, where a woman is unwilling to live with her husband even if it be for good reasons and actually lives with another as husband and wife, the other person must be held to have 'taken' the wife within the meaning of the section, and the wife's complicity in the transaction is no more material here than it is on a charge of adultery. In *Ramakrishna Reddy v. State of Madras*⁷ the Supreme Court holds that the fact that a remedy may be open to an aggrieved officer under section 499 will not preclude proceedings under section 2 of the Contempt of Courts Act, where the defamation of a Judge of a subordinate court amounts to contempt of court. *Gopal In re*⁸, holds that section 504, requires two essentials: (i) there must be intentional insult of a person and thereby due provocation, and (ii) the person insulting must intend or know it to be likely that such a provocation would cause prejudice to public peace. The mere forbearance of the person insulted is no protection to the offender. In *Ganapathi Udayar v. Chinnayya Mudaliar*⁹ it is held that endorsement by a debtor on the back of a promissory note, of a very much larger sum as paid by him and contending that it was entered as payment constitutes not preparation but a criminal attempt to cheat.

CRIMINAL PROCEDURE CODE.—*Venkatachala Naicken v. Panchayat Board, Ethapur*¹⁰ points out that no court has any jurisdiction to compel one accused to produce the other accused in the case. A practice point of interest is dealt with in *Pedda Venkatanna, In re*¹¹, which holds that in a complaint and counter-complaint arising out of the same transaction when the prosecution proceeds on the basis of the complaint, it is its duty to exhibit the counter-complaint through the police officer who recorded it and also to prove the medical certificates of the persons wounded on the other side and place before the court a definite case for acceptance; the acceptance by the prosecution in such cases in toto of one complaint and examining only witnesses who support it and give no explanation to the injuries caused to the other side is to be deprecated. Another practice point is referred to in Umanatha Rao, In re¹ and *Innasia Pillai v. Perumal Chettiar*², where it is observed that in warrant cases the accused persons even before they are charged and put upon their defence anticipate their defence by petitions raising preliminary points upon which the court passes judgment and these are then brought upon revision to the High Court pending which the trial of the case is adjourned, that such a procedure is unwarranted and makes for delay and extra work; and that an accused person has no right to raise a preliminary point before he is charged and he must wait till charged to defend himself and if he is convicted his first remedy is in most cases by way of appeal. In *Hanumant v. State of Madhya Pradesh*³, it is stated that the Supreme Court will not disturb concurrent findings of fact of the courts of first instance and appeal save in most exceptional cases, as for instance, where the finding was based on the sole testimony of an unreliable witness who was himself a party to the preparation of a forged document in the case. The decisions in *Velur Devasthanam v. Sambandamurthi*⁴, and *Nagi Reddy v. Venkatappa*⁵ hold that orders under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, are merely police orders to prevent breaches of the peace and decide no questions of title; that proceedings under the section should not be continued where there is no longer any apprehension of breach of peace and there is ample time for obtaining a civil remedy, and that the magistrate dropping proceedings does not become functus officio but has jurisdiction to pass further orders in the case, for winding up the proceedings. Latchigouda, In re⁶, holds that the destruction of the notes of "inquest evidence" constitutes a flagrant violation of the provisions of section 162 and raises an inference of prejudice to the accused and he could not be deemed to have had a fair trial. In Vokkaligara Yengtappa In re⁷, it is held that a statement by an accused recorded in a case diary is inadmissible in evidence under section 162 even if there is something in such a statement in favour of the accused. Ramana Reddy, In re⁸, lays down that it is sufficient if before recording a confession a magistrate puts the necessary questions required by section 164 to the accused and it is not mandatory that he should keep on repeating these questions to him after every break in the recording of a long confession; also, it is not necessary for the magistrate to give reasons before beginning to record a confession for his satisfaction that the accused was going to make a voluntary statement. In Ramaswamy Reddiar, In re⁹, it is held that where a magistrate of the second class not empowered to record a confession under section 164 but with power to hold an inquest under section 176, records a confession made by the accused during the inquest, it cannot be said that such confession is not admissible in evidence. Vokkaligara Yengtappa, In re⁷, points out that under section 172, a court may use police diaries not as evidence in the case but to aid it in the inquiry or trial and the accused is not entitled to call for such diaries or to see them merely because they are referred to, but if they are used by the police officer to refresh his memory or if the court uses them to contradict a witness, the provisions of section 161 or section 145 of the Evidence Act would apply. In Molagan, In re¹⁰, it is declared that though the accused is not entitled to look into the case-diary, the court may in its discretion permit the defence counsel to see any portion of it which the court considers in the interests of justice he should see, and in appropriate cases the committing court can permit defence counsel to look into a case-diary to verify what the accused told the police as recorded before formulating his defence. *Sakuntala Bai v. Venkatakrishna Reddi*¹¹ lays down that a prosecution for an offence arising out of the abuse of official position by an act not purporting to be official does not require sanction under section 197. In Imam Sahib, In re¹², it is held that the provisions of section 233 apply to summons cases also. The decision in *Bhagat Singh v. The State*¹³ points out that a charge which relates to the accused firing at two persons is not a charge with respect to two offences and there is nothing wrong in law to regard a single act of firing by the accused as one offence only, though it may be that a single act in some cases may constitute more than one offence. Krishnan Naidu, In re¹, expresses the view that no general rule can be laid down as to when different offences may be said to have been committed in the course of the same transaction and the question when it arises must be determined on the facts of the particular case subject only to the requirement that when the trial Court splits up cases reference to it must be made in the judgment. It is pointed out by the Supreme Court in *Bhagwan Singh v. The State of Punjab*², that where a prosecution witness at the trial gives conflicting versions in chief and in cross-examination the prosecution is entitled to use the former statement of such witness in the committing Court either to contradict what was said in cross-examination or to corroborate what was said in chief and in either event, section 288 could be used to make the former statement substantive evidence. Whether an approver can be released on bail has been considered in Krishna Reddi, In re³, and *Karuppa Servai v. Kundaru*⁴, and they point out that an approver who was in remand when a pardon was tendered must be detained in custody under section 337 (3) till the termination of the trial of committal ensues, or till termination of the inquiry if committal does not ensue, and that the provisions of the section are mandatory. The scope of section 342 is elucidated by the Supreme Court in *Bejoy Chand Patra v. State of West Bengal*⁵, and it is observed that to sustain a conviction that the examination of the accused under that section was not proper or adequate it is not sufficient for the accused merely to show he has not been fully examined as required by the section but he must also show that such examination has materially prejudiced him. Mathali, In re⁶, points out that where in the committal Court all the circumstances appearing against the accused in the evidence given before the committing magistrate were put to the accused by the magistrate and answers obtained, and in the Sessions Court no new circumstance was disclosed in the evidence and the Sessions Judge after reading out to the accused his earlier statement asked him whether he wished to say anything more and the accused said he had nothing to add, it cannot be said that the examination of the accused was not proper, though it is desirable that the Sessions Judge should himself put separate simple questions to the accused so as to enable the demeanour of the accused explaining the incriminating circumstances alleged against him being observed. It is held in *Kathan Maistri v. Muthuveera Maistry*⁷, that section 347, permits the Magistrate to convert a calendar case into a P. R. case even where during inquiry the evidence discloses an offence exclusively triable by a Sessions Court and it cannot be said that the section applies only to cases which are triable both by the Sessions Court as well as by magistrates and not to cases exclusively triable by the Sessions Court. Narayanaraju, In re⁸, states that, under section 350, a judgment written by a predecessor while in office can be delivered by his successor and there is nothing illegal or irregular about it. The object of reading over the deposition prescribed in section 360 is explained by the Supreme Court in *Bhagwan Singh v. The State of Punjab*², as being intended to ensure that the record has faithfully and accurately embodied the gist of what the witness actually said and not to enable the witness to change his story. The decision in Yalpanathan, In re⁹, is valuable as focussing attention to the hardship likely to be caused to the accused by the dispensing with under section 362 (4) of the framing of charge by a Presidency Magistrate in the city, and to the necessity for legislation to remove distinction and make the procedure the same for the mofussil and city magistrates. The decision in Ravipati Sitaramayya, In re¹⁰, reveals different view regarding the scope of a reference to a third Judge under section 378; one of the learned Judges expressing the opinion that no fetter can be placed on the third Judge who will be at liberty to express and act on the opinion he arrives at and pass what in his view will be the appropriate sentence—even a sentence of death—and the other learned Judge stating that the third Judge cannot pass a death sentence in a case where the Judge favouring conviction thinks a sentence of transportation is appropriate, with the other Judge favouring acquittal. It is pointed out in Devanugraham, *In re*¹, that a prosecution launched without a proper sanction is a nullity and section 401 (3) is no bar to the institution of a fresh prosecution against the accused for the same offence on the same facts. The Supreme Court states in *Surajpal Singh v. The State*², that it is well established that in an appeal under section 417, the High Court has full power to review the evidence upon which the order of acquittal was founded; but it is equally well-settled that the presumption of the innocence of the accused is further reinforced by his acquittal by the trial Court, and that the acquittal can therefore be reversed only for very substantial and compelling reasons. *Narayana Reddi v. The State*³, expresses the view that the High Court can quash a committal to the Sessions under section 437, only on a point of law, and an order of commitment resting upon no acceptable or valid evidence is a point of law on which the commitment can be quashed. In *Kunjikannan v. Uthayya*⁴, it is pointed out that the powers given to the Sessions Judge and the District Magistrate under section 438, are purely discretionary and the revisional powers must be exercised sparingly. In *Public Prosecutor v. Kandaswami Mudali*⁵, the opinion is expressed that under section 471, as it now stands it is essential that the accused is detained in a place and not with a person. The provision for maintenance to wives deserted by their husbands contained in section 488 is held in *Thamsi Goundan v. Kanni Ammal*⁶, not to contravene Article 14 of the Constitution. It is pointed out in *Subbayamma v. Venkata Rao*⁷, that in a case of maintenance under section 488, where the husband makes allegations about the wife living in adultery and makes that his defence to deny the claim of the wife to maintenance, the husband ought to begin the case and let in evidence of unchastity so that the wife may rebut it. *Sampoornam v. Sundaresan*⁸ takes the view that section 488 (8) does not refer to a permanent residence, and the term "residence" refers to something more than a brief visit but not to such a continuity as to amount to domicile. *Karuppan Servai v. Kundaru*⁹ holds that sections 497 and 498 cannot apply to an approver and in *Public Prosecutor v. George Williams*¹⁰, it is declared that the provisions of section 497 (5) read with section 561-A, saving the inherent power of the High Court to give effect to an order under the Criminal Procedure Code, or to prevent abuse of the process of any Court, or otherwise to secure the ends of justice, will give it ample powers to deal effectively with accused persons released on bail who by continuing to commit the crimes denied in the appeal memo render themselves liable to rearrest and recommittal to custody. *Ramachari v. Ramachari*¹¹, lays down that where a petition for transfer is found to be absolutely devoid of merits and thoroughly frivolous and vexatious, it is a fit case for the High Court to exercise its power under section 526 (6) to put an end to the petition intended to protract the proceedings and harass the opposite party. *Narayanaraju, In re*¹², takes the view that where an application for adjournment was made after the defence closed its case, the mandatory provision of section 526 (8) does not apply. The decision of the Supreme Court in *Bhagwan Singh v. State of Punjab*¹³, makes it clear that the Court is not bound to examine a witness called under section 540 itself as a Court witness and it cannot be held that it can never entrust the examination to the prosecuting counsel. The scope of section 540 is explained in *Rengaswami Naicker v. Muriuga Naicker*¹⁴, where it is stated that the section gives an unrestricted power to the Court to summon a witness, the only restriction being that the power shall not be exercised to save parties from trouble or expense; and it is not only the prerogative but the plain duty of the Court to examine such of those witnesses as it considers absolutely necessary for doing justice between the State and the subject; and it will not be an improper exercise of the power merely because the evidence taken supports the prosecution case.

Constitution of India (1950), Article 286 (1) (b)—Restriction as to imposition of tax on sale or purchase of goods in the course of "import or export"—Scope.

Interpretation of Statutes—Assembly debates—Value of.

Whatever else may or may not fall within Article 286 (1) (b) of the Constitution of India, sales and purchases which themselves occasion the export or import of the goods, as the case may be, out of or into the territory of India come within the exemption. Such sales must of necessity be put through by transporting of goods by rail or ship or both out of the territory of India, that is to say by employing the machinery of export. A sale by export involves a series of integrated activities commencing from the agreement of sale with a foreign buyer and ending with the delivery of the goods to a common carrier for transport out of the country by land or sea. Such a sale cannot be dissociated from the export without which it cannot be effectuated, and the sale and resultant export form parts of a single transaction. Of these two integrated activities, which together constitute an export sale, whichever first occurs can well be regarded as taking place in the course of the other. Assuming that the properties in the goods passed to the foreign buyers and the sales were thus completed within the State before the goods commenced their journey the sales must nevertheless be regarded as having taken place in the course of the export and are therefore exempt under Article 286 (1) (b). That clause assumes that the sale has taken place within the limits of the State and exempts it if it takes place in the course of the export of the goods concerned.

The question whether the word "sale" used in the Constitution has the same meaning as in the law relating to the sale of goods or imports a wider concept than the passing of title from the seller to the buyer which under that law is determined by highly technical rules based upon the presumed intention of the parties and liable to be displaced by their expressed intention, was left open. It was assumed for the purposes of these appeals that the word sale used in the Constitution has the same meaning as in the law relating to the sale of goods.

Reference to speeches made by members of the Constituent Assembly in the course of the debates on the draft Constitution in interpreting any article of the Constitution is unwarranted.

Gopalan's case, (1950) 2 M.L.J. 42 : 1950 S.C.R. 88: (1950) S.C.J. 174, referred to.

The "import-export" clause found in the American Constitution is widely different in language, scope and purpose and a varying body of doctrines and tests have grown around them interpreting, extending or restricting, from time to time, their operation and application in the context of the expanding American Commerce and Industry and not much help can be derived from them in the solution of the problems arising under Article 286 of the Indian Constitution.

Appeals from the Judgment and Order dated the 10th day of January, 1952, of the High Court of Judicature of Travancore-Cochin at Ernakulam (Kunhiraman, C.J., and Subramania Iyer, J.) in Original Petitions Nos. 4, 23 and 24 of 1951, respectively.

T. N. Subramania Iyer, Advocate-General of Travancore-Cochin (T. R. Balakrishna Iyer and M. R. Krishna Pillai, Advocates, with him), for the Appellants (in all the Appeals).

N. C. Chatterjee, Senior Advocate (C. R. Pattabhiraman, Advocate, with him), for the Respondent in C. A. No. 25 of 1952.

C. R. Pattabhiraman, Advocate, for the respondent in C. A. No. 23 of 1952.

N. C. Chatterjee, Senior Advocate (Thomas Vellappally, Advocate, with him), for the respondent in C. A. No. 29 of 1952.

FOR THE INTERVENERS :

1. M. C. Setalvad, Attorney-General for India, and C. K. Daphtary, Solicitor-General for India (G. N. Joshi, Advocate, with them) for the Union of India.

2. M. P. Amin, Advocate-General of Bombay (M. M. Desai, Advocate, with him), for the State of Bombay.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Patanjali Sastri, C. J.—These are connected appeals from the Judgment and Order of the High Court of Travancore-Cochin quashing the assessments under the United State of Travancore and Cochin Sales Tax Act (No. 11 of 1125 M. E.) (hereinafter referred to as "the Act") on the respondents on the turnover of the sales of the commodities (coir products in C. A. 25, lemon grass oil in C. A. 28 and tea in C. A. 29) in which they respectively deal.

The dealings followed more or less the same pattern in all the cases and consisted of export sales of the respective commodities to foreign buyers on c.i.f. or f.o.b. terms as the case may be.

The respondents in each case claimed exemption from assessment in respect of the sales effected by them on the ground inter alia, that such sales took place "in the course of the export of the goods out of the territory of India" within the meaning of Article 286 (1) (b) of the Constitution. The Sales Tax Authorities rejected the contention as, in their view, the sales were completed before the goods were shipped and could not, therefore, be considered to have taken place in the course of the export.

Thereupon the respondents by separate petitions applied to the High Court of the United State of Travancore and Cochin (hereinafter referred to as the State) under Article 226 of the Constitution for issue of writs of certiorari and prohibition quashing the assessments made on them and prohibiting such assessment in future. The applications were heard along with nine other applications for similar reliefs by dealers in cashew nuts, by a Division Bench (Kunhiraman, C. J., and Subramania Iyer, J.) who upheld the claim of exemption and quashed the assessment orders in respect of the transactions subsequent to the commencement of the Constitution. From that decision the State has preferred appeals in all the cases on a certificate granted by the High Court under Article 132 (1) of the Constitution.

As the appeals involved important questions of law which may have a bearing on the sales tax legislation of the various States in India, this Court directed notice of these proceedings to the Attorney-General for India and the Advocates-General of those States, and they have intervened and participated in the debate at the hearing of these appeals.

When the argument had proceeded for some time, it was discovered that the material facts relating to the course of dealings in cashew nuts, which were more complex in character, had not been clearly ascertained and consequently the relative appeals were remitted to the High Court for findings on certain points agreed upon by the parties. These three appeals were, however, fully heard as they were found to admit of disposal on the materials on record.

Article 286 (1), on which the respondents found their claim to exemption runs thus :

“No law of a State shall impose, or authorise the imposition of, a tax on the sale or purchase of goods where such sale or purchase takes place—

(a) outside the State ; or

(b) in the course of the import of the goods into, or export of the goods out of, the territory of India.

Explanation.—For the purposes of sub-clause (a), a sale or purchase shall be deemed to have taken place in the State in which the goods have actually been delivered as a direct result of such sale or purchase for the purpose of consumption in that State, notwithstanding the fact that under the general law relating to sale of goods the property in the goods has by reason of such sale or purchase passed in another State.

On the scope and meaning of cl. (b), the learned Judges expressed their view as follows :—

“The words “in the course of” make the scope of this clause very wide. It is not restricted to the point of time at which goods are imported into or exported from India. The series of transactions which necessarily precede export or import of goods will come within the purview of this clause. Therefore, while in the course of that series of transactions the sale has taken place, such a sale is exempted from the levy of sales tax. The sale may have taken place within the boundaries of the State. Even then sales tax cannot be levied if the sale had taken place while the goods were in the course of import into India or in the course of export out of India. We are stressing this point because both parties in what we may describe as the cashew nut cases entered into lengthy discussion as to the exact point of time when the sale became completed and as to the exact place where the goods were when the sale became a completed transaction.”

On this interpretation, local purchases “made for the purpose of export” were held by the learned Judges to be “integral parts of the process of exporting”. In support of this construction the learned Judges referred to the debates in the Constituent Assembly on clause 264-A of the Draft Constitution which corresponded to Article 286 and quoted from the speech of one of the members who unsuccessfully moved an amendment defining export as meaning the last transaction and import as meaning the first transaction.

In view of the wide construction thus placed upon cl. (b) of Article 286 (1), the arguments before us ranged over a large field, and as many as four different views as to its scope and meaning were pressed upon us for our acceptance.

(1) The exemption is limited to sales by export and purchases by import, that is to say, those sales and purchases which occasion the export or import as the case may be, and extends to no other transactions however directly or immediately connected, in intention or purpose, with such sales or purchases, and where-soever the property in the goods may pass to the buyer. This is the view put forward on behalf of the State of Madras. The Advocate-General thought that a State could not impose sales-tax though title passed within State limits while the goods were still under transport on the high seas and no question of exemption could therefore arise. He said however, that no such case had actually arisen.

(2) In addition to the sales and purchases of the kind described above, the exemption covers the last purchase by the exporter and the first sale by the importer, if any, so directly and proximately connected with the export, sale or import purchase as to form part of the same transaction. This view was sponsored by the Attorney-General who was also inclined to think, as advised at the moment that sales or purchases made while the goods were on the high seas, would be exempt, but he would prefer not to go into the wider question, because, whatever view was taken, sales such as those involved in the present cases must, in any event, be exempt.

(3) The exemption covers only those sales and purchases under which the property in the goods concerned is transferred from the seller to the buyer during the course of the transit, that is, after the goods begin to move and before they reach their foreign destination. This view is supported by the State of Bombay and certain other States.

(4) The view which found favour with the learned Judges of the High Court in the passage already extracted. It will be seen that the construction first mentioned is the narrowest and the last mentioned the widest.

We are clearly of opinion that the sales here in question, which occasioned the export in each case, fall within the scope of the exemption under Article 286 (1) (b). Such sales must of necessity be put through by transporting the goods by rail or ship or both out of the territory of India, that is to say, by employing the machinery of export. A sale by export thus involves a series of integrated activities commencing from the agreement of sale with a foreign buyer and ending with the delivery of the goods to a common carrier for transport out of the country by land or sea. Such a sale cannot be dissociated from the export without which it cannot be effectuated, and the sale and resultant export form parts of a single transaction. Of these two integrated activities, which together constitute an export sale, whichever first occurs can well be regarded as taking place in the course of the other. Assuming without deciding that the property in the goods in the present cases passed to the foreign buyers and the sales were thus completed within the State before the goods commenced their journey as found by the Sales Tax Authorities, the sales must, nevertheless, be regarded as having taken place in the course of the export and are, therefore, exempt, under Article 286 (1) (b). That clause, indeed, assumes, that the sale has taken place within the limits of the State and exempts it if it takes place in the course of the export of the goods concerned.

In the foregoing discussion we have assumed that the word "sale" used in the Constitution has the same meaning as in the law relating to the Sale of Goods, but it has been suggested in the course of the argument that it imports a wider concept than the passing of title from the seller to the buyer which under that law is determined by highly technical rules based upon the presumed intention of the parties and liable to be displaced by their expressed intention. We leave the point open as it is unnecessary for the purpose of these appeals to pronounce any opinion upon it.

It was said that, on the construction we have indicated above, a "sale in the course of export" would become practically synonymous with "export", and would reduce clause (b) to a mere redundancy, because Article 246 (1), read with Entry No. 83 of List I of the Seventh Schedule, vests legislative power with respect to "duties of customs including export duties" exclusively in Parliament, and that would be sufficient to preclude State taxation of such transactions. We see no force in this suggestion. It might well be argued, in the absence of a provision like clause (b) prohibiting in terms the levy of tax on the sale or purchase of goods where such sales and purchases are effected through the machinery of export and import, that both the powers of taxation, though exclusively vested in the Union and the States respectively, could be exercised in respect of the same sale by export or purchase by import, the sales tax and the export duty being regarded as essentially of a different character. A similar argument induced the Federal Court to hold in *Province of Madras v. Boddu Paidanna and Sons*¹ that both central excise duty and provincial sales tax could be validly imposed on the first sale of groundnut oil and cake by the manufacturer or producer as "the two taxes are economically two separate and distinct imposts". Lest similar reasoning should lead to the imposition of such cumulative burden on the export-import trade of this country which is of great importance to the nation's economy, the Constituent Assembly may well have thought it necessary to exempt in terms sales by export and purchases by import from Sales Tax by inserting Article 286 (1) (b) in the Constitution.

We are not much impressed with the contention that no sale or purchase can be said to take place "in the course of" export or import unless the property in the goods is transferred to the buyer during their actual movement, as for instance, where the shipping documents are indorsed and delivered within the State by the seller to a local agent of the foreign buyer after the goods have been actually shipped, or where such documents are cleared on payment or on acceptance by the Indian buyer before the arrival of the goods within the State. This view, which lays undue stress on the etymology of the word "course" and formulates a mechanical test for the application of clause (b), places, in our opinion, too narrow a construction upon that clause, in so far as it seeks to limit its operation only to sales and purchases effected during the transit of the goods, and would, if accepted, rob the exemption of much of its usefulness.

We accordingly hold that whatever else may or may not fall within Article 286 (1) (b), sales and purchases which themselves occasion the export or the import of the goods, as the case may be, out of or into the territory of India come within the exemption and that is enough to dispose of these appeals.

Our attention was called, in the course of the debate, to various American decisions which hold that the power "to regulate" inter-state commerce vested exclusively in the Congress by Article I, section 8 (3) of the American Constitution (the Commerce Clause) excludes by implication the States' power of taxation only when the goods enter "the export stream", and until then such goods form part of "the general mass of property in the State" subject, as such, to its jurisdiction to tax, and that this principle was also applicable to cases arising under Article I, section 9 (5) and section 10 (2) (the import-export clause), [see e.g., Empresa Siderurgica v. Merced Co.]². These clauses are widely different in language, scope and purpose, and a varying body of doctrines and tests have grown around them interpreting, extending or restricting, from time to time, their operation and application in the context of the expanding American commerce and industry, and we are of opinion that not much help can be derived from them in the solution of the problems arising under Article 286 of the Indian Constitution.

It remains only to point out that the use made by the learned Judges below of the speeches made by the members of the Constituent Assembly in the course of the debates on the Draft Constitution is unwarranted. That this form of extrinsic aid to the interpretation of statutes is not admissible has been generally accepted in England, and the same rule has been observed in the construction of Indian statutes—see *Administrator-General of Bengal v. Prem Lal Mullick*³. The reason behind the rule was explained by one of us in *Gopalan's Case*⁴ thus :—

 2. 337 U.S. 154.
 3. (1895) 5 M.L.J. 157 : 22 I.A. 107, 118 : 1950 S.C.R. 88 (S.C.).
 4. (1950) 2 M.L.J. 42 : (1950) S.C.J. 174 : 1950 S.C.R. 88 (S.C.).

A speech made in the course of the debate on a bill could at best be indicative of the subjective intent of the speaker, but it could not reflect the inarticulate mental process lying behind the majority vote which carried the bill. Nor is it reasonable to assume that the minds of all those legislators were in accord, or, as it is more tersely put in an American case—

Those who did not speak may not have agreed with those who did; and those who spoke might differ from each other—*United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Association*¹.

This rule of exclusion has not always been adhered to in America, and sometimes distinction is made between using such material to ascertain the purpose of a statute and using it for ascertaining its meaning. It would seem that the rule is adopted in Canada and Australia—see Craies on Statute Law, 5th Edn. p. 122.

In the result, agreeing with the conclusion of the High Court, though on different grounds, we dismiss the appeals with Costs.

Mahomedan Law—Marriage—Presumption of from continuous co-habitation.

Mahomedan Law—Minor—De facto guardian—Has no power to enter into family settlement on behalf of minor.

Practice—Mesne profits—Cannot be allowed unless demanded.

A minor's brother as a de facto guardian under Mahomedan Law has no power to transfer any right or interest in the immoveable property of the minor and such a transfer if made will be void.

A family settlement on behalf of a minor entered into by his de facto guardian will be void not only qua the minor but would be void altogether qua all the parties including those who were sui juris.

The presumption in favour of lawful marriage would arise where there was prolonged and continued co-habitation as husband and wife and when there was no insurmountable obstacle to such a marriage, e.g., prohibited relationship between the parties, the woman being an undivorced wife of a husband who was alive and the like. The presumption of lawful marriage would be sufficient to establish that there was a lawful marriage between them, and that the children of such union were legitimate.

A claim for mesne profits cannot be allowed unless there was a demand for it. The claim cannot be included within the expression "awarding possession and occupation of the property aforesaid together with all the rights appertaining thereto."

On appeal from the Judgment and Decree, dated the 11th September, 1945, of the High Court of Judicature at Allahabad (Brand and Waliullah, JJ.) in First Appeal No. 212 of 1942, arising out of Judgment and Decree, dated the 28th February, 1942, of the Court of the Civil Judge of Azamgarh in Original Suit No. 4 of 1941.

C. K. Daphtary, Senior Advocate (Nuruddin Ahmed, Advocate, with him), for Respondents.

Bhagwati, J.—This is an appeal from the judgment and decree of the High Court of Judicature at Allahabad which set aside a decree passed by the Civil Judge of Azamgarh decreeing the plaintiff's claim.

One Haji Abdur Rahman, hereinafter referred to as "Haji" a Sunni Mohammedan, died on the 26th January, 1940, leaving behind him a large estate. He left him surviving the plaintiffs 1 to 3, his sons, plaintiff 4 his daughter and plaintiff 5, his wife, defendant 6 his sister, defendant 7 his daughter by a pre-deceased wife Batul Bibi and defendants 1 to 4 his nephews and defendant 5 his grand-nephew. Plaintiff's case is that immediately after his death the defendant 1 who was the Chairman, Town Area qasba Mubarakpur and a member of the District Board, Azamgarh and defendant 5 who was an old associate of his started propaganda against them, that they set afloat a rumour to the effect that the plaintiffs 1 to 4 were not the legitimate children of Haji and that the plaintiff 5 was not his lawfully wedded wife, that the defendants 1 to 4 set up an oral gift of one-third of the estate in their favour and defendant 5 set up an oral will bequeathing one-third share of the estate to him and sought to interfere with the possession of the plaintiffs over the estate and nearly stopped all sources of income. It was alleged that under these circumstances a so-called deed of family settlement was executed by and between the parties on the 5th April, 1940, embodying an agreement in regard to the distribution of the properties belonging to the estate, that plaintiff 3 was a minor of the age of about 9 years and he was represented by the plaintiff 1 who acted as his guardian and executed the deed of settlement for and on his behalf. On these allegations the plaintiffs filed on the 25th November, 1940, in the Court of Civil Judge of Azamgarh the suit out of which the present appeal arises against the defendants 1 to 5 and defendants 6 and 7 for a declaration that the deed of settlement, dated 5th April, 1940, be held to be invalid and to establish their claim to their legitimate shares in the estate of Haji under Mohammedan Law. The defendant 8 a daughter of the plaintiff 5 whose paternity was in dispute was added as a party defendant to the suit, the plaintiffs claiming that she was the daughter of the plaintiff 5 by Haji and the defendants 1 to 5 alleging that she was a daughter of the plaintiff 5 by her former husband Alim-ullah.

The only defendants who contested the claim of the plaintiff were the defendants 1 to 5. They denied that the plaintiff 5 was the lawfully wedded wife and the plaintiffs 1 to 4 were the legitimate children of Haji. They also contended that the deed of settlement embodied the terms of a family settlement which had been bona fide arrived at between the parties in regard to the disputed claims to the estate of Haji and was binding on the plaintiffs.

It is significant to observe that the defendants 6 and 7 who were the admitted heirs of Haji did not contest the plaintiffs' claim at all.

The two issues which were mainly contested before the trial Court were,

(1) Whether the plaintiffs 1 to 4 are the legitimate issue of and the plaintiff 5 is the wedded wife of Abdul Rahman deceased;

(2) Whether the agreement dated 5th April, 1940, was executed by the plaintiffs after understanding its contents fully or was obtained from them by fraud or undue influence? was the said deed insufficiently stamped? was it beneficial to the minor plaintiffs?

As regards the first issue there was no document evidencing the marriage between the plaintiff 5 and Haji. The plaintiff 5 and Haji had however lived together as man and wife for 23 to 24 years and the plaintiffs 1 to 4 were born of that union. There was thus a strong presumption of the marriage of Haji with plaintiff 5 having taken place and of the legitimacy of plaintiffs 1 to 4. The trial Court did not attach any importance to the question of onus or presumption, examined the evidence which was led by both the parties with a view to come to a finding in regard to this issue, and found as follows :

"So far as Musammat Rahima's marriage with Alim-ullah or another Abdul Rahman is concerned the evidence of both the parties stands on the same level and is not worthy of much credit. I have, however, not the least hesitation to observe that so far as the oral evidence and the circumstances of the case are concerned, they all favour the plaintiffs. I, however, find it difficult to ignore the testimony of the defendants' witnesses Shah Allaul Haq and Molvi Iqbal Ahmad Owing to the voluminous oral evidence adduced by the plaintiffs and the circumstances that apparently favour them, I gave my best attention to this case, but upon a careful consideration of the whole evidence on the record, I am not prepared to hold that the plaintiffs 1 to 4 are the legitimate issues of the plaintiff No. 5, the lawfully wedded wife of the deceased, Haji Abdul Rahman. I frankly admit that the matter is not free from difficulty and doubt but to my mind the scale leans away from the plaintiffs and I am not satisfied that their version is correct."

On the second issue the learned Trial Judge came to the conclusion that the disputed compromise amounted to a family settlement; that it was beneficial to the interests of the minor plaintiff and that it was made by the parties willingly and without any fraud or undue influence. On these findings the suit was dismissed with costs.

The plaintiffs filed an appeal to the High Court of Judicature at Allahabad. After considering the several authorities on the binding nature of family settlements cited before it, it came to the conclusion that it did not bind the plaintiffs. As regards defendants 1 to 5 it was held that there was no consideration whatsoever which could in any way support the arrangement. Plaintiffs 4 and 5 being purdanashin ladies, it was found that they had no chance at any stage of the transaction of getting independent advice in regard to the contents or the effect of the document which they were executing and that even if the deed were valid otherwise it would not be binding on them. It was further held that the plaintiff 3 who would be about 9 years of age at the time of the execution of the deed was represented in the transaction by his brother who could not be the legal guardian of his property and that the deed in so far as it adversely affected the interest of plaintiff 3 would not be binding on him. On the question of marriage and legitimacy the High Court came to the conclusion that if the trial Court had considered the question of onus in its proper light and given the plaintiffs the benefit of the initial presumption in favour of legitimacy and lawful wedlock under the Mohammedan law he would have recorded a finding in their favour. The defendants 1 to 5 had alleged that at the time of the commencement of sexual relations between the plaintiff 5 and Haji, plaintiff 5 was the wife of one Alim-ullah who was alive and that therefore the connection between the plaintiff 5 and Haji was in its origin illicit and continued as such with the result that the presumption in favour of a marriage between the plaintiff 5 and Haji and in favour of the legitimacy of plaintiffs 1 to 4 would not arise. The learned Trial Judge disbelieved the evidence led by the defendants 1 to 5 in regard to this marriage between the plaintiff 5 and Alim-ullah. The High Court upheld the finding and said :

"All these circumstances, to my mind, strongly militate against the theory of a first marriage of Musammat Rahima Bibi with the man called Alim-ullah. In this state of the evidence one cannot but hold that this story of the marriage with Alim-ullah was purely an after-thought on the part of the defendants 1 to 5 and it was invented only to get rid of the strong presumption under the Mohammedan law in favour of the paternity of plaintiffs 1 to 4 and the lawful wedlock of the plaintiff 5."

Having thus discredited the theory of the first marriage of the plaintiff 5 with Alim-ullah the High Court came to the conclusion that it was fully established that Musammat Rahima Bibi was the lawfully wedded wife and that the plaintiffs 1 to 4 are the legitimate children of Haji. The defendants 1 to 5 obtained leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council and the appeal was admitted on the 10th January, 1947.

Shri S. P. Sinha who appeared for the defendants 1 to 5 before us has urged the self-same two questions, namely : (1) Whether the deed of settlement is binding on the plaintiffs and (2) Whether the plaintiff 5 was the lawfully wedded wife and the plaintiffs 1 to 4 are the legitimate children of Haji.

In regard to the first question, it is unnecessary to discuss the evidence in regard to fraud, undue influence, want of independent advice, etc., as the question in our opinion is capable of being disposed of on a short point. It is admitted that the plaintiff 3 Ishtiaq Husan was a minor of the age of about 9 years at the date of the deed, and he was not represented as already stated by any legal guardian in this arrangement. The minor's brother had no power to transfer any right or interest in the immoveable property of the minor and such a transfer if made was void. (See Mulla's Mahomedan Law, 13th Edition, page 303, section 364.)

Reference may be made to the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in *Imambandi v. Mutsaddi*¹. In that case the mother who was neither the legal guardian of her minor children nor had been appointed their guardian under the Guardian and Wards Act had purported to transfer the shares of her minor children in the property inherited by them from their deceased father. Mr. Ameer Ali who delivered the judgment of the Board observed at page 82 as follows :

"The question how far, or under what circumstances according to Mahomedan law, a mother's dealing with her minor child's property are binding on the infant has been frequently before the Courts in India. The decisions, however, are by no means uniform, and betray two varying tendencies : one set of decisions purports to give such dealings a qualified force ; the other declares them wholly void and ineffective. In the former class of cases the main test for determining the validity of the particular transaction has been the benefit resulting from it to the minor ; in the latter, the admitted absence of authority or power on the part of the mother to alienate or encumber the minor's property."

The test of benefit resulting from the transaction to the minor was negatived by the Privy Council and it was laid down that under the Mahomedan law a person who has charge of the person or property of a minor without being his legal guardian, and who may, therefore, be conveniently called a "de facto guardian," has no power to convey to another any right or interest in immoveable property which the transferee can enforce against the infant.

Shri S. P. Sinha relied upon a decision of the Calcutta High Court reported in *Mahamed Keramutullah Miah v. Keamutulla*², where it was held that there was nothing in the doctrine of family arrangements opposed to the general principle that when it was sought to bind a minor by an agreement entered into on his behalf, it must be shown that the agreement was for the benefit of the minor ; that if improper advantage had been taken of the minor's position, a family arrangement could be set aside on the ground of undue influence or inequality of position or one or other of the grounds which would vitiate such arrangement in the case of adults ; but where there was no defect of this nature, the settlement of a doubtful claim was of as much advantage to a minor as to an adult, and where a genuine dispute had been fairly settled the dispute could not be re-opened solely on the ground that one of the parties to the family arrangement was a minor.

This decision was reached on the 19th July, 1918, i.e., almost 5 months after the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council but it does not appear that the ruling was brought to the notice of the learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court. The test of the benefit resulting from the transaction to the minor which was negatived by their Lordships of the Privy Council was applied by the learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court in order to determine whether the family arrangement which was the subject-matter of the suit before them was binding on the minor.

Shri S. P. Sinha next relied upon a decision of the Chief Court of Oudh, *Ameer Hasan v. Md. Ejaz Husain*³. In that case an agreement to refer to arbitration was entered into by the mother for her minor children and an award was made by the arbitrators. The scheme of distribution of properties promulgated in the award was followed without any objection whatever for a long period extending over 14 years

2. A.I.R. 1919 Cal. 218.

3. A.I.R. 1929 Oudh 134.

and proceedings were taken at the instance of the minors for recovery of possession by actual partition of their shares in the properties. The Court held that the reference to arbitration could not be held binding on the minors and the award could not be held to be an operative document, but if the scheme of distribution promulgated in the award was in no way perverse or unfair or influenced by any corruption or misconduct of the arbitrators and had been followed without any objection whatever for a long period extending over 14 years, it would as well be recognised as a family settlement and the Court would be extremely reluctant to disturb the arrangement arrived at so many years ago. This line of reasoning was deprecated by their Lordships of the Privy Council in *Partap Singh v. Sant Kaur*¹, where their Lordships observed :

"It is however argued that the transaction should be upheld, because it was a family settlement. Their Lordships cannot assent to the proposition that a party can, by describing a contract as a family settlement, claim for it an exemption from the law governing the capacity of a person to make a valid contract."

We are therefore unable to accept this case as an authority for the proposition that a deed of settlement which is void by reason of the minor not having been properly represented in the transaction can be rehabilitated by the adoption of any such line of reasoning.

If the deed of settlement was thus void it could not be void only qua the minor plaintiff 3 but would be void altogether qua all the parties including those who were sui juris. This position could not be and was not as a matter of fact contested before us.

The contention of the defendants 1 to 5 in regard to the lawful wedlock between plaintiff 5 and Haji and the legitimacy of the plaintiffs 1 to 4 was equally untenable. The plaintiffs had no doubt to prove that the plaintiff 5 was the lawfully wedded wife and the plaintiffs 1 to 4 were the legitimate children of Haji. Both the Courts found that the factum of the marriage was not proved and the plaintiffs had therefore of necessity to fall back upon the presumption of marriage arising in Mahomedan Law. If that presumption of marriage arose, there would be no difficulty in establishing the status of the plaintiffs 1 to 4 as the legitimate children of Haji because they were admittedly born by the plaintiff 5 to Haji. The presumption of marriage arises in Mahomedan Law in the absence of direct proof from a prolonged and continual co-habitation as husband and wife. It will be apposite in this connection to refer to a passage from the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council in *Khajah Hidayat Oollah v. Rai Jan Khanum*². Their Lordships there quoted a passage from Macnaughten's Principles of Mahomedan Law :—

"The Mahomedan lawyers carry this disinclination (that is against bastardizing) much further ; they consider it the legitimate of reasoning to infer the existence of marriage from the proof of co-habitation None but children who are in the strictest sense of the word spurious are considered incapable of inheriting the estate of their putative father. The evidence of persons who would, in other cases, be considered incompetent witnesses is admitted to prove wedlock, and, in short, where by any possibility a marriage may be presumed, the law will rather do so than bastardize the issue, and whether a marriage be simply voidable or void ab initio the offspring of it will be deemed legitimate This I apprehend, with all due deference, is carrying the doctrine to an extent unwarranted by law ; for where children are not born of women proved to be married to their fathers, or of female slaves to their fathers, some kind of evidence (however slight) is requisite to form a presumption of matrimony The mere fact of casual concubinage is not sufficient to establish legitimacy : and if there be proved to have existed any insurmountable obstacle to the marriage of their putative father with their mother, the children, though not born of common women, will be considered bastards to all intents and purposes."

Their Lordships deduced from this passage the principle that where a child had been born to a father of a mother where there had been not a mere casual concubinage, but a more permanent connection, and where there was no insurmountable obstacle to such a marriage, then according to the Mahomedan Law, the presumption was in favour of such marriage having taken place.

1. (1938) 2 M.L.J. 962 : L.R. 65 I.A. 213 : 2 (1844) 3 M.I.A. 295 at 317.

The presumption in favour of a lawful marriage would thus arise where there was prolonged and continued co-habitation as husband and wife and where there was no insurmountable obstacle to such a marriage, e.g., prohibited relationship between the parties, the woman being an undivorced wife of a husband who was alive and the like. Further illustrations are to be found in the decisions of their Lordships of the Privy Council in *Abdool Razack v. Aga Mohamed Jaffar Bindneem*¹ and *Ghizaffar Ali Khan v. Mt. Khaniz Fatima*², where it was laid down that the presumption does not apply if the conduct of the parties was incompatible with the existence of the relation of husband and wife nor did it apply if the woman was admittedly a prostitute before she was brought to the man's house (see Mulla's Mahomedan Law, p. 238, section 268). If therefore there was no insurmountable obstacle to such a marriage and the man and woman had co-habited with each other continuously and for a prolonged period the presumption of lawful marriage would arise and it would be sufficient to establish that there was a lawful marriage between them.

The plaintiff 5 and Haji had been living as man and wife for 23 to 24 years openly and to the knowledge of all their relations and friends. The plaintiffs 1 to 4 were the children born to them. The plaintiff 5, Haji and the children were all staying in the family house and all the relations including the defendant 1 himself treated the plaintiff 5 as a wife of Haji and the plaintiffs 1 to 4 as his children. There was thus sufficient evidence of habit and repute. Haji moreover purchased a house and got the sale deed executed in the names of the plaintiffs 1 and 2 who were described therein as his sons. The evidence which was led by the defendants 1 to 5 to the contrary was discarded by the High Court as of a negative character and of no value. Even when the deed of settlement was executed between the parties the plaintiff 5 was described as the widow and plaintiffs 1 to 4 were described as the children of Haji. All these circumstances raised the presumption that the plaintiff 5 was the lawfully wedded wife and the plaintiffs 1 to 4 were the legitimate children of Haji.

The result therefore is that both the contentions urged by the defendants 1 to 5 against the plaintiffs' claim in suit fail and the decree passed in favour of the plaintiffs by the High Court must be affirmed.

It was however pointed out by Shri S. P. Sinha that the High Court erred in awarding to the plaintiffs mesne profits even though there was no demand for the same in the plaint. The learned Solicitor-General appearing for the plaintiffs conceded that there was no demand for mesne profits as such but urged that the claim for mesne profits would be included within the expression "awarding possession and occupation of the property aforesaid together with all the rights appertaining thereto." We are afraid that the claim for mesne profits cannot be included within this expression and the High Court was in error in awarding to the plaintiffs mesne profits though they had not been claimed in the plaint. The provision in regard to the mesne profits will therefore have to be deleted from the decree. We dismiss the appeal of the defendants 1 to 5 and affirm the decree passed by the High Court in favour of the plaintiffs, deleting therefrom the provision in regard to mesne profits. The plaintiffs will of course be entitled to their costs throughout from the defendants 1 to 5.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), sections 66 and 65-A—Mortgagor in possession before enactment of section 65-A by Act XX of 1939—If had power to grant a permanent lease of mortgaged property so as to bind the mortgagee—Validity of lease—Burden of proof.

The question whether the mortgagor in possession has power to lease the mortgaged property has got to be determined with reference to the authority of the mortgagor as bailiff or agent for the mortgagee to deal with the property in the usual course of management. It has to be determined on general principles and not on the distinction between an English mortgage and a simple mortgage or on considerations germane to section 66 of the Transfer of Property Act.

The mortgagor in possession may make a lease conformable to usage in the ordinary course of management, for instance he may create a tenancy from year to year in the case of agricultural lands or from month to month in the case of houses. But it is not competent to the mortgagor to grant a lease on unusual terms, or to alter the character of the land or to authorise its use in a manner or for a purpose different from the mode in which he himself had used it before he granted the mortgage.

It is for the lessee if he wants to resist the claim of the mortgagee to establish that the lease in his favour was granted on the usual terms in the ordinary course of management. Such a plea if established and it must not be overlooked that the burden of proof in this matter is upon him—would furnish a complete answer to the claim of the mortgagee. If the lessee failed to establish this position he would certainly have no defence to an action at the instance of the mortgagee.

Where there is no allegation that a grant of permanent lease by the mortgagor was a dealing with the mortgaged property in the usual course of management by the mortgagor the lessee has no answer to the mortgagee's claim to possession by virtue of his purchase in enforcement of the mortgage.

On appeal from the Judgment and Decree dated the 26th January, 1944, of the High Court of Judicature at Patna (Fazl Ali, C.J. and Chatterji, J.) in appeal from Original Decree No. 4 of 1941, arising out of Judgment and Decree dated the 20th September, 1940, of the Court of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Hazaribagh in Title Suit No. 45 of 1939.

S. N. Mukherjee, Advocate, for Appellant.

Gangacharan Mukherjee and A. N. Sinha, Advocates, for Respondent No. 1.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Bhagwati, J.—The question that arises for our consideration in this appeal is whether prior to the enactment of section 65-A of the Transfer of Property Act in 1939 a mortgagor in possession had the power to grant a permanent lease of the mortgaged property so as to bind the mortgagee.

One Raja Nilkanth Narain Singh was the owner of Gadi Sirampur and he executed on the 1st August, 1914, a simple mortgage of Gadi Sirampur in favour of the Chota Nagpur Banking Association, Limited. In 1920, the Bank filed a suit against his son Wazir Narain Singh to enforce the mortgage security and obtained a mortgage decree on the 29th November, 1921. The Bank purchased a third share of Gadi Sirampur in execution of that decree on the 28th October, 1922. Proceedings were taken to set aside this sale. During the pendency of these proceedings it appears that on the 5th November, 1925, Wazir Narain Singh granted a permanent lease of four villages Nawadih, Koldih, Pandna and Chihut'a by a Registered Patta to one Hiranman Ram who was the Manager and Karta of his joint Hindu family. The permanent lease was taken by him in his own name and in the name of his son Chohan Ram. An agreement was subsequently arrived at between the Bank and Wazir Narain Singh that if Wazir Narain Singh paid to the Bank on or before the 16th August, 1926, the sum of Rs. 1,10,631-4-0 the sale would be set aside. Wazir Narain Singh executed on the 14th August, 1926, a mortgage of Gadi Sirampur in favour of the Manager of the Court of Wards in charge of the plaintiff's estate during his minority to secure repayment of a sum of Rs. 1,47,000 and out of the same satisfied the dues of the Bank and the sale in favour of the Bank was accordingly set aside. The plaintiff through the Manager of the Court of Wards filed a suit on the 4th February, 1929, to enforce this mortgage and he impleaded as co-defendants in that suit Hiranman Ram as defendant 20 and his father Dilo Ram as defendant 19. A final decree for sale was passed on the 18th September, 1931, and the plaintiff purchased Gadi Sirampur at the auction sale held in execution of this decree on the 6th April, 1935. Delivery of possession was obtained by the plaintiff through the Court on the 16th February, 1936. Dilo Ram died after the mortgage decree but Hiranman Ram and his son Chohan Ram continued in actual possession of the disputed villages and the plaintiff therefore filed on the 16th November, 1939, the suit, out of which this appeal arises, in the Court of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Hazaribagh against Hiranman Ram and Chohan Ram, defendants 1 and 2 for khas possession of these villages. The plaintiff contended that he was subrogated to the position of the Bank, that the decree which had been passed in the mortgage suit was binding on the defendants, that he was the auction-purchaser in execution of that mortgage-decree and that the Patta being subsequent to the plaintiff's mortgage thus came to an end and he was entitled to recover khas possession from the defendants. Defendant 2 filed his written statement contesting the plaintiff's claim. He denied that the plaintiff was subrogated to the position of the Bank. He contended that the decree in the mortgage suit was not binding on him as he was not a party to that suit. He further contended that the Patta could not be put an end to by the auction-sale of the mortgaged property. The defendant 1 filed a separate written statement. He denied that he was the Manager and Karta of the joint Hindu family. He also contended that there was a partition amongst the members of the joint family within a year after their possession of the properties in suit and the properties had been allotted at that partition to the defendant 2.

The trial Court held that the plaintiff was subrogated to the position of the Bank. It also held that the defendant 1 was the Manager and Karta of the joint family and that the defendant 2 was fully represented in the mortgage suit, that the decree in the mortgage suit was binding on the defendants and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover possession of the said properties and mesne profits from the defendants. The defendants appealed against this decree to the High Court of Judicature at Patna. The High Court negatived the contention in regard to constructive res judicata which was urged on behalf of the plaintiff. It then considered the further contention that Wazir Narain Singh had after creating the mortgage in favour of the Bank no power to grant the permanent lease in question to the defendants. After considering all the authorities which were cited before it, it came to the conclusion that the question whether Wazir Narain Singh had got such power or not had to be determined with reference to the provisions of section 66 of the Transfer of Property Act and the crucial test was whether the lease rendered the mortgagee's security insufficient. In spite of the fact that there was no allegation in the plaint that the defendant's lease had the effect of rendering the security of the Bank insufficient, the High Court went into this question and on a calculation of some figures came to the conclusion that the lease of the disputed villages in favour of the defendants did not in any way render the security of the bank insufficient. It therefore held that the lease was valid and was not affected by the plaintiff's mortgage decree or by the execution sale under that decree and accordingly dismissed the plaintiff's suit. The plaintiff obtained leave to appeal to the Privy Council from this decision of the High Court and the appeal was admitted on the 9th January, 1946.

Both the Courts below found that the plaintiff was subrogated to the position of the Bank. They also found that the defendant 2 was sufficiently represented in the mortgage suit. These findings were not challenged before us and the only question which survived for our consideration was whether Wazir Narain Singh had the power to grant a permanent lease to the defendants so as to bind the plaintiff.

The question whether Wazir Narain Singh had such power has got to be determined under the law as it stood prior to the enactment of section 65 (A) of the Transfer of Property Act by Act XX of 1929. The mortgagor's power to lease the mortgaged property was the subject-matter of conflicting judicial decisions. Relying upon the rule of English Common Law under which the mortgagor had no power to lease, it was held in some cases that a mortgagor could not ordinarily without the concurrence of the mortgagee execute a lease which could be binding on the mortgagee. In other cases a distinction was drawn between English mortgages and other mortgages and it was considered that the mortgagor in India remained the owner and when in possession could prima facie exercise the rights of ownership inclusive of the power to grant leases of the mortgaged property. The question was decided with reference to section 66 of the Transfer of Property Act and it was held that the mortgagor could grant leases which were not wasteful in their effect on the mortgagee's security. This was the principle deduced by Jenkins, C.J., in *Balmukund v. Motilal*¹ from the old cases of *Banee Pershad v. Reet Bhunjun Singh*². This line of reasoning was not adopted in other cases which laid down a different rule, viz., that a mortgagor in possession might grant a lease conformable to usage in the ordinary course of management but was not competent to grant a lease on unusual terms or authorise the use of land in a manner or for a purpose different from the mode in which he himself had used it before he granted the mortgage. This was laid down by Sir Ashutosh Mukherjee, J., in *Madan Mohan Singh v. Raj Kishore Kumari*³ and was followed in a number of cases. There was thus a conflict of decisions which was sought to be resolved by the enactment of section 65-A of the Transfer of Property Act which dealt with the mortgagor's power to lease while lawfully in possession of the mortgaged property.

"It is an elementary rule that though a mortgagor may assign the mortgaged premises, the assignee can only take subject to the encumbrances, and if the property is sold or foreclosed by the mortgagee any interest which the mortgagor may have created since the mortgage will be destroyed." (Ghosh on Mortgages, Vol. I, p. 212.)

As was observed by Lord Selborne in *Corbett v. Plowden*⁴:

"If a mortgagor left in possession, grants a lease without the concurrence of the mortgagee (and for this purpose, it makes no difference whether it is an equitable lease by an agreement under which possession is taken or a legal lease by actual demise), the lessee has a precarious title, inasmuch as although the lease is good as between himself and the mortgagor who granted it, the paramount title of the mortgagee may be asserted against both of them."

It does not however follow that a lessee from the mortgagor acquires no interest whatever in the property demised to him. A person taking a lease from a mortgagor after the mortgage does acquire an interest in the equity of redemption, and can claim to redeem on that footing. But this right of redemption does not necessarily mean that a lease of this character is always operative against the mortgagee. Merely because a lessee acquires an interest in the mortgaged property which is sufficient to enable him to redeem the mortgage it does not follow that the interest which the lessee has thus acquired is operative against the mortgagee. The true position is somewhere in the middle of these two extremes. The mortgagee is not normally bound by the acts of the mortgagor with reference to the mortgaged property:

"But if a mortgagee takes his security with knowledge of the purposes to which the land is applied and allows the mortgagor to remain in possession he will be bound by the acts done by the mortgagor in accordance with the usual course." (Ghosh on Mortgages, Vol. I, p. 212.)

3. (1816) 21 C.W.N. 88.
4. (1884) 25 Ch. D. 678 at p. 681.

As indicated in the observations of Sir James Parke in *Pope v. Briggs*¹, the mortgagor might be considered as acting in the nature of a bailiff or agent for the mortgagee :

"Consequently, if the mortgagor, after he has granted the mortgage, deals with the property in the usual course of management, the interest created by him may be rightly deemed operative against the mortgagee. An illustration of the view is found in the case of *Moreland v. Richardson*², where a person took a mortgage of a burial ground and it was held that as the object of the burial ground is to grant rights of burial, this being the mode in which such property is dealt with, the mortgagee was not entitled to disturb the graves of those who had been buried on the land, while the mortgagor continued to hold it. The mortgagor could thus in the usual course of management create a tenancy from year to year in the case of agricultural land or from month to month in case of property consisting of houses and his dealings with the mortgaged property in the usual course of management would be operative against the mortgagee." (Per Mookerjee, J., in *Madan Mohan Singh v. Raj Kishore Kumari*³.)

"Whether the mortgagor possesses any larger powers of leasing is however very questionable. The only reported case in which such a power was recognised is *Banee Pershad v. Reet Bhunjun Singh*⁴, but the report in Sutherland is very meagre. The judgment too does not give forth any certain sound. It is only said that a mortgagor is not restricted in the management of the property by making a mortgage and that so long as nothing takes place to impair the value of the mortgagee's security the mortgagor does not exceed his powers in making a lease for a term. The learned judges add perhaps somewhat unnecessarily that their decision should not go beyond the particular facts of the case before them." (Ghosh on Mortgages, Vol. I, p. 213.)

This case of *Banee Pershad v. Reet Bhunjun Singh*⁴ was considered by Jenkins, C.J., in *Balmukund v. Motilal*⁵ as an authority for the proposition that as long as nothing took place which impaired the value or impeded the operation of the mortgage, the mortgagor in creating a temporary lease acted within his powers and these observations of Jenkins, C.J., were considered by the Courts as justifying the applicability of the provisions of the section 66 of the Transfer of Property Act, while determining the binding nature of the leases created by the mortgagor in possession on the mortgagee. Mookerjee, J., had occasion to consider this very case in *Madan Mohan Singh v. Raj Kishore Kumari*⁶ and he cited it in support of the proposition that the interest created by the mortgagor while dealing with the mortgaged property in the usual course of management could be rightly deemed operative against the mortgagee. The following observations of Mookerjee, J., in this connection at page 91 are very apposite :—

"As the case is very imperfectly reported, we have examined the record and ascertained the questions in controversy. The proprietor of an estate mortgaged it on the 12th March, 1861. On the 7th July, 1862, the mortgagor granted an ijara potta of the property for a term of ten years. The mortgagee subsequently sued the mortgagor alone, and got a decree; at the execution sale which followed, the property was sold on the 24th December, 1863. The purchaser sued on the 12th March, 1867, to eject the lessee, on the ground that as he had acquired the property in the condition in which it was when mortgaged, the lease, which would otherwise run till the 7th July, 1872, did not bind him. The Court of first instance overruled this contention as too broadly formulated and held that as the mortgagor had in good faith granted the lease for a limited term on a fair and reasonable rent, the mortgagee or the purchaser in execution of his decree could not repudiate it, specially as the mortgage deed did not prohibit the grant of temporary leases to middlemen or cultivators. On appeal, the District Judge affirmed this view and declined to accept the broad contention that leases of all descriptions granted by a mortgagor were void as against the mortgagee. On second appeal to this Court, Jackson and Mitter, JJ., took substantially the same view."

These observations of Mookerjee, J., point out what was the ratio decidendi of that case. The question of the sufficiency or insufficiency of the security was not really gone into but the Court considered that the lease was granted in good faith, was for a limited term and stipulated a fair and reasonable rent and it was therefore operative against the mortgagee. The Court was really guided by the consideration that the mortgagor dealt with the property in the usual course of management and the interest which was thus created by the mortgagor in the usual course must rightly be deemed operative against the mortgagee. The case of *Banee Pershad v. Reet Bhunjun Singh*⁴, therefore is really no authority for the wide proposition that a mortgagor was not restricted in the management of the property by making a mortgage and that so long as nothing took place to impair the value or impede the operation of the mortgage the mortgagor would be well within his powers in making a lease for a term.

In our opinion section 66 of the Transfer of Property Act has nothing to do with the mortgagor's power to lease the mortgaged property. Section 66 is a statutory enactment of the powers of the mortgagor in possession in regard to waste of mortgaged property. The mortgagor in possession is not liable for what in terms of the English Law of Real Property is known as permissive waste, i.e., for omission to repair or to prevent natural deterioration. He is however liable for destructive waste, i.e., acts which are destructive or permanently injurious to the mortgaged property if the security was insufficient or would be rendered insufficient by such acts. This section therefore has no application to the grant of a lease by the mortgagor in possession.

The only relevant consideration is whether, the mortgagor in possession having the authority to deal with the property in the usual course of management, the lease granted by him can be rightly deemed operative against the mortgagee. The true position has been stated in the following terms by Mookerjee, J., in *Madan Mohan Singh v. Raj. Kishore Kumari*¹:

"The true position thus is that the mortgagor in possession may make a lease conformable to usage in the ordinary course of management, for instance, he may create a tenancy from year to year in the case of agricultural lands or from month to month in the case of houses. But it is not competent to the mortgagor to grant a lease on unusual terms, or to alter the character of the land or to authorise its use in a manner or for a purpose different from the mode in which he himself had used it before he granted the mortgage."

The question whether the mortgagor in possession has power to lease the mortgaged property has got to be determined with reference to the authority of the mortgagor as the bailiff or agent for the mortgagee to deal with the property in the usual course of management. It has to be determined on general principles and not on the distinction between an English mortgage and a simple mortgage or on considerations germane to section 66 of the Transfer of Property Act. Having regard therefore to the position that section 66 has no application to leases of the mortgaged property, the decision of Jenkins, C.J., in *Balmukund v. Motilal*² and the cases following that line of reasoning do not govern the question before us.

While we are on this subject we would like to emphasise that it is for the lessee if he wants to resist the claim of the mortgagee to establish that the lease in his favour was granted on the usual terms in the ordinary course of management. Such a plea if established—and it must not be overlooked that the burden of proof in this matter is upon him—would furnish a complete answer to the claim of the mortgagee. If the lessee failed to establish this position he would have certainly no defence to an action at the instance of the mortgagee.

No allegation was made on behalf of the defendants that the grant of the permanent lease was a dealing with the mortgaged property in the usual course of management by the mortgagor. In the absence of any such plea we are of the opinion that there was no answer to the plaintiff's claim and the permanent lease granted by Wazir Narain to the defendants could not prevail against the plaintiff.

We have therefore come to the conclusion that Wazir Narain Singh had no power to grant the permanent lease in question to the defendants, that the same was not binding and operative against the plaintiff, that the defendants had ample opportunity to redeem the mortgage if they so desired but did not choose to exercise their right of redemption, that the execution sale of Gadi Sirampur including the four villages in question was binding on them and that the plaintiff was entitled to khas possession of the four villages of which the defendants were in wrongful possession. The appeal is allowed. The decree passed by the High Court dismissing Criminal Procedure Code (V of 1898), section 556—Scope of bar under—Deputy Commissioner of Assam giving sanction for prosecution under Assam Food Grains Control Order (1947)—If disqualified from trying the case himself—Security bond to produce paddy concerned in Court in favour of Procurement Inspector—Forfeiture under section 514, Criminal Procedure Code—If permissible.

The question whether the bar under section 556, Criminal Procedure Code, comes into play depends upon the facts and circumstances of each particular case, the dividing line being a thin one somewhat but still sufficiently definite and tangible, namely, the removal of legal impediment by the grant of sanction and the initiation of criminal proceedings as the result of a direction. Where a Deputy Commissioner has merely given sanction for prosecution for an offence under the Assam Food Grains Procurement Order (1947) he is not disqualified from trying the offence himself and a trial by him is not vitiated by the provisions of section 556 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

Where a security bond was taken from the person transgressing the Food Grains Control Order only by the Procurement Inspector and not by the Court undertaking that the seized paddy be produced before the Court, section 514, Criminal Procedure Code, will not apply. Action could be taken for breach of a bond only when the bond is taken by the Court under the provisions of the Code such as section 91 for appearance, the several security sections or those relating to bail. The power to forfeit and the imposition of the penalty provided for in the latter parts of section 514 arise only if the preliminary conditions are satisfied.

On appeal from the Judgment and Order dated the 1st June, 1951, of the High Court of Judicature in Assam (Thadani, C.J. and Ram Labhaya, J.) in Criminal Reference No. 1 of 1951, arising out of Judgment and Order, dated the 15th November, 1950, of the Court of the Additional District Magistrate, Lakhimpur, in Case No. 1126 C of 1950.

Jindra Lal, Advocate, for Appellant.

Nur-ud-Din Ahmad, Advocate, for Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Chandrasekhara Aiyar, J.—Rameshwar Bhartia, the appellant, is a shopkeeper in Assam. He was prosecuted for storing paddy without a licence in excess of the quantity permitted by the Assam Food Grains Control Order, 1947. He admitted storage and possession of 550 maunds of paddy, but pleaded that he did not know that any licence was necessary. The Additional District Magistrate recorded a plea of guilty, but imposed on him a fine of Rs. 50 only, as he considered his ignorance of the provisions of the Food Grains Control Order to be genuine. The stock of paddy was left in the possession of the appellant by the Procurement Inspector under a Jimmanama or security bond executed in his favour. He was subsequently unable to produce it before the Court, as the whole of it was taken away by a Congress Member of Legislative Assembly for affording relief to those who suffered in the earthquake, and so, the appellant was ordered to procure a similar quantity of paddy after taking an appropriate licence, and to make over the same to the procurement department on payment of the price.

The District Magistrate, on being moved to do so by the procurement department, referred the case to the High Court under section 438, Criminal Procedure

Code, for enhancement of the sentence, as in his opinion the sentence was unduly lenient and the Jimmanama, which was admittedly broken, should have been forfeited.

The reference was accepted by the High Court, and the sentence was enhanced to rigorous imprisonment for six months and a fine of Rs. 1,000. As regards the Jimmanama, the case was sent back to the trial Court for taking action according to law under section 514, Criminal Procedure Code, for its forfeiture.

The appellant applied to the High Court for a certificate under Article 134 (1) (c) of the Constitution that the case was a fit one for appeal to this Court. This application was granted. Out of the three points urged for the appellant, two were rejected, but the third one was accepted as a good ground, namely, that there was a contravention of the provisions of section 556, Criminal Procedure Code and that consequently the trial before the Additional District Magistrate was void.

One of the contentions urged before us was that Sri C. K. Bhuyan was not a "Director" at all and therefore there was no valid sanction under section 38 of the Order. A notification dated 16th May, 1950 and published in the Assam Gazette of the 24th May, 1950, was produced before us to show that Sri C. K. Bhuyan was an Additional Deputy Commissioner, and it was conceded by the appellant's counsel before the High Court that if he was a Deputy Commissioner, he would be a Director under the Order, as all Deputy Commissioners in Assam were notified as Directors for the purposes of the Order. Mr. Jindra Lal sought to draw a distinction between a Deputy Commissioner and an Additional Deputy Commissioner in this respect, but there is no warrant for the same, apart from the circumstance that it is a question of fact which has to be investigated afresh, and which we cannot allow to be raised now for the first time.

The primary question to consider in this appeal is whether there has been any infringement of section 556, Criminal Procedure Code and a consequent want of jurisdiction in the Court which tried the offence. The facts relevant to this question lie within a narrow compass. The Procurement Inspector sent a report on 1st July, 1950, about the nature of the offence; he wrote out a short note on the subject, and requested that the accused might be prosecuted and the Assistant Director of Procurement, Dibrugarh, might be authorised to dispose of the paddy immediately to avoid loss due to deterioration. Sri C. K. Bhuyan, who was the then District Magistrate, Lakhimpur, made the following order:

"Prosecution sanctioned under section 7 (1) of the Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Act, 1946, for violation of sections 3 and 7 of the Assam Food Grains Control Order, 1947."

The case happened to be tried by the same gentleman in his capacity as Additional District Magistrate, and the accused was convicted as aforesaid.

The argument for the appellant was that having sanctioned the prosecution, Sri C. K. Bhuyan became "personally interested" in the case within the meaning of section 556, and was therefore incompetent to try the same. It was contended that the trial was not only irregular but illegal.

There is no question that "personal interest" within the meaning of the section is not limited to private interest, and that it may well include official interest also. But what is the extent of the interest which will attract the disability is a subject on which different views are possible and have been taken. Section 556 itself indicates the difficulty. The Explanation to the section runs in these terms:

"A Judge or Magistrate shall not be deemed a party, or personally interested, within the meaning of this section, to or in any case by reason only that he is a Municipal Commissioner or otherwise concerned therein in a public capacity, or by reason only that he has viewed the place in which an offence is alleged to have been committed, or any other place in which any other transaction material to the case is alleged to have occurred, and made an inquiry in connection with the case."

This shows that to be connected with a case in a public capacity is not by itself enough to render the person incompetent to try it. Even if he had made an enquiry in connection with this case, it would not matter. But look at the illustration:

"A, as collector, upon consideration of information furnished to him, directs the prosecution of B for a breach of the Excise laws. A is disqualified from trying this case as a Magistrate."

It is evident from the words of the illustration that if a prosecution is directed by a person in one capacity, he shall not try the case acting in another capacity as a Magistrate.

The explanation and illustration lend some support to the view that there is a distinction between a passive interest and an active interest, and that it is only in the latter case that the disqualification arises or intervenes.

Under sub-section (3) (a) of section 2 of the Assam Food Grains Control Order "Director" means

"the Director of Supply, Assam and includes, for the purpose of any specific provision of this Order, any other officer duly authorised in that behalf by him or by the Provincial Government by notification in the Official Gazette."

Section 38 provides :

"No prosecution in respect of an alleged contravention of any provision of this Order shall be instituted without sanction of the Director."

A little confusion is likely to arise from the employment of the word "Director" in the Control Order and the word "directs" in the illustration to section 556 of the Code. It has to be borne in mind that a sanction by the Director within the meaning of the Code does not necessarily mean "a direction given by him that the accused should be prosecuted."

In both cases of sanction and direction, an application of the mind is necessary, but there is this essential difference that in the one case there is a legal impediment to the prosecution if there be no sanction, and in the other case, there is a positive order that the prosecution should be launched. For a sanction, all that is necessary for one to be satisfied about is the existence of a prima facie case. In the case of a direction, a further element that the accused deserves to be prosecuted is involved. The question whether a Magistrate is personally interested or not has essentially to be decided on the facts in each case. Pecuniary interest, however small, will be a disqualification, but as regards other kinds of interest, there is no measure or standard except that it should be a substantial one, giving rise to a real bias, or a reasonable apprehension on the part of the accused of such bias. The maxim "Nemo debet esse judex in propria sua causa" applies only when the interest attributed is such as to render the case his own cause. The fulfilment of a technical requirement imposed by a statute may not, in many cases, amount to a mental satisfaction of the truth of the facts placed before the officer. Whether sanction should be granted or not may conceivably depend upon considerations extraneous to the merits of the case. But where a prosecution is directed, it means that the authority who gives the direction is satisfied in his own mind that the case must be initiated. Sanction is in the nature of a permission, while a direction is in the nature of a command.

Let us now examine some of the decisions on the subject. For the appellant, strong reliance was placed on the judgment of the Privy Council in *Gokulchand Dwarkadas v. King*¹ and it was argued on the basis of some of the observations of the Judicial Committee that a sanction was an important and substantial matter and not a mere formality. The facts in that case were that while there was a sanction of the Government for a prosecution under the Cotton Cloth and Yarn Control Order, there was nothing in the sanction itself, or in the shape of extraneous evidence, to show that the sanction was accorded after the relevant facts were placed before the sanctioning authority. To quote their Lordships' own words,

"There is no evidence to show that the report of the Sub-Inspector to the District Superintendent of Police, which was not put in evidence, was forwarded to the District Magistrate, nor is there any evidence as to the contents of the endorsement of the District Magistrate, referred to in the sanction, which endorsement also was not put in evidence. The prosecution was in a position either to produce or to account for the absence of the report made to the District Superintendent of Police and the endorsement of the District Magistrate referred to in the sanction, and to call any necessary oral evidence to supplement the documents and show what were the facts on which the sanction was given."

It is in this connection that their Lordships emphasise that the sanction to prosecute is an important step constituting a condition precedent, and observe :

"Looked at as a matter of substance it is plain that the Government cannot adequately discharge the obligation of deciding whether to give or withhold a sanction without a knowledge of the facts of the case. Nor, in their Lordships' view, is a sanction given without reference to the facts constituting the offence a compliance with the actual terms of clause 23."

This, however, is no authority for the position that a sanction stands on the same footing as a direction. It is true that the facts should be known to the sanctioning authority ; but it is not, at all necessary that the authority should embark also on an investigation of the facts, deep or perfunctory, before according the sanction. The decision lends no support to the view that wherever there is a sanction, the sanctioning authority is disabled under section 556 of the Code from trying the case initiated as a result of the sanction. On the other hand, there is plenty of support for the opposite view.

In the very early case of *The Government of Bengal v. Heera Lall Dass and others*¹, at a time when there was no such statutory provision as section 556 of the Code but only the general rule of law that a man could not be judge in a case in which he had an interest, the facts were that a Sub-Registrar, who was also an Assistant Magistrate, having come to know in his official capacity as a registering officer that an offence under the Registration Act had been committed, sanctioned a prosecution, and subsequently tried the case himself. A Full Bench consisting Sir Richard Couch, C.J. and five other learned Judges came to the conclusion, after an examination of some of the English cases, that the trial was not vitiated. The learned Chief Justice said :

"In this case, I think, the Sub-Registrar has not such an interest in the matter as disqualifies him from trying the case ; and I may observe with reference to some of the arguments that have been used as to the Sub-Registrar having made up his mind, and that the accused would have no chance of a fair trial, that the sanction of the superior officer, the Registrar, is required before the prosecution can be instituted, and certainly I do not consider that the prosecution will not be instituted unless the Sub-Registrar has made up his mind as to the guilt of the party. It is his duty, when he comes to know that an offence has been committed, to cause a prosecution to be instituted, by which I understand that there is prima facie evidence of an offence having been committed, that there is that which renders it proper that there should be an enquiry, and the Registrar accordingly gives his sanction to it ; and certainly, I cannot suppose that, because an officer in his position sanctions the institution of a prosecution, his mind is made up as to the guilt of the party and that he is not willing to consider the evidence which may be produced before him when he comes to try the case. In this case, there appears to be no such interest as would prevent the case from going before the Magistrate as the trying authority"

In *Queen-Empress v. Chenchi Reddi*², it was pointed out that when there was only an authorisation and not a direction, there was no supervening disability, and the case of *Girish Chunder Ghose v. The Queen-Empress*³ was distinguished on the ground that there the Magistrate had taken a very active part in connection with the case as an executive officer. The Bombay High Court went even a step further in the case reported in *Emperor v. Ravji*⁴, where the Magistrate who tried the case had earlier held a departmental enquiry and forwarded the papers to the Collector with his opinion that there was sufficient evidence to justify a criminal prosecution. As he did no more than express an opinion that there was evidence, which he had neither taken nor sifted, which made a criminal prosecution desirable, it was held that the Magistrate was not disqualified from holding the trial, though, no doubt it would have been more expedient had the Collector sent the case for disposal to another of his subordinates.

As stated already, the question whether the bar under section 556 comes into play depends upon the facts and circumstances of each particular case, the dividing line being a thin one somewhat but still sufficiently definite and tangible, namely,

1. (1871) 17 W.R. Crl. Rulings, 39.
2. (1900) I.L.R. 24 Mad. 238.

3. (1893) I.L.R. 20 Cal. 857.
4. (1903) 5 Bom. L.R. 542.(2).

the removal of a legal impediment by the grant of sanction and the initiation of criminal proceedings as the result of a direction. In the present case before us, we have nothing more than a sanction, and consequently we are unable to hold that the trial has become vitiated by reason of the provisions of section 556, Criminal Procedure Code.

The other point taken on behalf of the appellant is a more substantial one. The security bond was taken from him not by the Court but by the Procurement Inspector. It is true that it contained the undertaking that the seized paddy would be produced before the Court, but still it was a promise made to the particular official and not to the Court. The High Court was in error in thinking that section 514, Criminal Procedure Code, applied. Action could be taken only when the bond is taken by the Court under the provisions of the Code such as section 91 for appearance, the several security sections or those relating to bail. Clause (1) of section 514 runs :

“Whenever it is proved to the satisfaction of the Court by which a bond under this Code has been taken, or of the Court of a Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class, or when the bond is for appearance before a Court, to the satisfaction of such Court, that such bond has been forfeited, the Court shall record the grounds of such proof, and may call upon any person bound by such bond to pay the penalty thereof, or to show cause why it should not be paid.”

The language is perfectly clear ; the power to forfeit and the imposition of the penalty provided for in the later parts of the section arise only if the preliminary conditions are satisfied.

There was no argument addressed to us that the High Court in suggesting that action should be taken under section 514 for forfeiture of the bond acted in the exercise of its inherent powers under section 561-A. It did not purport to exercise any such power ; and moreover, there will then arise the question whether when the Code contains an express provision on a particular subject there, could be any resort to inherent jurisdiction under a general provision.

We have got an additional circumstance in the appellant's favour in this case that the seized paddy was taken away by a member of the Legislative Assembly for giving relief to those affected by the earthquake, and if that is true, as it seems to be from the letter written by the Member of the Legislative Assembly to the Additional District Magistrate on the 1st November, 1950, it appears to us harsh, if not unjust, to ask him to produce the same paddy or a similar quantity of paddy. The order of the High Court sending back the case to the Magistrate for taking action according to law under section 514 will, therefore, stand set aside.

We generally do not interfere in the matter of sentence, but in this case we find that the Magistrate has held that the appellant's plea that he was ignorant of the provisions of the Assam Food Grains Control Order, 1947, was a genuine one. Having regard to this circumstance and the fact that from a fine of Rs. 50 to 6 months' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 1,000 is a big jump, we think it is appropriate that the sentence of imprisonment imposed by the High Court should be set aside and we order accordingly. The fine of Rs. 1,000 will stand.

Madras Buildings (Lease and Rent Control) Act (XXV of 1949), section 7—Scope—Eviction by landlord—Decree for—Sub-tenant if entitled to resist execution.

The right given by section 7 (1) of the Madras Buildings (Lease and Rent Control) Act is expressly given to the tenant and the definition of "tenant" in section 2 (4) of the Act does not include a person placed in occupation of a building by its tenant. Section 7 (1) cannot on a proper construction apply to a sub-tenant and confer rights on him and he cannot get the benefit indirectly on the ground that he claims under the tenant. The explanation added by Act VIII of 1951 does not alter the position.

Devārtha Bhatt v. V. S. Raja, (1952) 2 M.L.J. 179, referred to.

On appeal from the Order and Judgment of Krishnaswami Nayudu, J., dated 17th July, 1951 and passed in the exercise of the Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction of the High Court in application No. 671 of 1951 in C.S. No. 419 of 1947.

This is an appeal against an order of Krishnaswami Nayudu, J., passed on 17th July, 1951, by which he disposed of four applications in C.S. No. 419 of 1947 on the Original Side of this Court. Though there were four applications before Krishnaswami Nayudu, J., the appeal relates only to one of the applications in which the respondent is the only party interested.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

The Chief Justice.—The facts necessary for disposal of this appeal are as follows : Premises Nos. 177 to 179, Mount Road, Madras, were originally leased to Bosotto Brothers, Ltd., by the then owners of the building, Jamal Mahomed. On 22nd May, 1946, the Express Estates, Ltd., the appellant before us, purchased the premises. By an order dated 13th June, 1947, the Government exempted the building from the operation of the Madras Buildings (Lease and Rent Control) Act, 1946. On 26th September, 1947, the appellant filed a suit, C.S. No. 419 of 1947 on the Original Side of this Court, for recovery of possession from Bosotto Brothers, Ltd., and also for the recovery of rent at an enhanced rate. Pending the suit, the Government, by a subsequent order, dated 11th March, 1950, cancelled their prior order exempting the premises from the Rent Control Act. On 31st July, 1950, a decree was passed in the suit for possession and for enhanced rent till delivery of possession. The appellant filed an application for execution of the decree, E.P. No. 233 of 1950. After notice to Messrs. Bosotto Brothers, Ltd., the judgment-debtor in the case, the application was ordered. When the representative of the appellant went along with the bailiff to take delivery of possession, he found that portions of the premises were in the occupation of four persons, one of whom was the respondent before us, namely, the Modern Furnishing House. The said persons obstructed the delivery of possession and claimed that they were entitled to remain in possession in their own right. Thereupon the appellant filed an application for removal of obstruction, E.A. No. 788 of 1951. The learned Judge dismissed the application on the ground that the obstructors were entitled to remain in possession, because, the decree for possession could not be executed on account of the provisions of section 7 of Madras Act XXV of 1949 (which had replaced the Act of 1946).

The reasoning of the learned Judge was shortly as follows : Under section 7 (1) of the Rent Control Act, a tenant shall not be evicted in execution of a decree or otherwise except in accordance with the provisions of that section. The expression "tenant" in section 7 (1) of the Act does not mean and include only a tenant in actual possession but will also include a tenant in constructive possession, with the result that even though a tenant might have vacated a portion of the building and had let in sub-tenants in other portions of the building, the tenant must be deemed to be in constructive possession of the entire premises, and there can be no execution of a decree for ejectment against such a tenant.

With respect to the learned Judge, we think he has overlooked one important fact in this case. Whether in actual possession or in constructive possession, there can be no doubt whatever that the tenant of the premises was Bosotto Brothers, Limited. It is common ground that Bosotto Brothers, Ltd., did not raise any objection to the execution of the decree for possession. It may be that they could have raised an objection under section 7 (1) of the Rent Control Act, but actually they did not. After notice to them, a final order for execution was passed by this Court. The question is, can the respondent who admittedly was a sub-tenant of Bosotto Brothers, Ltd., having been let into possession by them sometime in 1949 when the ejectment suit was pending, be heard to say that the decree cannot be executed against them? It was contended on behalf of the respondent company that as they claimed under Bosotto Brothers, Ltd., they could raise all objections which Bosotto Brothers, Ltd., themselves could have raised to the execution and they could take advantage of section 7 (1) of the Rent Control Act, advantage of which could have been taken by Bosotto Brothers, Ltd. We do not agree with this contention. The right given by section 7 (1) of the Act is expressly given to the tenant and the definition of "tenant" in section 2 (4) of the Act would not include a person placed in occupation of a building by its tenant, that is, a person in the position of the respondent. While therefore section 7 (1) cannot, according to a proper construction of its language, apply to the respondent and confer any rights on him, we cannot permit the respondent to get the same benefit indirectly on the ground that they claim under Bosotto Brothers, Ltd. We reject this contention.

Reference was made to an amendment to section 2 (3) of the Act by Act VIII of 1951. By section 3 of the Act, an Explanation was inserted after the definition of "landlord" in section 2 (3) of the Act. It ran as follows:

"A tenant who sub-lets shall be deemed to be a landlord within the meaning of this Act in relation to the sub-tenant."

In our opinion, this Explanation would not help the respondent. It may be that, if Bosotto Brothers, Ltd., wanted to evict the respondent under the provisions of the Act, the respondent would be entitled to the protection afforded by section 7 (2) of the Act. That is to say, the respondent could not be evicted except on one of the grounds mentioned in that sub-section; for example, failure to pay rent, causing damage to the premises, etc. Except to this extent, we do not think the effect of the amendment in any way affects the rights of the original landlord. The effect of the Explanation is certainly not to enable a sub-tenant to raise an objection to being evicted by the landlord either under the provisions of the Rent Control Act or otherwise, as for example, in execution of a decree for possession. The expression "tenant" in section 7 (1) would not include a sub-tenant in relation to the original landlord.

Reference may be made to the recent ruling of a Division Bench of this Court in *Devaraja Bhatt v. V. S. Raja*¹ (which included Krishnaswami Nayudu, J.) in which it was held that the Rent Control Act does not recognise any rights in a sub-tenant. Govinda Menon, J., delivering the judgment of the Bench observed as follows:—

"Under the Madras Buildings (Lease and Rent Control) Act, a sub-tenant as such is not recognised and if a landlord brings a suit in ejectment a sub-tenant let into possession cannot raise any question and submit that he has a status under the Act which should be safeguarded by its provisions."

The insertion of the Explanation does not make any difference.

In this view, the appeal must be allowed and the order of the learned Judge dismissing the application of the decree-holder for removal of obstruction should be set aside. There will be an order directing the removal of the obstruction caused by the respondent. The appellant will be entitled to the costs of this appeal. The respondent will have time to deliver possession till 2nd January, 1953.

Criminal Procedure Code (V of 1898), section 476-B and section 195—Criminal Rules of Practice—Rule 37—Amin of Court executing decree obstructed by persons—Criminal complaint against them—Order of Court directing the filing of—If open to appeal or revision.

Petitioners herein were Respondents in a criminal proceeding because of their obstruction to the Amin of the District Court while he was discharging his duties in effecting attachment of certain moveables of the Judgment-debtor. The Judge passed orders directing the Central Nazir of that Court to make a criminal complaint against the respondent. Thereupon the respondent filed a Civil Miscellaneous Appeal falling under section 476-B, Criminal Procedure Code. The High Court Office returned it whereupon the Advocate for respondent filed it as a C.M.A. under Rule 37 of the Criminal Rules of Practice and section 476-B of Criminal Procedure Code which applies to orders passed in the lower Court under section 476-B, Criminal Procedure Code and section 195, Criminal Procedure Code.

Held, (1) the proceeding could be filed under the newly added sub-section 5 (5) to section 195, Criminal Procedure Code only as a revision and not as a Civil Miscellaneous Appeal. Case-law reviewed.

(2) Rule 37 of the Criminal Rules of Practice does not apply to this, and

(3) Stay could not be granted in this matter.

Petition under sections 476, 476-B and 561-A, Criminal Procedure Code, praying that in the circumstances stated in the affidavit filed therewith the High Court will be pleased to issue an order directing stay of the hearing of the complaint-proceedings in C.C. No. 26 of 1952 on the file of the Court of the Stationary Sub-Magistrate, Masulipatam, pending A.A.O. No. 234 of 1952, preferred to the High Court against the order of the District Court, Krishna at Masulipatam, dated 1st November, 1951, in O.P. No. 25 of 1951, etc.

The Court made the following

ORDER.—This Civil Miscellaneous Appeal has been placed on the list, subject to the question of the maintainability of the same being decided.

The facts are : Annavarapu Bangarayya, the decree-holder in O.S. No. 115 of 1937, on the file of the District Munsif's Court, Masulipatam, filed an application, dated 21st February, 1951, under sections 476 and 195, Criminal Procedure Code, in the Court of the District Judge of Krishna praying that the Court may be pleased to sanction and launch prosecution proceedings against the respondents Mamidi Harihararayulu, Dora Krishnarao and Kosaraju Venkateswara Rao, who had obstructed the amin of the District Court while he was discharging his duties in effecting the attachment of certain moveables of the Judgment-debtor Mamidi Harihararayulu in E.P. No. 316 of 1949, in O.S. No. 115 of 1937. The District Judge had before him the report of the amin and the connected papers. Notice was given to the respondents and the learned Judge heard arguments of the vakils for the petitioner and the arguments of the three advocates for the three respondents. Then he passed the following order :

"In view of the amin's report dated 14th December, 1950, which discloses offences under sections 183 and 186, Indian Penal Code, among others, the Central Nazir of this Court is directed to make a complaint against the respondents in respect of the said offences before a Magistrate.

I make no order as to costs."

This order was passed on 1st November, 1951.

Thereupon the learned advocate for the defeated respondents in the lower Court purported to file a proceeding, which has originally been typed as a memorandum of criminal appeal and which has been subsequently corrected into a Civil Miscellaneous Appeal falling under section 476-B, Criminal Procedure Code. The High Court office returned the memorandum on the following ground :

"Section 476 applies only to offences under section 195 (b). Sections 183 and 186 fall under section 195 (a). Hence the proceedings in the lower Court could not have been taken under section 476. It may be stated how C. M. A. lies under section 476-B."

Thereupon the learned advocate re-presented it with the following endorsement :

"The C. M. A. is filed as civil miscellaneous appeal under rule 37, Criminal Rules of Practice, and section 476-B, Criminal Procedure Code, which applies to orders passed by the lower Court under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, and section 195, Criminal Procedure Code."

There can be no doubt that this endorsement of the learned advocate is based on a profound misreading and, if I may say without meaning any offence, non-reading of sections 476 and 476-B, Criminal Procedure Code and rule 37 of the Criminal Rules of Practice.

Section 476-B, Criminal Procedure Code, gives a right of appeal against the orders passed under section 476 and 476-A directing the filing of a complaint or refusing to make a complaint : see *Wajid Ali v. Emperor*¹, *Mahabaleswarappa v. Gopalaswami Mudaliar*². The right of appeal is restricted to complaints in respect of offences mentioned in clauses (b) and (c) of section 195 (1) of the Code and no appeal lies in respects of offence mentioned in clause (a) of that sub-section : see *Mariada Pillai v. Narayanaswami Pillai*³, *Bajirung v. Durga Prasad*⁴, *Brijendranath v. Emperor*⁵ and *P. J. Money v. Emperor*⁶. Before the amendment of 1923 it was held that where a public servant acted judicially as a Court and passed an order sanctioning prosecution for an offence referred to in clause (a) of section 195, he must, for the purpose of appeal be taken to have acted as a Court, the forum of appeal being governed by the provisions of sub-section (7), now sub-section (3), but that if he should be taken to have acted not as a Court, but in his executive capacity, the forum of appeal was not governed by sub-section (7) : see *Nairaraja Pillai v. Rangaswami Pillai*⁷. Since the amendment of the Code in 1923, an appeal lies only against a complaint preferred by a Court under section 476, in respect of offences falling within clause (b) and clause (c) of section 195 ; vide *Rameshwarlal v. Emperor*⁸. Where a public servant, whether he is a Court or not, files a complaint in respect of an offence falling under clause (a) of section 195 there is no appeal ; vide *Brijendranath v. Emperor*⁹. But sub-section (5) newly added enables the authority to which such public servant is subordinate, to withdraw the complaint. Thus, it has been held that a Sub-Divisional Magistrate acting under clause (a) of sub-section (1) is subordinate to the District Magistrate, the authority to which he is subordinate under section 17 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and an application for withdrawal of complaint should be made to him and not to the Court of session to which appeals ordinarily lie from his decisions as a Court or to the High Court ; see *Maini Misser v. King-Emperor*¹⁰, *Naguservai, In re*¹¹ and *Emperor v. Ramjanam*¹². It has further been held that the High Court as being the authority to which a District Judge or an Additional Sessions Judge is subordinate within the meaning of this sub-section, is competent to withdraw a complaint filed by the latter as a public servant ; vide *Brijendranath v. Emperor*⁵ and *Chidilal v. Emperor*¹². In other words, there is no appeal in this case but there can only be a resort to sub-section (5) to section 195 newly added and this can only be by way of revision. Thus, where a Subordinate Judge declined to make a complaint under sub-section (1) clause

(a) of section 195 in respect of an offence under section 186, Indian Penal Code, alleged to have been committed against the peon of the Court while executing a process of the Court, the High Court interfered in revision and set aside the order of the Subordinate Judge directing him to dispose of the matter after taking into consideration the observations of the High Court; vide *Rajashahi Banking and Trading Corporation, Ltd. v. Surendranath*¹. It is unnecessary to consider here whether a revision lies against the withdrawal of a complaint under sub-section (5) and the High Courts of Allahabad and Patna and the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Peshawar have held that a withdrawal of a complaint under sub-section (5) is an administrative or executive act and hence not open to revision by the High Court. On the other hand, the High Court of Madras has held in a case where a District Magistrate summarily rejected an application under this sub-section for the withdrawal of a complaint preferred by the Joint Magistrate without giving notice or hearing the applicant, that the application was by way of a judicial revision, and the order was open to revision under section 439, Criminal Procedure Code, vide *Nagu Servai, In re*². It has also been held by the same High Court that where a Joint Magistrate has passed an order withdrawing a complaint, the order of the District Magistrate in revision setting aside that order is passed as a Court and is open to revision by the High Court. *P. S. Vijayaranga Reddiar v. S. V. Muthuswami Reddiar*³. The order of the Joint Magistrate directing the withdrawal of the complaint is not, however, an order of discharge and consequently it will not be open to the District Magistrate under section 436 to himself set it aside (Ibid.). Therefore, this proceeding can be filed under the newly added sub-section (5) only as a revision and not as a civil miscellaneous appeal.

The reference to rule 37 of the Criminal Rules of Practice is meaningless in this connection. That rule merely states :

"Every application made to a criminal Court under the provisions of the section 476, 476-A or 485, Criminal Procedure Code, and every appeal filed against an order made under the above sections or filed in a Court of Session against an order of a Court of Small Causes in the mofassal under section 486, Criminal Procedure Code, shall be registered as a criminal miscellaneous petition and a criminal appeal respectively. Such applications and appeals when filed in a civil Court will be registered as civil miscellaneous petitions and civil miscellaneous appeals.

This rule applies to revision petitions also."

That this rule which prescribes a different procedure in case of appeals filed under section 476-B, Criminal Procedure Code, is not in consonance with procedure has been indicated in *Raja Gupta, In re*⁴. See also *Janardhan Rao v. Lakshminarasamma*⁵.

Therefore, even assuming that this is a revision petition, the final point to be decided is whether stay should be granted and for doing so there is not the slightest warrant because when our interference is by way of revision, the limitations incidental to interference in revisions automatically apply. The facts of this case show that when the amin of the Civil Court was executing the warrant of attachment in execution of a decree, he had been resisted and assaulted by the judgment-debtors and therefore there is a good prima facie case for making the complaint. The procedure followed is correct, viz., the District Judge has been moved in his capacity as a public servant to whom the amin is subordinate to make a complaint. The learned District Judge has given an opportunity to both sides and examined the matter and arrived at his conclusion. Therefore there are no grounds to hold that a case has been made out for granting stay.

The petition for stay is dismissed and the petition for vacating the order of stay is allowed and, in both cases, without costs because it has been held by Lakshmana Rao, J., that in an application of quasi-criminal character costs should not be allowed.

Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908), section 60 (1)—Splints and veneers owned by a match factory under a licence under rule 60 of the Central Salt and Excise Rules—If can be attached under Order 38, rule 5.

Under rule 60 and rule 174 of the Central Excise Rules the licensee is the owner of the articles (splints and veneers in a match factory). In the interests of public, their custody, sale and purchase are regulated under the rules framed by the Government under the Central Excise and Salt Act. There is nothing in that Act or the rules framed thereunder prohibiting the sale of the said articles. The rules only regulate the mode of sale. If so, it follows that the licensee has a disposing power within the meaning of section 60, Civil Procedure Code. As the defendant has a saleable interest it is clearly liable to be attached.

Appeal against the order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Ottapalam, dated 30th July, 1947, in I.A. No. 68 of 1946, in O.S. No. 3 of 1945.

D. A. Krishna Variar for Appellants.

T. R. Srinivasan for Respondents.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Subba Rao, J.—The only question in this appeal is whether the splints and veneers can be attached under Order XXXVIII, rule 5, Civil Procedure Code. The facts are simple and may be briefly narrated. The respondent instituted O.S. No. 3 of 1945 on the file of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Ottapalam for possession of a match factory and for mesne profits. After obtaining a decree therein, he took possession of the factory and applied for ascertainment of mesne profits. He also applied for attachment before judgment of splints and veneers owned by the 1st defendant. It was contended, inter alia, that the said articles were not liable to attachment on the ground that the 1st defendant had no disposing power over the said articles. The learned Subordinate Judge rejected the contention and directed the attachment of the said articles. The defendants have preferred the above appeal.

Mr. Variar the learned counsel for the appellants raised before us the point which his clients had unsuccessfully raised in the Court below. It is contended that the licence, custody and sale of the articles are regulated by the rules framed under the Central Excise and Salt Act and that under the said rules they cannot be sold except with the previous consent of the Excise Officer. So it is urged that the 1st defendant has no disposing power over the articles and therefore the articles are not liable to be attached.

The relevant provisions of the Civil Procedure Code and the rules made under the Central Excise and Salt Act may now be read. Section 60 (1) of the Civil Procedure Code runs thus :

“The following property is liable to attachment and sale in execution of a decree, namely, . . . goods, . . . all other saleable property, moveable or immoveable, belonging to the judgment-debtor, or over which, or the profits of which he has a disposing power which he may exercise for his own benefit, whether the same be held in the name of the judgment-debtor or by another person in trust for him or on his behalf.”

Under rule 174 of the Central Excise Rules

“every manufacturer, trader, dealer, or person hereinafter mentioned, shall be required to take at a licence . . . and shall not conduct his business in regard to such goods otherwise than by the authority, and subject to the terms and conditions of a licence granted by a duly authorised officer in the proper form”

Rule 60 runs thus :

“Where the splints and veneers are obtained from a licenced manufacturer or importer of such goods, an indent shall be prepared in duplicate and counter-signed by the officer at the factory. The supplier shall return one copy to the officer with an endorsement stating the quantity actually supplied. Each consignment shall be produced before the officer at the factory and if the quantity received differs from the quantity stated in the suppliers endorsement, the supplier shall be required to explain the discrepancy.”

It will be seen from the aforesaid provisions that the licensee is the owner of the articles. In the interests of public, their custody, sale and purchase are regulated under the rules framed by the Government under the Central Excise and Salt Act. We have searched in vain to find any provision either in the Act or the rules framed thereunder prohibiting the sale of the said articles. The rules only regulate the mode of sale. If so, it follows that the licensee has a disposing power within the meaning of section 60, Civil Procedure Code.

But the learned counsel for the appellants relied upon certain decisions in support of his contention. *Radhakrishna Beni Prasad v. Kishore Chand Shiva Charanlal*¹, is a case arising under the Electricity Act. Under that Act, in case a licence had been revoked certain provisions laid down by section 5 of the Act had an imperative effect, and under those provisions the licensee had the power of disposing of all lands, buildings, works, materials and plant belonging to the undertaking in any manner which he might think fit only if clause (f) of the section applied to the case. On a construction of the provisions of the Act, the learned Judges held that the defendant in that case had a disposing power only under the provisions of clause (f) of section 5 and as the contingency contemplated by that clause had not arisen, he had no disposing power and therefore the undertaking was not liable to be attached. As the defendant had no disposing power, the learned Judges rightly held that the undertaking was not liable to be attached. In *Ramdass v. Bhagwat Narain Singh*², Rowland, J., has held that section 12-A, Encumbered Estates Act, read with section 60, Civil Procedure Code, prevents a property released under section 12 from being sold in execution, of a money decree obtained against the holder of such property without the sanction of the Commissioner. On a construction of the relevant provisions the learned Judge pointed out that under the Act a proprietor had no right to sell the property extending beyond his lifetime, except with the consent of the Commissioner. Having regard to the object and express provisions of the Act, the learned Judge held that the proprietor had no disposing power. A Bench of the same Court consisting of Macpherson and Dhavle, JJ., accepted the correctness of the aforesaid judgment in *Khitnarain v. Surju Seth*³ and also observed :

“The object of the Act of 1876 is to provide for the relief of ‘holders’ of land in Chota Nagpu who may be in debt and whose ‘immoveable property may be subject to mortgages, charges and liens, and the method adopted is to vest the management of the property of a holder in an officer appointed by the Commissioner and termed the manager whose function is to clear off the encumbrances after which the property is released to the holder. For reasons of public policy the property is to be saved to the holder.”

In view of the object underlying the Act and the provisions thereof, the learned Judges found that the holder had no disposing power over the property and therefore it was not liable to be attached. They have succinctly stated the proposition thus :

“The measure of liability to involuntary alienation is the power of voluntary transfer.”

The aforesaid judgments only recognised and applied the incontestable proposition that a property of a judgment-debtor is not liable to be attached if he has no disposing power over the same. Whether a judgment-debtor has a disposing power in respect of a particular property is a question to be decided in each case.

1. I.L.R. (1939) All. 901.

2. A.I.R. 1931 Pat. 97.

3. (1931) I.L.R. 10 Pat. 582; A.I.R. 1931 Pat. 364.

A judgment of the Bombay High Court in *Purushottam v. Balant*¹ is apposite and may be usefully referred to. The judgment-creditor in that case attached three casks of country liquor which were in the judgment-debtor's shop. The Collector intervened and objected to the attachment on the ground that the liquor could not be removed without a transport permit and could not be sold without a permit under the Abkari Act and therefore not liable to be attached. Heaton, J., dealing with the aforesaid argument made the following pertinent remarks :

"Nothing has been pointed out to us in the law from which we can infer that country liquor is exempt from attachment and sale in execution. The liquor had admittedly been purchased and paid for by the judgment-debtor ; it was his property. There was no doubt it could be sold by him though he had to deal with it in accordance with the terms of his licence and the provisions of the Abkari Act. It is, therefore, clear that it is saleable property, and is covered by the provisions of the first part of section 266, Civil Procedure Code."

We respectfully agree with the aforesaid observations.

In the present case the splints and veneers are the property of the 1st defendant. Though under the Central Excise Rules he could only deal with them in the manner prescribed, the rules prescribed do not affect his saleable interest in the property. There is no clause just like in the Electricity Act or Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act laying down a condition precedent for the exercise of his right to sell. As the 1st defendant has a saleable interest in the property, it is clearly liable to be attached.

Mr. Variar then contended that on the date when the property was attached the term of the 1st defendant's licence had expired and therefore on the date of the attachment he had no saleable interest in the property. This argument was not raised in the Court below. Indeed the judgment discloses that both parties proceeded on the basis that the licence was subsisting on the date when the property was attached. In the circumstances, we do not think we are justified in allowing the appellants to raise this question of fact for the first time before us.

For the aforesaid reasons, we agree with the conclusion of the Court below and dismiss this appeal with costs.

The State of Madras, by the Collector of Tanjore

.. Respondent.

Constitution of India (1950), Article 372 (1)—Scope—If bars amendment with retrospective effect by a State Legislature of an Act continued in force by virtue of Article 372 (1).

Madras Estates Land (Reduction of Rent) Second Amendment Act, 1951—Validity.

Article 372 (1) of the Constitution of India clearly recognises the contingency of an enactment which is declared to continue in force, being altered, repealed or amended by a competent Legislature. Article 372 (1) will not render invalid any alteration, repeal or amendment which is declared to be retrospective even in respect of an Act which is continued in force by virtue of Article 372 (1) of the Constitution.

The provision introduced by the Madras Estates Land (Reduction of Rent) Second Amendment Act, 1951, adjusting the account between the landlord and tenant (by adjustment of rent paid by a ryot before the commencement of the amending Act towards rent payable by the ryot to the landholder for subsequent faslis or to claim refund of amounts remaining unadjusted) cannot be impugned as confiscatory in nature and therefore unconstitutional. There is no acquisition by the impugned provision of any portion of the rent. The provision is one pertaining to the relationship of landlord and tenant but would in no sense be a provision for acquisition of any interest in land by the Government. The fact that the result of such provision may be to prejudicially affect the rights of the landholder would not by itself make the provision illegal or unconstitutional.

Appeal under Clause 15 of the Letters Patent against the order, dated 16th September, 1952, in W.P. No. 674 of 1952, on the file of the High Court by Subba Rao, J.

R. Kesava Ayyangar and K. Parasaran for Appellant.

Rajamannar, C.J.—In this Appeal under the Letters Patent against the decision of Subba Rao, J., dismissing the appellant's application for a writ of certiorari, the only ground taken is the invalidity of Madras Estates Land (Reduction of Rent) Second Amendment Act, 1951. That Act inserted a sub-section in section 3 of the original Act and substituted a clause for a clause already existing in section 4 of the principal Act and by section 4 made provision for adjustment of rent paid by a ryot before the commencement of the amending Act. The excess was to be adjusted towards the rent payable by the ryot to the landholder for subsequent faslis. The ryot was in certain circumstances entitled to claim a refund of the amount remaining unadjusted from the landholder to whom it was paid.

Mr. R. Kesava Ayyangar contended that the Act is unconstitutional for two reasons: (1) because it was retrospective and to that extent was inconsistent with the provisions of Article 372 (1) of the Constitution and (2) because it was confiscatory in so far as it directed the adjustment of rent already paid before the commencement of the Constitution.

Section 1 (2) of the Amended Act runs thus:

"Sections 2 and 3 shall be deemed to have come into force on the 7th January, 1948."

That is the date on which the principal Act came into force. The argument of learned counsel is that Madras Act XXX of 1947 continued to be in force only by virtue of Article 372 (1) of the Constitution and any amendment, alteration or repeal of any provisions of that Act after 26th January, 1950, can only be prospective from the date on which the amendment, alteration or repeal is made, or in any event only from 26th January, 1950, but it cannot affect the Act as it stood on the date of the commencement of the Constitution in respect of a period prior to the Constitution. Article 372 (1) runs thus:

"Notwithstanding the repeal by this Constitution of the enactments referred to in Article 395 but subject to the other provisions of this Constitution, all the law in force in the territory of India immediately before the commencement of this Constitution shall continue in force therein until altered or repealed or amended by a competent Legislature or other competent authority."

We are unable to agree with learned counsel that there is any thing in this Article to support his contention. That Article clearly recognises the contingency of an enactment which is declared to continue in force being altered, repealed or amended by a competent Legislature. Undeniably in this case the amendment in question has been made by a competent Legislature. It was not suggested that the Madras Legislature is not competent to pass any legislation which would have a retrospective effect. When an alteration, repeal or amendment is itself contemplated under Article 372 (1) and an alteration, repeal or amendment can be retrospective, it follows that Article 372 (1) would not render any alteration, repeal or amendment which is declared to be retrospective invalid. We therefore reject this contention on behalf of the appellant.

It was next contended that the provision in the Amending Act for adjustment of rents already paid is confiscatory in nature and therefore unconstitutional. Reliance was placed on the observations in the recent decision of the Supreme Court in *The State of Bihar v. Sir Kameswar Singh*¹, made in connection with the provision of the Bihar Act under which 50 per cent of the arrears of rent collected by the Government was appropriated by the Government without payment of any compensation to the landholder. We fail to see how those observations can be of any help to the appellants here. There is no acquisition by the Government of any portion of the rent. The impugned provision is only a provision adjusting the account between landholder and tenant. Such a provision would be a provision pertaining to the relationship of landlord and tenant but would in no sense be a provision for acquisition of any interest in land by the Government. There is therefore no question of confiscation. It is true that the result of the enactment may be to prejudicially affect the rights of the appellants, but that itself would not make the provision illegal or unconstitutional.

• The appeal is therefore dismissed.

Hindu Law—Alienation by father of ancestral property—Right of after-born sons to question.

If a son who objects to the alienation of his property comes into existence or is conceived after the alienation, but during the life of a child born or conceived before the alienation, then the overlapping of the two lives enables the later born son to contest the validity of the father's act.

Even if the eldest member has not filed a suit to set aside an alienation within the period of limitation, provided by the law the right of the members of the coparcenary to question the alienation is not taken away, as the right arises in an individual member of the coparcenary, not by virtue of his being a managing member but in his character as son and that individual right cannot be controlled by anything which the eldest or the managing member has done or has failed to do.

Held : on the facts of the case that the eldest member who could have questioned the alienation had separated himself from the family and had ceased to be a member of the family, the fact of his not having taken steps for setting aside the alienation is immaterial as far as the rights of the after-born sons to question the mortgage is concerned.

Held further : on the facts that the alienation by the father was for the benefit of the family and the sons cannot impugn it.

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Chingleput, in O.S. No. 50 of 1948.

v M. S. Venkatarama Ayyar for Appellant.

• A. Duraiswami for Respondents.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—Plaintiff is the appellant. As assignee of a mortgage he instituted O.S. No. 50 of 1948 on the file of the Subordinate Judge's Court, Chingleput, against defendants 1 and 2 who are the minor sons of one Subbaraya Reddi, for a mortgage decree on a mortgage executed by Subbaraya Reddi in favour of one Munuswami Reddi on the 9th July, 1925, for Rs. 4,000 and assigned by Munuswami Reddi in the plaintiff's favour on the 15th April, 1943. Subbaraya Reddi had three sons, one Dasu Reddi who is alive and who is not made a party, and defendants 1 and 2 who are minors and are represented by a guardian ad litem. Subbaraya died in 1944. On the 29th November, 1940, his eldest son Dasu Reddi executed a release, Ex. A-8, taking away his one-fourth share and releasing his rights in the joint family and its properties. Ex. A-8 makes it clear that thereafter he shall have only blood relationship and that there shall be no right as regards assets and liabilities.

It may be necessary to refer to the transactions which led to the mortgage and the assignment. Subbaraya Reddi was possessed of 28 acres 47 cents nanja and punja lands which are stated to be his ancestral properties, and on the 24th July, 1920, by Ex. A-3 he executed a usufructuary mortgage in favour of Munuswami Reddi the mortgagee in the suit mortgage under Ex. A-1 for Rs. 4,000. On 31st July, 1920, under Ex. A-4 there was a further mortgage for Rs. 250 on 2 acres only, all the 28 acres 47 cents having been mortgaged under the usufructuary mortgage, Ex. A-3; on the 20th July, 1921, Subbaraya Reddi sold 7 acres 52 cents of the properties mortgaged under Exs. A-3 and A-4 to the mortgagee Munuswami Reddi for Rs. 2,800. The sum of Rs. 2,800 was paid by Munuswami Reddi by adjustment of a sum of Rs. 2,125 towards the amount due on the mortgages, Exs. A-3 and A-4 and the balance of Rs. 675 was appropriated towards the debt due by Subbaraya to Munuswami Reddi on a promissory note dated 5th November, 1920. The entire consideration of Rs. 2,800 for the sale was thus accounted for. After the lapse of about four years, on the 9th July, 1925, Subbaraya Reddi purchased from Munuswami Reddi 6 acres 34 cents out of the 7 acres 52 cents sold by him on the 28th July, 1921, under Ex. A-5 for the sum of Rs. 3,000 the sale deed being Ex. A-7. On the same date Subbaraya Reddi executed a simple mortgage in favour of Munuswami Reddi, the vendor under Ex. A-7, and the mortgagee under Exs. A-3 and A-4, mortgaging 25 acres 32 cents including the 6 acres 34 cents purchased by Subbaraya under Ex. A-7 on that date. The consideration for the sale and the mortgage were provided in the following manner: Rs. 3,000 was the sale price for the sale under Ex. A-7 out of which Rs. 2,038 was included as part of the consideration of Rs. 4,000 in the mortgage Ex. A-1. For the balance Munuswami adjusted a sum of Rs. 880 towards the amount due under a promissory note executed by Subbaraya in favour of Munuswami and the balance of Rs. 82 is stated to have been paid in cash by Munuswami Reddi to Subbaraya. As for the sum of Rs. 4,000 which is the mortgage amount under Ex. A-1, Rs. 2038 had been accounted for and the balance of Rs. 1,962 represents the amount of principal and interest due on another promissory-note executed by Subbaraya Reddi in favour of Munuswami Reddi dated 31st October, 1922.

The plaintiff obtained an assignment of this mortgage Ex. A-1 on 15th April, 1942, Ex. A-2, and the suit is on that assignment and the mortgage Ex. A-1. The defence on behalf of the minors was that their interests in the properties which are joint family and ancestral properties, are not bound by the mortgage and so far as their share is concerned no decree can be passed as the alienation is not binding on them. The lower Court agreed with the contentions on behalf of the minors and passed a decree only against an undivided half of the suit properties, i.e., to the extent of the share Subbaraya was possessed of on the date of the alienation. The right of the minors to question the alienation is stated not to have been disputed seriously in the lower Court. But Mr. M. S. Venkatarama Aiyar, learned counsel for the appellant, raised the question and urged that the right to dispute the alienation on behalf of the minor defendants depended on the right of the eldest son Dasu Reddi to attack the alienation, but since Dasu Reddi is stated to have impliedly consented to the mortgage, it is not open to the minors to raise the question once again. I am unable to find in the evidence as to any consent, expressed or implied, given by Dasu Reddi to the transaction of the mortgage, and as such it may be taken that there was no consent on the part of any of the sons to this alienation.

The position of minor defendants 1 and 2 is different from the position of Dasu Reddi as defendants 1 and 2 were born subsequent to the alienation, while Dasu Reddi was alive even on the date of the alienation. Dasu Reddi was not a party to the mortgage and in 1940 he separated himself from the family and ceased to have any interest in the family properties and thereafter the joint family consisted alone of Subbaraya and the sons who were born subsequently. In these circumstances where an alienation is made by the father before the birth of the sons whether it will be open to the after-born sons to question the alienation, is the matter that requires to be considered in this case.

The right of the sons to the property which they acquire as coparceners by birth cannot be disputed; but they not having been born on the date of the alienation, are they precluded from questioning the binding nature of the alienation made by the father before their birth? The decision of the Privy Council in *Lal Bahadur v. Ambika Prasad*¹, is understood to have laid down that the right to challenge alienations of family property is confined to the coparceners born and alive on the date of the alienation and that such a right of a coparcener who was born subsequent to the alienation is denied even though on his birth he acquires a share in the family property. Mayne, 11th Edn., on Hindu Law observed at page 502 with reference to this decision, that the point was not considered and it may not be right to regard the observation as a decision on the question :

"It would be against the whole current of Indian authorities which were neither referred to nor considered and cannot therefore be deemed to be overruled. If, however, the observation means that coparceners born in the family subsequent to an alienation before the death of the other coparceners who could challenge it have no right to the property and consequently no right to challenge the alienation, it would conflict with what was said by the Board in *Ramkishore v. Jainarayan*¹, as well as with the cardinal principle of Hindu law. The coparcenary which is interested in the property, not validly alienated, is continually enlarged by births as it is diminished by deaths. Where A makes an invalid alienation of the family property, his son B is entitled to object to it, not because he is in existence but as he is equally interested in it. The property is not effectively carried away from the family except to the extent of the father's share in the provinces in which he could alienate."

So far as Madras is concerned, it would be open to a father to alienate his share in the property ; but the right of the son to question the alienation would depend on the circumstance, whether he was born or not on the date of alienation, but whether he has acquired an interest, by reason of his birth, in the property. This is made clear by the observations of the commentator at page 502, that the right to challenge is only by reason of the interest in the family property and it is a right in every member of the coparcenary for the time being. As long as that right exists in the coparcenary, it would seem immaterial whether the son was alive at the date of the alienation or born subsequently. It is pointed out by Mayne that the question must be deemed to have been decided, as it appears to be, by reason of the latest decision of the Privy Council in *Akhara Udasi Nirwani v. Surajpal Singh*², where their Lordships observed :

"It is asserted that a member of a joint family must be content with the family estate as he finds it at his birth or at any rate he cannot complain of anything done before the period of gestation. Upon this rule, it is admitted, there is engrafted an exception to the effect that if the child who objects to the alienation of his property comes into existence or is conceived after the alienation, but during the life of a child born or conceived before the alienation, then that overlapping of the two lives enables the later born child to contest the validity of the father's act."

In this case there is the overlapping of the two lives, the lives of defendants 1 and 2 with the life of Dasu Reddi as he was born on the date of alienation and he is still alive. In *Rajah Vasi Reddi v. Lakshmi Narasimham*³, a Bench of this Court, though it did not expressly decide the question that arises for determination in this case, however, was inclined to the view taken by the commentator of Mayne's Hindu Law, and this is evident from the observations of Venkataramana Rao, J., at page 922 where the learned Judge says as follows (while referring to a decision of a Bench of this Court in *Visweswara Rao v. Surya Rao*⁴) :

"They express an opinion that if before the after-born son is born, the sons in existence were to die, the right is lost to the after-born son though the right to set aside an alienation may be within the time from the date when the cause of action accrued to the sons in existence. This seems to be in conflict with the view expressed in Mayne's book, at page 513, where it is stated that it is a right in every member of the coparcenary for the time being and as long as that right in the coparcenary exists it would be immaterial whether he was alive on the date of the alienation or born subsequently. Much may be said in favour of either view and it may be that that view expressed in Mayne's book is sounder. The scope of the Privy Council decision in *Lal Bahadur v. Ambika Prasad*⁵ may require reconsideration."

The other question which may have to be considered in examining the rights of after-born sons to question the alienation made by their father before their birth is whether the failure on the part of the elder son to sue within the period of limitation would be a bar to the right of the subsequent-born sons. Mayne in his book deals with this question at page 497 :

"Where a suit to set aside a father's alienation by sons who were in existence at the date of alienation is barred, it is equally barred as to sons who were born subsequent to the alienation for they do not acquire a fresh cause of action."

Mad. 913.

This is based on the decisions referred to at the footnote, mainly, the Privy Council decision in *Ranodip Singh v. Parmeshwar Prasad*¹. The commentator proceeds to state as follows :

"Conflicting views have been expressed on the question whether when a suit to set aside an alienation by an elder son is barred, a suit by a younger son is also barred under sections 6 and 7 of the Limitation Act. In *Jawahir Singh v. Udai Parkash*², the Privy Council held that though a suit to set aside an alienation by the elder of the two sons would be barred on the ground that he had attained majority more than three years of his majority to recover possession of the property would not be barred. . . . Where a son brings a suit to set aside an alienation of ancestral property within the meaning of Article 126 of the Limitation Act, he brings it in his character as son and not in his character as managing member. The right of the manager to represent the coparcenary as a whole cannot extend to his representing the rights of individual coparceners to challenge alienations made by one or more members of the coparcenary. Where several coparceners are entitled to set aside an alienation, the view that if the managing member is barred from bringing the suit, the other coparceners are also barred is open to doubt."

If therefore the eldest member or the managing member has not filed a suit to set aside an alienation within the period of limitation provided by the law, the right of the other members of the coparcenary to challenge the alienations is not taken away. As pointed out by the learned commentator, the right to question the alienation arises in an individual member of the coparcenary not by virtue of his being a managing member but in his character as son and that individual right cannot be controlled by anything which the eldest or the managing member has done or has failed to do. It appears to me that the correct and reasonable view to be taken in such cases consistent with the principles of Hindu law is that each son has an independent right to question the alienations irrespective of the fact or otherwise of the eldest or managing member having failed to ask the alienation to be set aside within three years on his attaining majority. In the present case, however, that question would not arise for the reason that Dasu Reddi had separated himself from the family and had ceased to be a member of the family, the only two surviving members of the joint family being defendants 1 and 2. The fact or otherwise of Dasu Reddi having taken no steps for setting aside the alienation is immaterial of the right of defendants 1 and 2 to question the suit mortgage. In that view I agree with the lower Court that defendants 1 and 2 are entitled to dispute the alienations.

But still the question remains to be considered whether the lower Court's finding that the mortgage, Ex. A-1 is not binding on the minor defendants as neither being for necessity or benefit is correct. The learned Judge observed that the property being ancestral property the alienation of ancestral property for purchase of new property is prima facie not a necessity. If it is a matter of benefit, it is to be alleged and proved and in this case there is no evidence let in to show that the joint family was benefited by the reconveyance, and in his opinion special facts must be alleged and proved to show that the alienation was one for necessity or was beneficial to the minors.

It will be necessary to analyse what is the effect of this mortgage, whether it can be said to have been necessary, supported by legal necessity or whether it could be said to be beneficial or whether in any event the defendants have not suffered by such alienation. The entire property of the family was mortgaged to Munuswami Reddi in 1920. When the principal debt under the mortgages was Rs. 4,250 in 1921, Subbaraya apparently considered it beneficial in view of the debt not having been discharged, to dispose of a portion of his property, and with that view he sold 7 acres 52 cents for Rs. 2,800 out of which Rs. 2,125 was paid towards earlier mortgages. What he did subsequently was to repurchase 6 acres 34 cents out of the 7 acres 52 cents for a sum of Rs. 3,000 under which he got the property which was sold away except one acre and odd, and discharged the entire debt due by him on a promissory note to the extent of Rs. 800. By the mortgage Ex. A-1 he created a liability of Rs. 4,000 out of which Rs. 1,962 represents the amount due on a promissory note of 1922 executed by the father which however is not alleged to be not binding on the minors since it cannot be so alleged as it appears to be an antecedent debt, the balance of Rs. 2,038 alone being a liability incurred afresh. This transaction of mortgage may be viewed in two ways. The family lost 7 acres 58 cents by sale in 1921 but gained to the extent of Rs. 2,125, being the part payment towards the earlier mortgages, and by the purchase under Ex. A-7 the family gained 6 acres 34 cents, practically taking back the property sold by them, with a liability of Rs. 2,038. What was originally a liability to the extent of Rs. 2,125, which was discharged, was practically created by the simple mortgage to the extent of Rs. 2,038, and there has been no increase of burden on the family. Properties as originally held were retained, the debt continuing. It may also be considered in this manner: By reason of the simple mortgage and the sale, Exs. A-1 and A-7, the family got 6 acres 34 cents with a liability of Rs. 4,000 and out of this Rs. 4,000 the minors were liable to pay the two promissory notes debts of Rs. 1,962 and Rs. 880 amounting to Rs. 2,842 and out of the sum of Rs. 4,000 only a sum of Rs. 1,158 is a new liability created under the mortgage for which the recompense is a property of 6 acres 34 cents. I am unable to see how it could be said to be a transaction by which the minors have suffered. It might be that Subbaraya considered the securing back of the family properties was for the benefit of the family not only getting back the family properties but consolidating the debts then due and making the entire property liable under a mortgage which he executed, Ex. A-1. I am unable to agree with the learned Judge in his conclusions. This is not one of the transactions which could be put on the same category, as sales of properties by managers or fathers for the purpose of purchasing other properties which are generally not recognised by Courts, inasmuch as a father is not allowed to speculate by sale and purchase of joint family properties. This case does not come within that category. It is a transaction which the father felt was and appears also to be one necessary in the interests of the family, to secure back to the family properties which had been lost and to consolidate the family liabilities by the execution of a fresh mortgage on the entire properties. In that view the mortgage Ex. A-1 is binding on the minor defendants.

The appeal is allowed and a decree for the amount claimed will be passed. Time for redemption 3 months. Appellant's costs is fixed at Rs. 300 including out-fees.

The Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras

Respondent.

Income-tax Act (XI of 1922), section 31—Powers of Appellate Assistant Commissioner in disposing of appeals after remand by the Tribunal—Distinction between capital receipt and revenue receipt.

Whether the Appellate Assistant Commissioner was hearing an appeal against the order of assessment in the first instance or was hearing an appeal which was remanded by the Appellate Tribunal he has finally to dispose of the appeal in the manner indicated in section 31 of the Act and under sub-section (3) of section 31 he is empowered in disposing of an appeal against an order of assessment either to confirm the order, or to reduce, enhance or annul the assessment. It would not be open to the Appellate Assistant Commissioner to introduce into the assessment new sources and his power of enhancement is confined only to the income which was the subject-matter of consideration for purposes of assessment by the Income-tax Officer.

Where the assessee bought land with no intention of selling it and after a long interval finds it convenient to sell the land by parcelling it out into different plots and also by laying out roads and providing other amenities with a view to get more price, it cannot be said that the activity which he carried on has any element of trade, commerce or business and it cannot be said it is an activity in the nature of a trade. To constitute a trade or business the intention must be that even at the time when the property was acquired it was so acquired for the purpose of sale with a view to make profit. The contrast is one of an owner-selling and a speculator purchasing with a view to sell and make profit out of it.

Case referred to the High Court by the Income-tax Appellate Tribunal, under section 66 (1) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922 (Act XI of 1922), as amended by section 92 of the Income-tax (Amendment) Act, 1939 (Act VII of 1939), in 66 R. A. No. 745 (Madras) of 1949-50 on its file.

C. S. Rama Rao Saheb for Respondent.

Satyanarayana Rao, J.—Two questions have been referred to this Court for decision by the Income-tax Appellate Tribunal under section 66 (1) of the Act. They are :

(1) Whether on the facts and in the circumstances of the case the inclusion and assessment of the sum of Rs. 9,397, representing the sale proceeds of plots of land, by the Appellate Assistant Commissioner after remand and upheld by the Appellate Tribunal, when this amount had not formed the subject-matter of the appeal in respect of assessment year 1944-45 either before the Appellate Assistant Commissioner or the Appellate Tribunal in the first instance, is legal?

(2) Whether on the facts and in the circumstances of the case the assessment of the sum of Rs. 13,197 realized by the sale of vacant plots and fruit shop buildings under the head 'business' is lawful?

The assessee is Sri Gajalakshmi Ginning Factory, Limited, Palladam, hereinafter called the "company." The company purchased in 1932 a ginning factory with extensive lands appurtenant to the factory and also a plot which was somewhat removed from the factory and was in the heart of the town of Tirupur. On this plot there were some fruit stalls. The whole lot was purchased for a sum of Rs. 33,000. The extent of the land appurtenant to the building was about 11 acres 33 cents. The site of the fruit stalls was 9 cents. Before the termination of the accounting year 1942 the building, the machinery and the factory were sold together with some of the land appurtenant to it for a sum of Rs. 40,000. The profit which accrued from out of that transaction was subjected to income-tax without objection during the assessment year 1942-43. Out of the vacant site of 7 acres, two acres were reserved by the assessee for erecting a cinema theatre, and the remaining 5 acres of land was parcelled out into 81 small plots in accordance with the requirements of the town-planning scheme of the municipality and the plots were sold thereafter in public auction; and by January, 1943, 61 plots were sold which fetched a profit of Rs. 2,036. Out of this amount the Income-tax Officer assessed the company to pay income-tax on a sum of Rs. 400. But this decision was reversed by the Appellate Assistant Commissioner on appeal who held that the sum of Rs. 2,036 was a capital receipt.

We are now concerned with the subsequent accounting year ending 31st January, 1944. During this period, by the sale of the remaining plots the assessee realised a sum of Rs. 9,397 and a further sum of Rs. 3,800 from the sale of the fruit shop buildings making a total of Rs. 13,197. During this assessment year now (1944-45), the sum of Rs. 9,397 was treated as a capital receipt by the Income-tax Officer. He assessed the sum of Rs. 3,800 under the head 'business' under the erroneous impression that this amount represented the sale proceeds of the factory building on which depreciation was allowed. Against the order of the Income-tax Officer, the assessee preferred an appeal to the Appellate Assistant Commissioner. The Appellate Assistant Commissioner by his order of 31st July, 1945, upheld the order of the Income-tax Officer, but reduced the amount to Rs. 2,800. There was a further appeal by the assessee to the appellate Tribunal, and the Tribunal was not clear about the facts and therefore, remanded the matter to the Appellate Assistant Commissioner for a decision in accordance with law after considering all the facts of the case. Under the law the appellate Tribunal had authority to remand a case, as was decided by this Court in Koduri Pulleswara Rao and another v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras,¹. After remand, the Appellate Assistant Commissioner after considering the facts, came to the conclusion that the sum of Rs. 3,800 and the sum of Rs. 9,397, i.e., in all a sum of Rs. 13,197 was assessable to a tax as income of business earned by the assessee. In other words, he enhanced the assessment which was made by the Income-tax Officer.

The second order of the Appellate Assistant Commissioner was again taken on appeal to the Tribunal and the assessee objected to the order on two grounds. In the first place, it was contended that the whole of the amount Rs. 13,197 was only a capital receipt and not a business income assessable to tax under the Act. In the second place, the sum of Rs. 9,397 which was never the subject-matter of appeal before the Appellate Assistant Commissioner should not have been added to the assessable income by the Appellate Assistant Commissioner after remand as he was precluded from doing so because that amount was not the subject-matter of appeal before him. The decision on both these questions was adverse to the assessee; and at the instance of the assessee, a reference was made by the Appellate Tribunal of the two questions formulated above.

The first question referred to us raises the point relating to the jurisdiction of the Appellate Assistant Commissioner under section 31 of the Act. In the present case, the appeal in the first instance to the Appellate Assistant Commissioner was confined only to the sum of Rs. 3,800 and there could possibly be no appeal against the order of the Income-tax Officer treating the sum of Rs. 9,000 and odd as a capital receipt, for under section 30 of the Act the right of appeal against the order of assessment is conferred only upon the assessee and not upon the Commissioner of Income-tax. The actual subject-matter of the appeal before the Appellate Assistant Commissioner was only the sum of Rs. 3,800. After the matter was decided by him there was a further appeal to the Appellate Tribunal under section 33 of the Act. It must be noted that the right of appeal to the Appellate Tribunal is conferred under section 33 also upon the Commissioner, unlike the provision in section 30 of the Act. The Appellate Tribunal in the exercise of its power under section 33 (4) of the Act remanded the case to the Appellate Assistant Commissioner. The use of the word "thereon" in sub-section (4) of section 33 has been construed as indicating that the power of the Appellate Tribunal was restricted to deal with the actual subject-matter of the appeal, for, it was open to both the assessee and the Commissioner to prefer appeals to the Tribunal to the extent to which they were aggrieved by the order of the Appellate Assistant Commissioner. The power under section 33 (4) of the Act undoubtedly includes the power to remand. (See *Koduri Pulleswara Rao and another v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras*¹.) But the position is different so far as the power of the Appellate Assistant Commissioner is concerned. Whether the Appellate Assistant Commissioner was hearing an appeal against the order of assessment in the first instance or was hearing an appeal which was remanded by the Appellate Tribunal, he has finally to dispose of the appeal in the manner indicated in section 31 of the Act; and under sub-section (3) of section 31, he is empowered in disposing of an appeal against an order of assessment either to confirm the order, to reduce, enhance or annul the assessment. The power, therefore, conferred upon the Appellate Assistant Commissioner by this clause is undoubtedly wider and is not restricted to the subject-matter of the appeal. Even though no appeal was preferred by the Commissioner in respect of that portion of the order of the assessment of the Income-tax Officer which contained an adverse decision against the Department, in disposing of an appeal by the aggrieved assessee, though the appeal was confined in its subject-matter to a portion of the order, it would be open to the Appellate Assistant Commissioner to deal with the whole of the assessment order of the Income-tax Officer, even to enhance the assessment. It was held that when once an appeal was preferred by an assessee, it would not be open to the assessee to withdraw the appeal so as to prevent the Appellate Assistant Commissioner from enhancing the Assessment under section 31 (3) (a) of the Act. (Vide *Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab v. Nawab Sha Nawaz Khan*².) Of course, it would not be open to the Appellate

1. (1947) 2 M.L.J. 216.

2. (1938) I.T.R. 370.

Assistant Commissioner to introduce into the assessment new sources, as his power of enhancement should be restricted only to the income which was the subject-matter of consideration for purposes of assessment by the Income-tax Officer. In view of this scheme underlying the provisions of the Act, it is difficult to accept the contention strenuously urged on behalf of the assessee, that the Appellate Assistant Commissioner, while dealing with the appeal after remand, was not entitled to enhance the assessment so as to include the sum of Rs. 9,397 also in the assessable income on the ground that it was not a capital receipt but was a revenue receipt. That decision may be right or wrong. But that is a matter for consideration on the merits. It seems to us difficult to draw a distinction between cases where the Assistant Commissioner was dealing with an appeal which was remanded and an appeal which was heard by him in the first instance. The only power which he could exercise in disposing of an appeal whether received by him after remand or directly against the order of the Income-tax Officer is the one conferred upon him by section 31 of the Act, and it is not subject to any restrictions arising out of the subject-matter of the appeal. The position, however, in the civil cases, i.e., appeals arising under the Civil Procedure Code is different. For, there the aggrieved party, whether he is the plaintiff or the defendant, has got the right to appeal against that portion of the decree which is adverse to him and by which he was aggrieved; and the appellate Court can deal only with such subject-matter as was properly brought before it and not otherwise. If the respondent did not file an appeal in respect of that portion of the decree which was adverse to him, it is open to him to file a Memorandum of Cross-objections in case his opponent chooses to prefer an appeal against that portion of the decree which was adverse to him. Without a Memorandum of Cross-objections, the matter, to the extent to which the decision was against the respondent, could not be brought up before the appellate Court, subject, however, to this exception, viz., that it would be open to the respondent without filing Memorandum of Cross-objections to support the judgment of the lower Court on grounds other than those on which it was based by the trial Court. The procedure to be followed and the powers to be exercised by the appellate Court are entirely different under the Civil Procedure Code from that which obtains under the Income-tax Act. As stated already, while the assessee is entitled to prefer an appeal against the order of assessment by which he was aggrieved, no such right was given to the Commissioner. The powers of the Appellate Assistant Commissioner which he is entitled to exercise are wider under section 31 of the Act than those which could be exercised by an appellate Court under the Civil Procedure Code. The analogy, therefore, of what obtains in appeals under the Civil Procedure Code does not apply to the case of the appeals against the assessment orders of the Income-tax Officer to the Appellate Assistant Commissioner. The answer, therefore, to the first of the two questions must be in the affirmative and against the assessee.

There remains the second question. The sum of Rs. 13,197 referred to in that question consists of two amounts, an amount of Rs. 9,397 which represents the sale proceeds of the plots of land which were appurtenant to the factory and a sum of Rs. 3,800 which represents the sale proceeds of the site with the buildings in which there were certain fruit shops. So far as the latter amount is concerned, there cannot possibly be any difficulty in answering the question, in favour of the assessee, as that amount can in no sense be said to be a revenue receipt as opposed to a capital receipt. There is no element of any business in the matter of the sale of those sites, and it is difficult to follow the legal basis on which a contrary conclusion was reached by the Appellate Assistant Commissioner and by the Appellate Tribunal.

The sum of Rs. 9,397, in our opinion, must also be treated as a capital receipt and not a revenue receipt. It was claimed by the Department that this amount really represents profits earned by the assessee by carrying on business or at any rate an adventure in the nature of a trade; and in support of this view, a number of decisions, English and Indian, were cited, in which on a given set of facts one view or the other was held. It is, however, not possible from an examination of these decisions to evolve a satisfactory definition or draw the line of demarcation between a capital receipt and a revenue receipt. As is often the case, each case must be decided on its own facts and no hard and fast rule can be laid down. That is the only "principle" that emerges on an analysis of the decisions cited at the Bar. When it is claimed that an income is an income earned by carrying on a business, one has naturally to look into the definition of 'business' contained in the Act [vide section 2 (4)] where it is defined as including any trade, commerce or manufacture or any adventure or concern in the nature of trade, commerce or manufacture. It consists, therefore, really of two parts. The activities of a person constitute either trade, commerce or manufacture or it may be an adventure or concern not exactly amounting to trade, commerce or manufacture, but may be something analogous or in the nature of a trade, commerce or manufacture. Now, then, what is trade? Trade has been explained in the Concise Oxford Dictionary as business, especially mechanical or mercantile, employment opposed to profession carried on as means of livelihood or profit. The meaning of 'commerce' as given by the same Dictionary is 'exchange of merchandise, especially on large scale.' In ordinary parlance, trade and commerce carry with them the idea of purchase and sale with a view to make profit. If a person buys goods with a view to sell them for profit, it is an ordinary case of trade. If the transactions are on a large scale it is called commerce. Nobody can define the volume of business which would convert a trade into commerce. But everybody understands the distinction between the two with sufficient vagueness. It cannot be said that the sale of the plots by the assessee is trade or commerce in the ordinary sense of the term. Indeed, it was not claimed by the Department at any stage of these proceedings that the person did in fact carry on trade in sites for the purpose of earning profit. But what was claimed was that the transactions of the assessee in selling these plots were an adventure in the nature of a trade, and therefore it falls within the definition of 'business' and the profit he made is profit which accrued from a business. If a person buys lands with a view to sell them and thereafter carries on certain operations so as to bring greater profit and facilitate the sale of the plots, it can be said, if it is a single transaction, that his activity is an adventure in the nature of trade, for, the essence of a trade, buying and selling for profit, is present in that activity. But if a person buys land with no intention of selling it and after a long interval finds it convenient to sell the land by parcelling it out into different plots and also by laying out roads and providing other amenities with a view to get more price, it cannot be said that the activity which he carried on has any element of trade, commerce or business and it cannot be said, therefore, that it is an activity in the nature of a trade. He was merely selling and did not at the time of buying start with the intention of buying and selling with a view to make profit. The intention must be that even at the time when the property was acquired it was so acquired for the purpose of sale with a view to make profit. In other words, the object of the acquirer was to deal in that commodity, if one may use that expression, as he deals with the goods in the course of an ordinary trade. In the absence of any such intention gatherable from the circumstances of the case, it is difficult, if not impossible, to hold that the activity he carried on was something analogous to a trade and therefore, the profit he made was not a capital receipt but a revenue receipt. It is not necessary to deal with any of the decisions cited at the Bar, except to make a passing reference to the case in *Hudson's Bay Co. v. Stevens*¹, where at page 437 Farewell, L.J., gave the illustration which is nearer to the present case. There, the learned Lord observed :

"Again, a landowner may lay out part of his estate with roads and sewers and sell it in lots for building, but he does this as owner, not as a land speculator." (The titles are ours.)

The contrast is, therefore, between an owner selling the property for the purpose of converting his investment into money and a speculator purchasing property with a view to sell and make profit out of it. If it is the latter, it may be an adventure in the nature of a trade and the income would be not a capital receipt but an income earned by exercise of a trade or something in the nature of a trade and would be assessable to tax. The case in *Kahan Chand and Eishan Chand v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab*¹, to which our attention was drawn by Mr. Rama Rao Saheb, the learned counsel for the Commissioner of Income-tax, refers to two transactions, one of which was held to be an investment of surplus capital and the profits arising from the sales were casual and non-recurring and therefore, not taxable, while in the other case which related to 158 kanals of land the purchase was from the beginning a speculative purchase and the brothers intended to sell the land to their best advantage. It was held that it was not an investment of surplus capital but a purchase made with the sole and exclusive object of selling it at a profit when a suitable opportunity had occurred. This case itself brings out the distinction between and explains under what circumstances the profits received by the sale of land would be a capital receipt and when it would be a revenue receipt. It is unnecessary, therefore, to refer to the other decisions on the point. In our opinion, the sum of Rs. 9,397 also should be treated as a capital receipt. It, therefore, follows that the sum of Rs. 13,197 is exempt from tax and the second question must be answered in the negative and in favour of the assessee.

As the assessee has substantially succeeded, he is entitled to costs, which we fix at Rs. 250.

Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908), Order 9, rule 13 and Order 43, rule 1 (d)—Order setting aside an ex parte decree on condition that a certain sum was to be paid by a fixed date and in default application was to be dismissed—Limitation for appeal against by the applicant—Starting point—Criterion date.

A single application cannot be rejected on two different dates to permit of two different criterion dates for limitation. An order setting aside an ex parte decree on condition that a certain sum was to be paid by a certain date and in default application was to be dismissed, is the only appealable order, if the applicant is aggrieved by it in any way or finds it impossible to comply with the conditions as inequitable or onerous, in which case he should appeal against it within the prescribed period from the date of such order. If the Court does pass a further discretionary order varying on his application the conditions of the original order or extending time for performance which will form a fresh basis for a rejection of the application, it would be open to an applicant to file an appeal against such an order. It is clearly not open to an applicant after such a conditional order is passed against him to do nothing at all by way of compliance or even by moving the Court before the date fixed for compliance to extend the time and then to claim a right of appeal from the date on which the dismissal of his application for default is recorded. Limitation for appeal runs from the date of the conditional order itself and not from the date of formal dismissal for non-compliance with the conditions.

The petitioner was a defendant in two suits. The first was by his wife's brother, O. S. No. 319 of 1947 for recovery of mesne profits. This was decreed ex parte on 9th January, 1948. He filed an application to set the decree aside on 23rd January, 1948. On this an order was passed on 19th January, 1949, directing the decree to be set aside on certain conditions, that Rs. 25 was to be paid by 7th February, 1949, and in default the application was to be dismissed. The petition was called on 8th February, 1949 and the Court passed a further order "costs not paid. Dismissed." The petitioner appealed against this order to the District Judge, who on payment of Rs. 41 by the petitioner to the respondent directed the ex parte decree to be set aside. In C. R. P. No. 1843 of 1949 filed by the plaintiff in that suit against that order, Balakrishna Aiyar, J., set aside the order of the District Judge observing that there was no finding that the appellant was prevented by sufficient cause from appearing in the trial Court on the relevant date, and inter alia directing a question of limitation, viz., that the appeal to the District Judge was time-barred to be heard and disposed of. The learned District Judge dismissed the appeal with costs on the sole ground that the appeal was time-barred as the order to be appealed against was the first order dated 19th January, 1949 and not the formal order of dismissal on 8th February, 1949. If the latter date is taken into consideration, the appeal would be in time.

The same point has arisen in another suit, O. S. No. 139 of 1950 filed by the plaintiff's wife for maintenance in which she claimed Rs. 30 a month. This was decreed ex parte on 26th July, 1950. The application to set aside this decree was filed on 21st August, 1950, and a conditional order passed on 25th October, 1950, allowing it to be set aside on petitioner paying Rs. 35 costs and depositing Rs. 150 by 1st December, 1950, with a direction that in default his application was to be dismissed. This application was called on 1st December, 1950, when the Court passed the following order :

"Costs alone tendered, but refused. The petitioner wants time to pay Rs. 150. The order works itself out. The petition is therefore dismissed."

Petitioner's appeal to the District Court, C. M. A. No. 4 of 1951 was heard on the same date as his previous appeal C. M. A. No. 20 of 1949 and similarly dismissed as being time-barred in a separate judgment.

The point for determination is what is the criterion date for limitation in a case of this kind for purposes of an appeal. Under Order 43, rule 1 (d), an appeal shall lie from an order under rule 13 of Order 9, rejecting an application (in a case open to appeal) for an order to set aside a decree passed ex parte. This is the only provision in law under which these appeals lie. The conditional order passed in these two cases is of a very common type and frequently used on the admission side of this Court. It is regarded as a final order, one favourable to the petitioner, if he complies with the conditions by the appointed date, whereas if he fails to do so, the order works itself out automatically as one of dismissal adverse to the petitioner. In *Ramayya v. Lakshmayya*¹, Mockett and Bell, JJ., considered a conditional order of dismissal of this kind and held that it was final and appealable, the further order of dismissal for default of compliance with the conditions merely recording the legal position which had arisen from non-fulfilment of the condition precedent. A different view was taken by Madhavan Nair, J., sitting by himself in *Rajagopalachari v. Nar-simha Thathachariar*², that the first order of the trial Court was merely conditional and that it was only the final order dismissing the application to set aside the ex parte decree, which was appealable under Order 43, rule 1 (d). In that case too, the conditional order was to the effect that if the money was not paid by the appointed date, the petition will stand dismissed with costs. That decision was considered by the learned Judges in *Ramayya v. Lakshmayya*¹, and differentiated on the ground that in that case the parties all treated the conditional order as open, and that on the date of subsequent posting, there was some discussion as to terms. The only fact from which this inference was drawn was the posting of the application to a following date as is apparent from the following observation by Madhavan Nair, J., himself:

"In this case all the parties as well as the Court treated the prior order as a conditional order because it appears, as I have already pointed out, from the note on the order passed on the first occasion that the petition was to be posted for the 13th September, 1923, meaning thereby that no final order has been passed upon it and the learned District Munsif would pass final orders only on that day, and the subsequent history of the application also shows that it was never intended to treat the order as a final one."

I have found great difficulty in differentiating between cases in which conditional orders passed in precisely the same terms can be treated as final and those which cannot be so treated. In the circumstances I prefer, and I am also bound to follow the Bench decision in *Ramayya v. Lakshmayya*¹, which took the view that such a conditional order is final and appealable. It is true that such an order, as the petitioner's learned advocate contends is in a sense favourable to him. He urges that his application has not been dismissed until he has failed to comply with the conditions, and that only after his application is finally rejected that his right of appeal arises under Order 43, rule 1 (d).

Mr. T. M. Krishnaswami Aiyar contends contra that the conditional order is one definitely and finally rejecting the application under Order 9, rule 13, unless a condition is fulfilled by a certain date, and that a petitioner cannot wait without either appealing against the conditional order or complying with the condition, and then reckon time from the date on which the order rejecting his application has worked itself out. A different view appears to have been taken more in harmony with the view of Madhavan Nair, J., in *Rajagopalachariar v. Narasimha Thathachariar*², by Oldfield and Bakewell, JJ., in *Venkataswami Naidu v. Shanmuga Pillai*³, a decision also considered in *Ramayya v. Lakshmayya*¹, and differentiated on the ground that the precise terms of the order passed by the lower Court were not set out there. A view in favour of the petitioner has been taken by the Allahabad and Bombay High Courts. A Full Bench of the Bombay High Court in *Narayan Putapa v. Vaikunt Subaya*⁴, held that an appeal lay against the second order in such cases. Marten, C.J., in his judgment made reference to two types of orders which were usual in the mofussil (a) a preliminary order and (b) a final order, whereas on the original side of the High Court there was only one order that if the applicant did not comply with the condition stated, his application was to be dismissed, and the original ex parte decree to stand. He then went on to make the following observations (at page 75) with which I am with respect in complete agreement.

"Though pro forma an appeal may lie, still in the vast majority of cases, the appeal will be one of those known as 'hopeless', because the conditions imposed by the lower Court will be reasonable ones and accordingly if they are not fulfilled, the only result will be that the appeal will be dismissed with costs. It can only therefore be in exceptional cases such as those where the lower Court has not exercised its discretion judicially or where quite unreasonable conditions are imposed, that an appeal of this nature can have any chance of success."

In *Jagarnath Sahi v. Kamta Prasad Upadhyaya*⁵, a Bench of the Allahabad High Court, Ryves and Piggott, JJ., also held that an appeal lay from the second order in such cases and further more that the lower Court had jurisdiction to extend the time for payment of the damage or to pass a fresh conditional order setting aside the decree upon terms, the original order having become inoperative. That was a case in which a suit was ordered to be restored to file on 31st March, 1913, subject to the payment of Rs. 15 as damages by the appellant within three days to the plaintiff. The Subordinate Judge, who passed this order, was transferred immediately afterwards and the matter came up before his successor on 4th April, 1913, on which date the money was tendered in Court and refused by the plaintiff. The question arose whether the other Subordinate Judge had jurisdiction to extend the time. This is a type of case which is always cropping up. With great respect I am in agreement with the view taken by Mockett and Bell, JJ., that the first order in such cases must be regarded as final and appealable. It is tantamount to a rejection of an appeal unless certain conditions are satisfied. It is open to a party affected by such an order to appeal on the ground that the conditions imposed are too onerous, or that the ex parte decree should be set aside or the suit restored to file without any terms at all. I am extremely reluctant to take this view to its logical conclusion pressed upon me by Mr. T. M. Krishnaswami Aiyar, that the Court after passing such an order is absolutely powerless, and hamstrings itself from passing any further order in the application, which may be necessitated by changed conditions or exigencies of various kinds. Under section 148, Civil Procedure Code where any period is fixed or granted by the Court for the doing of any act prescribed or allowed by this Code, the Court may, in its discretion, from time to time, enlarge such period, even though the period originally fixed or granted may have expired. The point would arise whether such discretionary orders passed from time to time extending time for compliance with conditions fixed by the original order will be appealable. A solution of the dilemma is by no means easy, and the question has, in no decision, which has been placed before me, been considered from the standpoint of limitation. Order 43, rule 1 (d) contemplates one appeal against the rejection of an application under Order 9, rule 13. A single application cannot be rejected on two different dates to permit of two different criterion dates for limitation. The only practicable and possible view to take appears to be that the conditional order, which is the basis of the rejection of the application, is the only appealable order, if the petitioner is aggrieved by it in any way or finds it impossible to comply with the conditions as inequitable or onerous, in which case he should appeal against it within the prescribed period from the date of such order. If the Court does pass a further discretionary order varying on his application the conditions of the original order or extending time for performance which will form a fresh basis for a rejection of the application, it would be open to an applicant to file an appeal against such an order. It is clearly not open to a petitioner after such a conditional order is passed against him to do nothing at all as in the present cases by way of compliance or even by moving the court before the date fixed for compliance to extend the time, and then to claim a right of appeal from the date on which the dismissal of his application for the default is recorded. The observations of Marten, C.J., in *Narayana Putapa v. Vaikunt Subaya*¹, reproduced supra, are apposite to the present cases in which it cannot be said that the terms imposed for setting aside the ex parte decree were unreasonable or onerous. Bound as I am to follow, the view in *Ramayya v. Lakshmayya*² with which as I have indicated with respect, I also agree that such a conditional order is final and appealable, it must follow, although this limitation aspect was not considered in that judgment, that these appeals against the subsequent orders of formal dismissal have been rightly held by the District Judge to be time-barred.

The petitions are dismissed, but on them I make no order as to costs.

Criminal Procedure Code (V of 1898), Section 488 (4)—Husband and wife settling maintenance to be paid and living apart by mutual consent—Jurisdiction of Magistrate to award maintenance to such wife.

When the husband and wife have amicably settled the maintenance to be granted to the wife and when they have been living apart by mutual consent there is no jurisdiction for a Magistrate to entertain an application for maintenance under section 485 (4) of the Criminal Procedure Code.

A Magistrate purporting to act under section 488, cannot assume the functions of a Civil Court and give judgment in accordance with a bond evidencing a compromise entered into between a husband and a wife.

Petition under sections 435 and 439, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, praying that the High Court will be pleased to revise the order of the Additional First Class Magistrate, Devakottai, dated 25th June, 1951, in Crl. M. C. No. 4 of 1951.

T. R. Arunachalam for Petitioner.

The Public Prosecutor (V. T. Rangaswami Aiyangar) for the State.

The Court made the following

ORDER.—This is a criminal revision case, which has been preferred against the judgment of the Additional First Class Magistrate, Devakottai, in Crl. M.C. No. 4 of 1951.

The short facts are : Sivakami Achi, the respondent before us, is the lawfully wedded wife of Krishnappa Chettiar. Krishnappa Chettiar and Sivakami Achi could not carry on their married life by 1948. This Chettiar, as is common in these parts, was keeping a concubine and wanted to take a second wife also. Therefore, the husband and wife entered into an arrangement, which has been marked as Ex. D-1, and it is nobody's case that this arrangement was not entered into or that the husband is going behind Ex. D-1.

The relevant passage in Ex. D-1 is as follows :

"As the party No. 1 among us is about to marry a second wife and as the party No. 2 above could not hereafter live amicably with party No. 1 and in view of the above factors, accounts were looked into with the help of mediators and it was settled that party No. 1 should pay and has accordingly paid party No. 2 a sum of Rs. 5,500. As party No. 2 desires hereafter to live separately and has asked party No. 1 to make provision for her maintenance till her lifetime and party No. 1 has agreed to the same and should accordingly pay party No. 2 a sum of Rs. 100 per annum on or before the 10th of the month (of) Thai every year till her lifetime in default party No. 2 could take steps to recover the same. Out of the sum of Rs. 5,500, there is a balance of Rs. 4,500 after reducing Rs. 1,000 paid in cash for which sum the party No. 1 has executed a mortgage deed in favour of party No. 2. Till this entire principal and interest is paid, the party No. 1 shall be bound to pay without any plea of limitation the seethanam money of Rs. 1,362-4-0 in respect of which a hundi has been executed to this effect both of us have agreed and executed this written deed."

There was a receipt executed by Sivakami Achi, which has been marked as Ex. D-2 and which can be considered to be the counterpart of Ex. D-1. It runs as follows :

"According to the agreement entered into between us, you have to pay me Rs. 100 as and for my maintenance till the 10th day of Thai this year. I have this day received from you cash for which I have executed this receipt."

Subsequently, the affairs of this Chettiar seem to have got into a fair amount of muddle and he seems to have lost his income from the Federated Malay States and other places and, what is more, his affairs in Ramanathapuram district itself seem to be not in flourishing circumstances, and, therefore, the Chettiar says that he has taken that refuge which is open to persons of that description, viz., a religious life. The wife has now come forward with a petition under section 488, Criminal Procedure Code, asking for maintenance of Rs. 100 per month instead of Rs. 100 per annum, which has been secured for her in Ex. D-1.

The learned Additional First Class Magistrate gave a complete go-by to Ex. D-1 and came to a conclusion of his own that the wife should be given Rs. 25 per month and hence this criminal revision case. The short point taken is that when the parties have amicably settled the maintenance to be granted to the wife and when the husband and wife have been living apart by mutual consent, there was no jurisdiction for the Magistrate to entertain this application under section 488 (4), Criminal Procedure Code.

There can be no doubt that a Magistrate purporting to act under this section, cannot assume the functions of a civil Court and give judgment in accordance with a bond evidencing a compromise entered into between a husband and a wife. Where a claim for maintenance is amicably settled by the parties, the Magistrate should simply dismiss the petition if pending before him. Lingadu v.

*Labakka*¹, *Mt. Rahim Bibi v. Khair Din*²; *Rahim Ali v. Fateh Bibi*³. In Madras High Court, CrI. R. C. No. 489 of 1903, a husband and wife came to a settlement outside the Court, whereby the husband consented to maintain the wife. It was held by the High Court that the Magistrate had no longer any power to make an order under this section as it could no longer be said that the husband was refusing to maintain the wife.

In this case, if the wife was dissatisfied with the miserable pittance secured for her under Ex. D-1, there are courses open to her like filing a civil suit for denouncing Ex. D-1 or she can ask for enhanced maintenance on account of the rise in the cost of living or she can file a suit on the ground that Ex. D-1 was executed by her without fully understanding its import and that it is an invalid document. It is not for us to advise this respondent as to the many courses open to her for getting enhanced maintenance if she deserves it.

This petition is allowed and the order of the lower Court is set aside and the respondent is left to her own reliefs in the civil Court, if so advised.

Criminal Law Amendment Act (XLVI of 1952), section 7—Scope—How far retrospective—Offences under Prevention of Corruption Act (II of 1947), section 5—Accused committed before passing of Act (XLVI of 1952) to take their trial in the High Court Sessions—High Court's jurisdiction to try the offence after the coming into force of Act (XLVI of 1952).

For offences under section 120-B of the Indian Penal Code and section 5 (2) read with section 5 (1) (c) of Act II of 1947 (Prevention of Corruption Act) and section 477 read with section 34 of the Indian Penal Code) the accused were committed by the Presidency Magistrate, Madras, on the 8th July, 1952, to take their trial in the High Court Sessions. On the 28th July, 1952, Act XLVI of 1952 was passed by which among other things, the forum for the trial of certain offences, one of which was the offence under section 5 (2) of Act II of 1947 was altered, making it triable by a Special Judge only who is to be appointed by the State Government. On a question as to whether the High Court had jurisdiction to try the case or whether it was triable only by a Special Judge.

Held: On the date of the order of commitment in this case the accused had a vested right to be tried in the High Court with the aid of a jury and he could not be deprived of that right. Assuming Act XLVI of 1952 to be retrospective, it will be seen that the Act does not make provision for any cases which are pending before a court other than that of a magistrate—for example a case pending before the High Court, and it is clear that the Act is not intended to be retrospective except to the extent indicated in section 10.

Accordingly the High Court and not the Special Judge is the only Court competent to try the instant case. Nor can the High Court transfer a case pending before the High Court Session to any other Court.

The offences under section 5 (2) read with section 5 (1) (c) of Act II of 1947 and section 477, Indian Penal Code are offences triable exclusively by the Sessions Court. The order of commitment was passed on the 8th July, 1952, and the High Court became seized of the case immediately after the order of committal was passed on that day.

On the 28th July, 1952, that is, 20 days after the said order of committal, Act XLVI of 1952 was passed by the Parliament in and by which among other things, the forum for the trial of certain offences, one of which is the offence under section 5 (2) of Act II of 1947 was altered. Section 7 of the Act is as follows :

"(1) Notwithstanding anything contained in the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, (Act V of 1898), or in any other law, the offences specified in sub-section (1) of section 6 shall be triable by Special Judges only.

(2) Every offence specified in sub-section (1) of section 6 shall be tried by the Special Judge for the area within which it was committed, or where there are more Special Judges, than one for such area, by such one of them as may be specified in this behalf by the State Government.

(3) When trying any case, a Special Judge may also try any offence other than an offence specified in section 6 with which the accused may, under the Code of Criminal Procedure, be charged at the same trial."

It will thus be seen that the said offence under section 5 (2) of Act II of 1947 is triable by a Special Judge only, who is to be appointed by the State Government. Section 8 provides for the procedure and powers of Special Judges in the trial of such offences. Under that section a Court of the Special Judge shall be deemed to be a Court of Sessions trying the case without a Jury or without the aid of assessors. Section 6 of the Act (XLVI of 1952) provides that the State Government may, by notification in the official Gazette, appoint as many Special Judges as may be necessary for such area or areas as may be specified in the notification. The State has accordingly by notification No. 918, dated 25th August, 1952, in G. O. Ms. No. 3100 (Home) appointed the Sessions Judge of Chingleput as a Special Judge not only for the district of Chingleput but also for the area covering the local limits of the original jurisdiction of the High Court of Madras.

It is now contended that section 7 of the Act (XLVI of 1952) is retrospective in its operation and after the said enactment the High Court has no jurisdiction to try the offences under section 5 (2) of Act II of 1947 and that is triable only by the Sessions Judge of Chingleput. It is well-settled that :

"no statute shall be construed to have retrospective operation unless such a construction appears very clearly in the terms of the Act or arises by necessary and distinct implication".

It is equally well-settled that a statute which affects the procedure only is retrospective and :

"no one has any vested right in any course of procedure. He has only a right of prosecution or defence in the manner prescribed for the time being by or for the Court in which he sues and if an Act of Parliament alters that mode of procedure he has no other right than to proceed according to the altered mode."

The question now is whether the trial of the accused in this Court relates to a vested right or a right in existence on the date of the enactment of Act XLVI of 1952 or to mere matter of procedure. In *Colonial Sugar Refining Co. v. Irving*¹, the question was whether a suitor could be deprived of a right of appeal to the Privy Council which he had on the date he instituted the suit by a subsequent change in the law and it was held he could not be deprived. Lord Macnaghten observed :

"It seems to their Lordships that the question does not admit of doubt. To deprive a suitor in a pending action of an appeal to a superior tribunal which belonged to him as of right is a very different thing from regulating procedure. In principle their Lordships see no difference between abolishing an appeal altogether and transferring the appeal to a new tribunal. In either case, there is an interference with the existing rights contrary to the well-known general principle that statutes are not to be held to act retrospectively unless a clear intention to that effect is manifested."

It will be seen that even the transferring of an appeal to a new tribunal is held to be an interference with the vested right. This decision has been followed in all the High Courts and the Federal Court of India. In *Venugopala v. Krishnaswami*², Varadachariar, J., following the decision in *Colonial Sugar Refining Co. v. Irving*¹, observed :

1. (1905) A.C. 369.

(1943) E.C.R. 39 (F.C.).

2. (1943) 2 M.L.J. 57 : (1943) 6 F.L.J. 47.

"Their Lordships' decision recognised that from the date of the initiation of the action, the suitor had a right of appeal to a superior tribunal according to the state of the law as it stood at the time of the commencement of the proceeding. This necessarily involves the recognition of an equally valuable right that the proceedings should in due course be tried and disposed of by the tribunal before which it had been commenced."

The learned Judge further observed that:

"This principle that a statute should not be so interpreted as to take away an action which has been well commenced has been affirmed in various cases in different circumstances" and quotes with approval the observations of Wilde, C.J., in Marsh v. Higgins,¹

"It must have been well known to both branches of the Legislature that strong and distinct words would be necessary to defeat the vested right to continue an action which has been well commenced."

This decision established that a right to continue an action which has been well commenced is a substantive right.

The principle of these decisions has been extended to and applied in the trial of criminal cases. The question is when can a criminal case be said to have well commenced. It has been well established that once a criminal case is well commenced such rights as the accused has—such as the right to have a case tried with the aid of assessors, the right to have the case tried with the aid of Jury, the right of appeal to a superior Court and even a right to bail are substantive rights which cannot be affected by a change in the law (*Vide Srinivasachari v. The Queen*², *The Crown v. Fitzmaurice*³, and *Shreekanth Pandurang v. Emperor*⁴). I would refer in this connection to one of the above cases, namely, the decision in *The Crown v. Fitzmaurice*³. In that case a European British subject was committed on the 11th of June, 1923, to the Court of Sessions to take his trial for an offence under sections 420 and 477-A of the Indian Penal Code. But the right to be tried by a Jury was taken away by Act XII of 1923 which came into force on the 1st of September, 1923. The accused appeared before the Sessions Judge in October, 1923, and asked for trial by a mixed jury. It was held that the right of trial by Jury was a substantive right and not a mere matter of procedure and the accused who had this right when he was committed for trial could not be deprived of it by the amendment by Act XII of 1923. Zafar Ali, J., following the decision in *Colonial Sugar Refining Co. v. Irving*⁵, held that "A person who had the right to be tried by a Jury when he was committed for trial could not be deprived of it, it being a substantive right."

Sir Henry Scott-Smith, J., who agreed with Zafar Ali, J., observed that the right of trial by a Jury which was vested in Sergeant Fitzmaurice by the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, was a substantive right and not a mere matter of procedure.

As I have already stated the question is when a criminal case can be said to have well commenced? In the Full Bench case in *Banwari Gope v. Emperor*⁶, Fazl Ali, J., held that a criminal case must be deemed to have well commenced as soon as the Magistrate takes cognizance of the case and the accused acquired vested right to have his case tried according to the procedure on the date when the Magistrate takes cognizance of it. A slightly different view is taken in *Shreekanth Pandurang v. Emperor*⁴, where Divatia, J., observed as follows:

"In cases which could be tried by a magistrate, the trial may begin when cognizance was taken but in cases which are exclusively triable by a Court of Session, the trial does not begin unless and until an order of commitment is made. All the previous proceedings before the commitment are stages of enquiry at the end of which the accused may or may not be committed."

The learned Judge was of the view that, in cases exclusively triable by the Sessions, the case can be said to have well commenced when the order of commitment is made and such rights as trial by jury, etc., the accused had on the date of the order of commitment are rights vested in him and he could not be deprived of those rights by a change in the law. The observation in *The Crown v. Fitzmaurice*¹; is clear that if the accused had a right to have his case tried by a jury on the date of the order of commitment he could not be deprived of it.

I would here refer to the decision of the Full Bench in *Ram Singh v. Crown*². In that case by notifications dated 20th March, 1947, and 23rd August, 1947, issued by the Punjab Government under the Punjab Public Safety Act, the district of Ludhiana was declared to be a dangerous area within the meaning of the Act. Under the Act the declaration that the area is dangerously disturbed involved certain changes in the procedure for the trial of criminal cases. One such offence for which the trial under the Code was not to be followed but the one under the Act is to be followed was the offence under section 302, Indian Penal Code. Section 37 of the Act which lays down the procedure is as follows :

"For purpose of trials under this Act the Code shall be deemed to have been amended as follows:

(1) (i). For sections 208 to 220 inclusive, the following shall be deemed to have been substituted, namely :

When it appears from the police report that the offence is one triable exclusively by a Court of Sessions or one which in the opinion of the magistrate ought to be tried by such Court, the magistrate shall, on perusal of the police report or when the accused appears or is brought before him, make over the accused to the Sessions Court having jurisdiction and shall forward the accused if in custody and shall send all police reports relating to the case to that Court, and that Court shall thereupon proceed with the trial of the case following the procedure for the trial of summons case."

On 30th September, 1948, the accused who was charged with the offence under section 302, Indian Penal Code was committed to the Sessions at Ludhiana and the trial commenced on the 18th November, 1948. In the meantime by a notification dated 22nd October, 1948, appearing in the Gazette of 29th October, 1948, the notification declaring the Municipal area of Ludhiana as dangerous was cancelled. The question arose whether the trial should proceed as in summons case (in accordance with the provisions of section 37 of the Punjab Public Safety Act) without the aid of assessors or jury or whether the trial should be in accordance with the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code. The Full Bench held that the trial should proceed under section 37 of the Act as in a summons case in accordance with the provisions of the law in force on the date of the order of committal (underlining is mine). The observations of Achhru Ram, J., who delivered the leading judgment are worth quoting:

"It is well settled that no one has any vested right in any procedural rule and that, therefore, any change in the procedural law has retrospective effect in the sense of being applicable even to judicial proceeding initiated before the change, provided of course this can be done without affecting any substantive rights acquired by any of the parties to the proceeding before the change. It is however equally well settled that the validity or operation of any order validly passed or any act validly done by a judicial tribunal in the procedural law for the time being in force cannot be affected by any subsequent change in the said law. It therefore follows that the action taken by the magistrate under the provisions of sub-section (1) of section 37 on the 30th September, 1948, in making over the case to the sessions court cannot be affected by the subsequent cancellation of the notification in section 2 (b) in respect of Ludhiana district and the consequent change of procedure applicable to the trial of cases like the present in the said district. By reason of that action the learned Sessions Judge was properly and validly seized of the case on the day the Provincial Government chose to make an order for the cancellation of the notification and he continued to be seized of the case even after the said Government had cancelled the notification."

This case established that if an order had been validly passed committing a case to the Court of Sessions under the law then in force, a subsequent change in the law would not divest the Court of Sessions of its jurisdiction to try it and the accused acquired a vested right to have the case continued in that Court and tried according to the law in force on the date of the order of commitment (Vide section 6 of the General Clauses Act and the observations of Varadachariar, J., in the decision cited above).

It will be clear from the principles laid down in the above decisions that on the date of the order of commitment in this case the accused had a vested right to be tried in this Court with the aid of a Jury and he could not be deprived of that right.

Assuming the Act to be retrospective, to what extent is it retrospective? Maxwell on Interpretation of Statutes, 9th Edition, page 222, says :

"A statute is not to be construed to have a greater retrospective operation than its language renders it necessary. Even in construing a section which is to a certain extent retrospective the maxim ought to be borne in mind as applicable whenever the line is reached at which the words of the section cease to be plain."

After enacting section 7, the Act provides for pending cases in section 10, which is as follows :—

"All cases triable by a Special Judge under section 7 which immediately before the commencement of this Act were pending before any Magistrate shall, on such commencement be forwarded for trial to the Special Judge having jurisdiction over such cases."

It will be seen that the Act does not make provision for any cases which are pending before a Court other than that of a Magistrate—for example a case pending before this Court. The Legislature must be deemed to have been aware of cases pending before Courts other than Magistrates and yet, it has refrained from making any provision for them. By necessary intendment it is reasonably plain that the trial of cases pending before Courts other than those pending before Magistrates is not affected. From the fact that the Legislature thought fit to enact section 10 it is clear that section 7 is not intended to be retrospective and at any rate not to have greater operation than what is indicated in the said section 10.

I am of opinion that the High Court is the only Court competent to try this case and the Sessions Judge of Chingleput is not competent.

Further, there is no provision of law under which a case pending before the High Court Sessions can be transferred to any other Court. The Letters Patent and the Criminal Procedure Code provide for the transfer of cases to the High Court from other courts; and there is no provision for transfer of a case pending before it to any other Court. In the absence of such provision a case pending before the High Court Session cannot be transferred to any other Court.

The result is that the trial will go on before this Court. The case is adjourned to November sessions.

v.

The State of Madras by its Chief Secretary and others

Respondents.

The Madras Buildings (Lease and Rent Control) Act (XXV of 1949), section 13—Order of Government exempting a house from the provisions of the Act—Whether administrative or judicial—Whether it offends the Constitution of India, 1950, Articles 14 and 19—Validity of order.

Constitution of India (1950), Article 226—Writ petition—Parties—Right of interested party to implead himself in a writ and support the order impugned.

Practice—Rules guiding Courts in following decisions of Courts of co-ordinate or appellate jurisdiction.

An order of the Government exempting a house from the operation of the provisions of the Madras Buildings (Lease and Rent Control) Act is an administrative order and not a judicial or quasi-judicial one.

Such an order does not affect the fundamental rights of a tenant under Article 14 of the Constitution of India, as there is no violation of the principle of equality before the law.

Nor is there any violation of Article 19 of the Constitution of India, as a statutory tenant, with certain rights and restrictions cannot accept the rights and complain of the restrictions. No question of unreasonable restriction on his part would arise as the Statute itself created the right subject to restrictions. He acquires the right not to be evicted except under certain circumstances, and one of those circumstances is when the Government exempts a building from all or particular provisions of the Act.

The landlords in whose favour the order of the Government is made, are proper parties to the writ and are entitled to be heard in support of the order under rule 6 of the Rules regulating proceedings under Article 226 of the Constitution of India, when all that the Government stated at the hearing was that they do not propose to support their order but leave it to the landlords to do so, there is no concession by the Government that their order is bad.

A single Judge is bound by a judgment of a Bench of two Judges, unless that judgment is expressly overruled by the Supreme Court of India. He cannot ignore a Bench decision on the ground that some observation of the Supreme Court of India made in a different context might indicate a different line of reasoning.

Petition under Article 226 of the Constitution of India praying in the circumstances stated in the affidavit filed herewith, the High Court will be pleased to issue a writ of certiorari calling for the records in G. O. Ms. No. 3678 Public (General C) Department, dated 9th September, 1950, relating to the building No. 2/157, Purasawalkam High Road, Madras, and quash the order made therein.

M. K. Nambiar and C. F. Louis for Petitioner.

V. P. Sarathy for the Government Pleader (P. Satyanarayana Raju) on behalf of the State.

Messrs. Subramanyam and Rajagopal for Respondents.

The Court made the following

ORDER.—This is an application for issuing a writ of certiorari to call for the records and quash the order of the Government of Madras dated 9th September, 1950. The petitioner is a doctor. Premises No. 2/157, Purasawalkam High Road, is owned by three brothers, P. Sourirajulu Naidu, Rangarajulu Naidu and Dhana-rajulu Naidu. On 10th October, 1938, the petitioner took the said house on lease for the purpose of running a nursing home. Since that time he has been running a nursing home under the name and style of "Nambiar's Hospital." On 6th February, 1945, Sourirajulu Naidu, since dead, filed an application before the Rent Controller, H.R.C. No. 3989 of 1945, for evicting the petitioner on the ground that he made a default in the payment of rent. But that was dismissed on 13th December, 1945. In October, 1946, he filed another application, H.R.C. No. 5244 of 1946, seeking to evict him on the ground that the petitioner was in arrears of rent and that he wanted the premises for his personal use. On 5th July, 1947, the House Rent Controller dismissed the application. An appeal filed against that order to the Court of Small Causes, Madras, was dismissed. The landlords filed C. M. P. 4139 of 1948 for issuing a writ of certiorari to quash the order of the Small Cause Judge; but that was dismissed by a Divisional Bench of this Court on 6th October, 1948. Rangarajulu Naidu filed another application, H.R.C. No. 4788 of 1949, for evicting the petitioner, alleging that he required the upstairs for his own occupation. The House Rent Controller ordered that application. The petitioner preferred an appeal against that order to the Court of Small Causes at Madras which held that the building was a non-residential one and that a second petition on the same facts was barred under section 10 of the Madras Buildings (Lease and Rent Control) Act, 1949 (hereafter called the Act). That order was made on 10th April, 1950. Thereafter the landlords approached the Government with a request to exempt their buildings from the operation of the provisions of the Act. The Government by their order dated 9th September, 1950, exempted the building under section 13 of the Act. The aforesaid petition was filed for getting the said order quashed. The Government filed a counter-affidavit supporting their order: but when the application came up for final disposal, the learned counsel appearing for the Government represented that the Government did not propose to support the order but leave it to the landlords to support the same if they thought fit to do so. The landlords filed an application, C. M. P.

No. 11818 to add them as party-respondents. This application was strongly opposed by the learned counsel for the petitioner. He contended that the writ nisi was issued against the Government and when they did not oppose it, the writ should be made absolute and the landlords had no locus standi to intervene in the proceedings. He further argued that in a writ of certiorari the Tribunal whose order is sought to be quashed is the only necessary party and therefore the landlords need not be made parties to the petition. I cannot agree. If this contention be accepted, the High Court would be issuing writs against the interests of parties without hearing them even though they are anxious to be represented in Court. That procedure would be against all principles of natural justice. No authority has been cited to me which compels me to hold that a party affected has no right to be heard in a writ of certiorari. It is one thing to say that in a writ of certiorari the Tribunal whose order is sought to be quashed is a necessary party. But it is altogether a different thing to assert that the party affected should not be heard. If the Tribunal is a necessary party, the party affected is a proper party. Further to meet this situation, rule 6 of the Rules to regulate proceedings under Article 226 of the Constitution has been framed which enables the Court to give a hearing to the parties affected. The said rule reads :

"At the hearing of the petition, any person who desires to be heard in opposition to the petition and appears to the Court to be a proper person to be heard shall be heard, notwithstanding that he has not been served with notice, and subject to such conditions as to costs as the Court may deem fit to impose."

The landlords are certainly proper parties to be heard where the order of the Government is in their favours and they are interested to support it.

Nor can the petitioner rely upon the alleged concession made by the Government pleader. The learned Government pleader did not concede that the order made by the Government was bad and was, therefore, liable to be quashed. But what he stated was that he was asked not to support the order but leave it to the landlords to do so. For the aforesaid reasons I hold that the landlords are entitled to be made parties. I allow C. M. P. No. 11818 of 1951 and make them party-respondents.

Learned counsel for the landlords contended that the order of the Government in question was not a judicial act and therefore not liable to be quashed in a writ of certiorari. Arguments, therefore, were addressed on the question whether the order of the Government exempting the building under section 13 of the Act is a judicial Act or an administrative Act. Section 13 says :

"Notwithstanding anything contained in this Act, the Provincial Government may, by notification in the Port St. George Gazette, exempt any building or class of buildings from all or any of the provisions of this Act."

The power conferred on the Government under this section is very wide and does not depend upon any prescribed objective considerations. They are not bound to give reasons. Neither the section nor the rules framed under the Act prescribe a judicial procedure for exercising the power conferred on the Government under the section. It is in the discretion of the Government to exempt a building or not. A comparative study of the provisions of section 13 with that of other sections of the Act indicates that the Government is not expected to follow a judicial procedure in exempting a building from the operation of the Act, for wherever the Legislature intended that judicial procedure should be followed, they said so, either expressly or by necessary implication. Sections 4, 5, 5-A and 6 relating to the fixing of fair rent and section 7 for eviction of a tenant prescribe a judicial procedure for making the orders thereunder. I cannot therefore hold that the act of the Government in exempting the building from the operation of the Act is a judicial act.

The connotation of the words "Judicial Act" has been well settled. The leading case on the subject is *The King v. The Electricity Commissioners*¹. Atkin, L.J. (as he then was) laid down the following test :

"Wherever any body of persons having legal authority to determine questions affecting the rights of subjects and having the duty to act judicially, act in excess of their legal authority they are subject to the controlling jurisdiction of the King's Bench Division exercised in these writs."

This passage was accepted as laying down the correct law on the subject and was followed in innumerable decisions. Slesser, L.J., in *The King v. London County Council*¹, separated the four conditions laid down by Atkin, L.J. and expressed the view that the existence of each was necessary to determine the nature of the act in question. The Supreme Court of India accepted the analysis of Slesser, L.J., in *Province of Bombay v. Khushaldas*². Therefore one of the necessary conditions, the existence whereof will clothe an act with a judicial character, is that the Tribunal concerned shall have the duty to act judicially. Elaborating this aspect Kania, C.J., made the following observations at page 226 :

"It seems to me that the true position is that when the law under which the authority is making a decision, itself requires a judicial approach, the decision will be quasi-judicial. Prescribed forms of procedure are not necessary to make an inquiry judicial, provided in coming to the decision the well-recognised principles of approach are required to be followed. In my opinion the conditions laid down by Slesser, L.J., in his judgment correctly bring out the distinction between a judicial or quasi-judicial decision on the one hand and a ministerial decision on the other."

Can it therefore be said that in the instant case the Act or the Rules made thereunder indicate that the Government should follow the well-recognised principles of judicial approach in exercising the power under section 13 of the Act? I do not find any indications to that effect. Indeed, as I have already stated, an unqualified power of exemption was conferred on the Government, to be exercised by them in their discretion. I therefore hold that the order of the Government exempting the house in question is not a judicial act.

Even so, it was argued that the order in question affected the fundamental right of the petitioner under Article 14 of the Constitution of India. But this question was covered by authority of a Bench decision which is binding on me. Rajamannar, C.J. and Venkatarama Ayyar, J., held in W.P. No. 132 of 1951 that the Government in exempting a house have not violated any of the fundamental rights of the petitioner therein. The learned Judges said :

"We are unable to see what fundamental right of the petitioner has been violated: Admittedly, the petitioner has no fundamental right to remain in possession of the building for all time. Whatever rights he now urges in his support are rights conferred by the very Act, and the Government has purported to pass the order only under one of the sections of the same Act.

Article 14 of the Constitution cannot be invoked in support of the petitioner. There is no violation of the principle of equality before the law. Logically the contention of the petitioner must lead to the position that either every building must be exempted, or no building should be exempted, —an absurd conclusion."

The learned Judges therefore stated in clear and unambiguous terms that no fundamental rights of the petitioner in that case were violated by the order made under section 13 of the Act. I should have thought that this judgment being that of a Bench was binding on me and no further arguments would be addressed. But elaborate arguments were advanced in support of the contention that in the circumstances of the case I am not bound by the Bench decision. More in respect to the arguments advanced than to clear any doubt that exists, I shall proceed to deal with the point raised.

Salmond on Jurisprudence states that the following classes of decisions are recognised by English law as absolutely authoritative :

(1) Every Court is absolutely bound by the decisions of all Courts superior to itself: A Court of first instance cannot question a decision of the Court of Appeal, nor can the Court of Appeal refuse to follow the judgments of the House of Lords.

(2) The House of Lords is absolutely bound by its own decisions. A decision of this House once given upon a point of law is conclusive upon this House afterwards, and it is impossible to raise that question again as if it was res integra and could be re-argued, and so the House to be asked to reverse its own decision.

(3) The Court of Appeal is, it would seem, absolutely bound by its own decisions and by those of older Courts of co-ordinate authority, for example, the Court of Exchequer Chamber.

1. (1931) 2 K.B. 215.

2. (1950) 2 M.L.J. 703 : (1950) S.C.J. 451 :

A.I.R. 1950 S.C. 222 (S.C.).

In all other cases save these three, it would seem that the authority of precedents is merely conditional. It is to be noticed, however, that the force of a decision depends not merely on the Court by which it is given but also on the Court in which it is cited. Its authority may be absolute in one Court, and merely conditional in another. A decision of the Court of Appeal is absolutely binding on a Court of first instance but is only conditionally binding upon the House of Lords."

This passage, if I may say so, accurately represents the procedure followed in British Courts. I do not see how the rules stated above help the petitioner's case. The first principle laid down directly applies to the present case. The Divisional Bench decided the case as an appellate Tribunal. Sitting as a Court of first instance I am bound by that judgment. Nor does the decision in *Young v. Bristol Aeroplane Co., Ltd.*¹, lay down any new principle. Lord Greene, M.R., after considering the case-law on the subject summarised the law as follows :

"On a careful examination of the whole matter we have come to the clear conclusion that this Court is bound to follow previous decisions of its own as well as those of Courts of co-ordinate jurisdiction. The only exceptions to this rule (two of them apparent only) are those already mentioned which for convenience we here summarise : (i) the Court is entitled and bound to decide which of two conflicting decisions of its own it will follow. (ii) The court is bound to refuse to follow a decision of its own which, though not expressly overruled, cannot in its opinion stand with a decision of the House of Lords. (iii) The Court is not bound to follow a decision of its own if it is satisfied that the decision was given per incuriam."

Learned Counsel relying upon this passage argued that I should refuse to follow the Bench decision on the ground that the opinion expressed is inconsistent with the observations made by the Supreme Court in connection with a different matter. The passage cited applied only to Courts of co-ordinate jurisdiction but not to a case of a decision of a Bench in exercise of appellate jurisdiction in its application to a case before a single Judge disposing of it as a Court of first instance. These rules may be applied to decisions of two different Benches of this High Court made in exercise of their appellate jurisdiction. The practice obtaining in our Court has been incorporated by Leach, C.J., in *Seshamma v. Narasimharao*². At page 474, the learned Chief Justice observed :

"While a Judge of the High Court sitting alone is not bound on a question of law by the decision of another Judge sitting alone, this principle goes no further. The Division Bench is the final Court of appeal in an Indian High Court, unless the case is referred to a Full Bench, and one Division Bench should regard itself bound by the decision of another Division Bench on a question of law. In England where there is the Court of Appeal, Divisional Courts follow the decisions of other Divisional Courts on the grounds of judicial comity . . . If a Division Bench does not accept as correct the decision on a question of law of another Division Bench the only right and proper course to adopt is to refer the matter to a Full Bench, for which the rules of this Court provide. If this course is not adopted, the Courts subordinate to the High Court are left without guidance. Apart from the impropriety of an appellate Bench refusing to regard itself bound by a previous decision on a question of law of an appellate Bench of equal strength and the difficulty placed in the way of subordinate courts administering justice, there are the additional factors of the loss of money and the waste of judicial time."

This judgment, if I may say so with respect, lays down the salutary rules of practice to be followed. In *Manilal v. Venkatachalapathy*³, Leach, C.J., again made the following observations at page 97 :

"A Judge has, of course, always the right of expressing his own opinion and indicating that he is not in agreement with an authority binding on him, but he is nevertheless in duty bound to follow it, as the Full Bench of this Court which decided *Seshamma v. Narasimha Rao*², had occasion to point. The fact that a Judge thinks that some argument has been overlooked in a judgment binding on him is no reason for refusing to follow it."

I am not therefore prepared on the English authorities cited and on the arguments advanced, to depart from the well-recognised practice and the salutary conventions established in this Court. If I did, I would be introducing only confusion and uncertainty and put the subordinate judiciary in a very unenviable position. I would therefore unreservedly follow the procedure obtaining in our Court which is supported by principle and found satisfactory in practice. A single Judge is bound by a decision of a Divisional Bench exercising appellate jurisdiction. If there is a conflict of Bench decisions, he should refer the case to a Bench of two Judges who may refer it to a Full Bench. A single Judge cannot differ from a Divisional Bench unless a Full Bench or the Supreme Court overruled that decision specifically or laid down a different law on the same point. But he cannot ignore a Bench decision, as I am asked to do, on the ground that some observations of the Supreme Court made in a different context might indicate a different line of reasoning. A Divisional Bench must ordinarily respect another Divisional Bench of co-ordinate jurisdiction; but if it differs, the case should be referred to a Full Bench. This procedure would avoid unnecessary conflict and confusion that otherwise would prevail. I therefore follow the Bench decision and hold that no fundamental rights of the petitioner were violated in this case.

But it was contended that the Bench decision should be confined only to the point decided and that the learned Judges did not purport to decide whether section 13 or the order made thereunder affected the fundamental right of the petitioner under Article 19 (1) (f) of the Constitution of India. But in my view this argument also is not open to the petitioner in view of the Bench decision. In the second paragraph of the judgment, the learned Judges dealt generally with the question whether any fundamental right of the petitioner has been violated and they held that the petitioner has no fundamental right to remain in possession for all time and the rights he claimed were only rights conferred under the Act. In the third paragraph they dealt specifically with the right claimed under Article 14 of the Constitution. It is therefore not correct to state that the learned Judges did not deal with the petitioner's right under Article 19 of the Constitution.

As the arguments were advanced at some length, I shall also express my view on the subject. It was contended that under the Act the petitioner has acquired a right to hold the property till he is dispossessed in accordance with the provisions of the Act and that section 13 conferring an arbitrary power on the Government is not a reasonable restriction on the exercise of his right in the interests of the general public. The relevant provisions of the Constitution read:

"Article 19 (1): All citizens shall have the right (f) to acquire, hold and dispose of property; (5) nothing in sub-clauses (d), (e) and (f) of the said clause shall affect the operation of any existing law in so far as it imposes, or prevent the State from making any law imposing, reasonable restrictions, on the exercise of any of the rights conferred by the said sub-clauses either in the interest of the general public or for the protection of the interests of any scheduled tribe."

In *N. B. Khare v. State of Delhi*¹, the provisions of clause (5) have been construed by the Supreme Court. Kania, C.J., observed at page 213 as follows:

"In my opinion, clause (5) must be given its full meaning. The question which the Court has to consider is whether the restrictions put by the impugned legislation on the exercise of the right are reasonable or not. The question whether the provisions of the Act provide reasonable safeguards against the abuse of the power given to the executive authority to administer the law is not relevant for the true interpretation of the clause. . . . The law providing reasonable restrictions on the exercise of the right conferred by Article 19 may contain substantive provisions as well as procedural provisions. While the reasonableness of the restrictions has to be considered with regard to the exercise of the right, it does not necessarily exclude from the consideration of the Court the question of reasonableness of the procedural part of the law."

In *State of Madras v. V. G. Rao*², Patanjali Sastri, C.J., accepted the law laid down in Dr. Khare's case and elaborated the same in the following manner:

"This Court had occasion in Dr. Khare's case to define the scope of the judicial review under clause (5) of Article 19 where the phrase 'imposing reasonable restrictions on the exercise of the right' also occurs, and four out of the five Judges participating in the decision expressed the view (the other Judge leaving the question open) that both the substantive and the procedural aspects of the impugned restrictive law should be examined from the point of view of reasonableness; that is to say, the Court should consider not only factors such as the duration and the extent of the restrictions, but also the circumstances under which and the manner in which their imposition has been authorised. It is important in this context to bear in mind that the test of reasonableness, wherever prescribed, should be applied to each individual statute impugned, and no abstract standard, or general patterns, of reasonableness can be laid down as applicable to all cases. The nature of the right alleged to have been infringed, the underlying purpose of the restrictions imposed, the extent and urgency of the evil sought to be remedied thereby, the disproportion of the imposition, the prevailing conditions at the time, should all enter into the judicial verdict."

Applying these principles, can it be said that section 13 of the Act imposes unreasonable restrictions on the right of the petitioner to use the premises as a lessee. The contention was that section 13 is an unreasonable restriction on the petitioner's right to hold a property. So stated, the argument appears plausible but ignores the nature of the right, the circumstances under which it was created and the underlying purpose of the restriction imposed. Before the Act became law, the landlords and tenants were governed by the contract and the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act. If it was a monthly tenancy, the tenant could be asked to quit after notice for the prescribed period was given. But the Act evolved a scheme imposing restrictions on the landlord. While the main object of the Act was to prevent the arbitrary eviction of the tenants, it took good care to see that interests of the landlords were protected within reasonable limits. A statutory tenant, the creation of the Act, with certain rights and restrictions cannot accept the rights and complain of the restrictions. No question of unreasonable restriction on his part would arise as the statute itself created that right "subject to restrictions". He acquired the right not to be evicted except under certain circumstances and one of those circumstances is when the Government exempts a particular building from all or particular provisions of the Act. His right to the user of the properties therefore is not an absolute one, but is circumscribed by the provisions of the Act itself. In this view I cannot hold that section 13 imposes any unreasonable restriction on the petitioner's right to use the property leased to him.

It was then contended that the Government exercising their power under section 13 of the Act acted with mala fides; namely, to circumvent the order of the Civil Court dismissing the application of the landlords to evict the petitioner. There is an essential distinction between the scope of the enquiry before the Tribunals constituted by the Act and the ambit of the power of the Government under section 13 of the Act. The Tribunals are concerned only with the question whether the landlord has made out his case for eviction under the provisions of the Act; but under section 13 the Government may in their discretion exempt a particular building from the operation of the Act. In exempting the building their power is not limited by the provisions of the Act. It is therefore incumbent upon the petitioner to establish that the Government have exempted the building with the sole object of circumventing the orders of Court.

From the aforesaid facts, it will be seen that the application for eviction of the petitioner was finally dismissed by the Small Cause Court on 10th April, 1950. But it appears from the records placed before me that one D. Subramanian filed Application No. 4455 of 1949 before the House Rent Controller for eviction of his tenant, the second respondent, on the ground that he wanted the premises for his own occupation. In that application there was an order of eviction. But presumably on an application made by the second respondent to the Government bringing to their notice that his petition for eviction of his tenant was dismissed, whereas the application filed by Subramanian for evicting him was ordered, the Government issued a notification exempting the house of Subramanian from the operation of sections 7 (3) and 9 of the Act. Subramanian in his turn filed an application to the Government bringing to their notice his difficulties. The second respondent approached the Government for exempting his house from the operation of the Act. Having regard to the situation created, namely, that the two owners of the houses could not live in their own houses, the Government thought that a case had been made out for allowing the owners to have their houses in preference to the tenants. On 9th September, 1950, by the same notification the G.O. exempting Subramanian's house from the operation of sections 7 (3) and 9 was revoked and the second respondent's house was exempted from the provisions of the Act. After going through the entire records, I am not satisfied that the petitioner has made out that the Government exempted the second respondent's house to circumvent the orders of civil Courts. It is more likely that they exercised their undoubted powers with the bona fide intention of protecting the interests of the landlords who had no other houses to live in. I cannot therefore hold that the Government was actuated by mala fides in issuing the order. In the result the application is dismissed with costs of respondents 2 to 6. Advocate's fee Rs. 100.

Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908), section 13—Foreign judgments—Vitiating circumstances—Distinction between judgments of Municipal Courts and foreign Courts.

There is a distinction between vitiating the judgments of Courts subordinate to one's jurisdiction on the grounds of suspected bias, interest, etc., and in vitiating the judgments of the foreign Courts. Foreign judgments are recognised by private international law only on the principle of comity between the nations, reciprocity, acquired rights, acquired obligations, international usage and custom, etc. and not as fundamental rights guaranteed by any world constitution or world courts the world not having reached that stage yet.

Errors in procedure, interest of slight nature, (like using cars of party, eating marriage dinners, etc.) mere suspected bias, pungent observations of Judges at hearing, a non-liberal attitude towards requests for constituting another Bench and not hearing the case themselves, and not granting adjournments for engaging eminent counsel will all be inadequate for vitiating a foreign judgment of a competent Court, as not affecting the jurisdiction or coming under any other exception mentioned in section 13, Civil Procedure Code.

Appeals from the judgment of the Honourable Mr. Justice Rajagopalan, dated 24th April, 1950, in C. S. No. 214 of 1944, in the Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction of this Court.

The Advocate-General (V. K. Thiruvenkatachari) for Appellant.

C. E. Padmanabhan of Messrs. Short, Bewes & Co., for Respondents in O.S.A. No. 67 of 1950.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Panchapakesa Ayyar, J.—These are two appeals against the judgment of our learned brother, Rajagopalan, J., in C. S. No. 214 of 1944 on the Original Side of this Court, holding that the judgment of the Mysore High Court, consisting of Medappa, C.J. and Balakrishnaiya and Mallappa, JJ., operated as res judicata in this suit regarding the moveable properties mentioned therein, subject to proof of pecuniary or other interest of Medappa, C.J., in a Mercedes Car, belonging to the estate of the deceased Ramalinga, and proof of his having attempted, in October, 1945, and the beginning of 1946, to dissuade Mr. L. S. Raju, Advocate for the plaintiffs, from appearing for the plaintiffs, Ramalinga's sons, and making strong and unwarranted remarks against them, which two facts, if proved, would, in the opinion of our learned brother, make Medappa, C.J., so interested in the subject-matter of the suit or in the parties to the suit as to make him disqualified to be a Judge in the matter, as he would be practically judging his own cause and violating the principle of audi alteram partem, and make the trial coram non judice, and the judgment a nullity. Regarding the four items of immoveables situated in Madras and included in C. S. No. 214 of 1944, our learned brother held that there was no question of applying the principle of res judicata under section 13, Civil Procedure Code, since there was no attempt at any adjudication of the title to those four items by the Mysore Courts, as three of them (included in the Bangalore City Suit) were specifically excluded from the decree, on objection being taken by the defendants (executors) to the inclusion of properties outside the jurisdiction of the Mysore Courts, and the fourth item had not been included in the Mysore suits at all.

The facts may briefly be stated. V. Ramalinga, the father of the plaintiffs, was a resident of Bangalore in Mysore State. He died at Bangalore on 18th December,

* O.S. Appeals Nos. 67 and 84 of 1950. First November, 1951.

1942. He had been extremely affectionate and considerate towards his wife, eldest son, Viswanathan, and other members of the family in the earlier stages and had tried to establish his eldest son, Viswanathan, in his prosperous business, he being worth over 20 lakhs of rupees and having influential connections and friends, but, it is said that he became, later on, disappointed with his eldest son's conduct and application to business, and felt himself insulted by the conduct of his wife, eldest son and other children, and so executed a will, dated 10th September, 1942, some three months before his death leaving to his wife, sons, etc., only a comparatively paltry pittance and bequeathing almost his entire properties to charities claiming them all to be his self-acquired properties and therefore devisable by him by will. The properties were admittedly worth more than 20 lakhs and consisted of immoveable properties situated in Bangalore Cantonment administered in those days by the British Resident in Mysore and subject to his Court, but admittedly part of Mysore State for purposes of sovereignty though appeals from the Resident's Court lay to the Privy Council till Independence and retrocession, in Bangalore City, within the State of Mysore, and in Hospet, Madras City and other parts of Madras State. Ramalinga appointed three persons as executors to administer his estate after his death and conduct the charities he prescribed in the will. Those are the defendants in C. S. No. 214 of 1944.

The executors obtained probate of the will from the District Judge, Civil and Military Station, Bangalore Cantonment. An appeal to the Resident's Court by the sons and daughters of Ramalinga (plaintiffs here and others), who had entered caveat, failed. A further appeal was preferred by them to the Privy Council. Before that appeal came on for hearing before the Privy Council, the Cantonment area was retroceded to His Highness the Maharajah of Mysore. The Privy Council held, therefore, that they had no more jurisdiction to hear the appeal because Mysore had become an independent State not subject to their jurisdiction any more. An attempt was made to induce them to reconsider the matter, but they refused, by their order dated 12th December, 1949, to reconsider the decision. The attempt of the plaintiffs and other members of Ramalinga's family to get the appeals taken on file by the Supreme Court of India and decided there, also failed apparently because the Supreme Court considered that Mysore had not yet come within its jurisdiction by the relevant date. So the Privy Council refused to deal with the appeals as it had lost its jurisdiction and the Supreme Court refused to deal with the appeals as it had not got jurisdiction by the relevant date. So, the plaintiffs fell between two stools and remained remediless in that matter.

The executors applied also to this Court for probate with reference to the properties situated within the jurisdiction of this Court, and Chandrasekhara Aiyar, J., on 17th July, 1944, in O.P. No. 45 of 1944, granted probate to the executors regarding the properties situated within the jurisdiction of this Court. There was no appeal against that grant by any member of Ramalinga's family apparently because the proceedings here were merely complementary to those instituted in the Court of the District Judge, Bangalore Cantonment, and appeals were filed in the Privy Council regarding the very same matter.

The plaintiffs here, the three sons of Ramalinga, contended that the properties dealt with under the will of Ramalinga were the properties of the undivided Hindu family, of which he and they were members, and so could not be bequeathed under the will under the Hindu Law applicable to the parties, which is admitted to be the same in Mysore State as well as in Madras State. They at first instituted two suits, O.S. No. 56 of 1942-43 in the District Court, Bangalore and O. S. No. 60 of 1944 in the District Court, Bangalore Cantonment, for establishing their contention that the properties were joint family properties, and that the will was null and void and not binding on them, and for directing the executors (defendants 1 to 3) to deliver possession of the properties to them and the 4th defendant, their mother, and for rendering an account to them of their dealings with the properties and the profits, etc., and for costs. The Cantonment suit, of course, comprised only the moveables and immoveables of Ramalinga situated within the Bangalore Cantonment limits. The Bangalore City suit comprised not only the moveables and immoveables situated in Mysore State, but also the moveables and immoveables of Ramalinga situated in Madras State with the exception of one item of immoveable property. On objection being taken by the executors-defendants that the Bangalore City Court had no jurisdiction over the moveables and immoveables situated in Madras State, the plaintiffs filed C. S. No. 214 of 1944 in this Court, regarding the moveables and immoveables situated in Madras State, for the same reliefs. These moveables consist of sugar shares, Oriental Assurance Company's shares, etc., valued at 4 to 6 lakhs now, and of all four items of immoveable properties (one of which has been converted into cash subsequently) worth some four lakhs. The trial of the Madras suit was deferred until the completion of the trial of the suits in Bangalore City and Bangalore Cantonment, as the same witnesses and documents would obviously be required in all the three suits. Before the Cantonment suit was ready for trial, the retrocession intervened. So, both the Cantonment and the Bangalore City suits were tried by the same Judge, Mr. Ramakrishna Iyengar, the Bangalore City suit being renumbered as O.S. No. 61-A of 1947. They were disposed of by him by a single judgment, though, of course, there were separate decrees in each of these suits. The District Judge, Mr. Ramakrishna Iyengar, accepted the plaintiff's case and decreed both the suits, on 5th December, 1947, but excluded the four items of immoveable properties situated in Madras State from the scope of his decree, obviously because of the rule of private international law that a Court has no jurisdiction to entertain an action for the determination of the title to or the right to the possession of any immoveable property situated outside its jurisdiction (mentioned by Dicey as rules 20 and 66 in his book, Conflict of Laws).

The executors-defendants in both the suits appealed to the Mysore High Court against both the decrees. The appeal against the Cantonment suit was numbered as R. A. No. 104 and the appeal against the Bangalore City suit was numbered as R. A. No. 109 of 1947-48 on the file of the Mysore High Court. These two appeals were consolidated, and heard, in the first instance, by a Bench of the Mysore High Court, consisting of Balakrishnaiya and Kandaswami Pillai, JJ. Before the appeals were heard, the plaintiffs-respondents applied to the Mysore High Court, in I. A. No. 6, for a stay of the hearing of the appeal, till the disposal of the appeals to the Privy Council against the grant of the probate. That prayer was not granted, though I. A. No. 6 itself was formally dismissed only on 15th March, 1949, after the appeals before the Division Bench were heard. The plaintiffs-respondents filed also I. A. No. 8 to record a compromise, which had, according to them, been arrived at between them and the appellants. That application also was dismissed on 15th March, 1949. On 2nd April, 1949, the Bench of the Mysore High Court delivered its judgment in the two appeals. Kandaswami Pillai, J., held that the decrees of the District Judge in favour of the plaintiffs should be confirmed while Balakrishnaiya, J., held that the appeals should be allowed and the two suits dismissed. Balakrishnaiya, J., the senior judge directed, under section 15 (3) of the Mysore High Court Act, as follows :

"Since a difference of opinion is expressed by my learned colleague on material questions involved in the appeals, these appeals are referred to a Full Bench for decision under section 15 (3) of the High Court Act."

A Full Bench of the Mysore High Court had, therefore, to be constituted to hear the matter in law and on the facts. The plaintiffs strongly objected to the Full Bench being constituted of Medappa, C.J., Balakrishnaiya, J., and Mallappa, J., as proposed, on various grounds. Mallappa, J., was not objected to on any specific ground carrying conviction even to the plaintiffs themselves, and, so, the objection to his sitting in the Full Bench was eventually dropped. Balakrishnaiya, J., was objected to as having already formed an opinion against the plaintiffs' contentions in the case and delivered judgment against them in the Bench decision, and therefore unfit to sit on the Full Bench which had to consider not merely the law but also the very facts on which he had come to a definite conclusion against the plaintiffs, but no interest or bias or partiality or misconduct was alleged against him. Medappa, C.J., was objected to on the ground that he had heard the application for probate of Ramalinga's will when he was District Judge of Bangalore Cantonment, and had formed an opinion against the plaintiffs' contentions and overruled their contention that the will had been brought about by undue influence on Ramalinga by two enemies of theirs, converting Ramalinga's expressed original intention to bequeath at least 3/4ths of his properties to his wife and children into a decision to practically cut them off with a pittance. It was also alleged that Medappa, C.J., was unfit to sit on the Full Bench, because he and his wife and children had, during the probate proceedings in the Cantonment in 1943 and subsequently (till 1945, when the car was sold) been using the Mercedes car of Ramalinga's estate for going to Court, school, etc., practically as if the car belonged to him, and had thus a strong reason for favouring the executors who had allowed him the use of the car; and also because, in October 1945 and the beginning of 1946, he had attempted to dissuade Mr. L.S. Raju, the plaintiffs' Counsel, from appearing for them, and had made strong and unwarranted remarks to him against them. The plaintiffs filed I. A. No. 14 for a re-constitution of the Bench on the above grounds. That petition was dismissed, and a Full Bench was constituted of these three learned Judges alone. The attempt of the plaintiffs to move the Government of Mysore to change the constitution of the Full Bench, and to constitute another Full Bench consisting of ad hoc Judges, if necessary, also failed.

The plaintiffs next asked for an adjournment of the hearing of the appeals in I. A. No. 15, so that, they might get Sir Alladi Krishnaswami Ayyar, who was then said to be in Delhi and could not appear at the hearing, or Sri Sarat Chandra Bose who was intended to be briefed, failing Sir Alladi Krishnaswami Ayyar. Neither of these eminent Counsel had requested the Court for an adjournment. I. A. No. 15 was rejected on 20th July, 1949, by the learned Chief Justice. I. A. No. 16 was then filed by the plaintiffs for another adjournment. All the three Judges of the Full Bench heard it. In that very application, the plaintiffs had objected at first to the presence of every one of the three Judges on the Full Bench. At the time of the hearing, they withdrew their objection to Mallappa, J., being on the Full Bench, but persisted in their objections to the presence of the other two learned Judges. The three learned Judges overruled the objections of the plaintiffs and dismissed I. A. No. 16. Thereupon the Counsel for the plaintiffs asked for permission to withdraw from their appearance. That request also was rejected. All the same, when the two appeals were heard by the Full Bench, on 27th July, 1949, the plaintiffs and their Counsel did not participate in the hearing of the appeals. The appeals were thus virtually heard ex parte, and the judgment of the Full Bench in the appeals was delivered, by Mallappa, J., on 29th July, 1949, allowing both the appeals of the executors and dismissing both the suits of the plaintiffs. The other two Judges concurred with him. The plaintiffs then filed I. A. Nos. 49, 50, 61 and 62 for reviewing the judgment of the Full Bench and for setting it aside on various grounds. All those petitions were heard by the same Full Bench and were dismissed. That marks the termination of the proceedings in Mysore State.

In C. S. No. 214 of 1944, the judgment of the above Full Bench was contended, by the executors' Counsel, to operate as res judicata and to be conclusive under section 13, Civil Procedure Code, regarding the properties comprised in this suit, and to preclude the contention of the plaintiffs, that they were ancestral properties, from being gone into by this Court. It is on this preliminary issue, regarding res judicata under section 13, that Rajagopalan, J., delivered the judgment which is in appeal before us. The plaintiffs who seem to have succeeded more than the defendants, under the decision on this issue, have filed O.S.A. No. 84 of 1950, contending that Rajagopalan, J., ought not to have restricted the scope of the enquiry into proof of bias, interest, partiality, misconduct, etc., vitiating the judgment of the Full Bench regarding the moveables, to actual proof of bias, partiality, etc., or probable proof thereof, but should have acted on several well-known decisions of the House of Lords, the Privy Council, and our High Courts, that a mere suspicion of partiality, bias, or misconduct on the part of the Judge by a party would be enough, and ought to have at least allowed the plaintiffs full scope for proving every one of their allegations of partiality, bias, misconduct, pre-formed opinion, etc., against Medappa, C.J., and of pre-formed opinion against Balakrishnaiya, J. O.S. A. No. 67 of 1950 has been filed by the defendants-executors and is against the exclusion of the immoveable properties from the scope of res judicata in Rajagopalan J.'s order, and against the enquiry directed regarding the proof of interest, and bias by proof of possession of the estate Mercedes car by Medappa, C.J., and his asking the plaintiffs' Counsel Mr. Raju to withdraw from his appearance for the plaintiffs in the Bangalore suit and making allegations to him against the plaintiffs, it was urged that, under private international law, the contention of the plaintiffs regarding even the immoveable properties could not be gone into as the finding of the Full Bench of the Mysore High Court that all the properties of Ramalinga were his self-acquired properties would be conclusive under section 13, Civil Procedure Code, as it related to a matter directly adjudicated upon between the same parties and would not be affected by any of the exceptions and as the enquiry regarding the use of the motor car and the alleged attempt by Medappa, C.J., to dissuade Mr. L. S. Raju from appearing for the plaintiffs and the allegations to him against the plaintiffs would be inexpedient and unwarranted under the rules of private international law, though permissible, if alleged against a Subordinate Judge, under the municipal law of a State.

So, these appeals raise very important questions of private international law which require careful consideration. Before proceeding further we may state a few well-settled principles of private international law. As observed by Wolff, in his Private International Law, 1945 Edition, the recognition of foreign judgments and their enforcement is an important problem arising in international intercourse by reason of the extensive foreign trade between a country and foreign countries in these days, and the judgments obtained by merchants of one country in respect of their debts and claims, in foreign Courts and also because of world war 1 and 2 having made millions of people migrate from their home country to other countries like the vast migrations from Pakistan to India and vice versa after partition, and the migrations of the Jews, Poles, etc., from their home lands and the need to recognise various foreign judgments got by these unfortunate persons. As Wolff observes, it is impossible to recognise all judgments of all Courts in any country all over the world, despite its manifest advantages, as the disadvantages are equally manifest in so unrestricted a recognition. In his own words :

"It is not advisable to trust every Court in the world to administer justice irreproachably. Bribery of Judges may have become so rare as to reduce this risk to a minimum ; but in some countries unsatisfactory legal education, appointment of Judges from political motives, and the influence which the State or some powerful criminal organization within the State brings to bear on the Judges are considerable obstacles to a universal recognition of judgments. Further, even where there is no danger of any kind of corruption of Courts, differences between two countries in their fundamental attitude to questions of morality or public policy must often make the recognition of some individual judgments seem undesirable. Finally, general recognition might result in grave injustice where the same relationship was regarded differently by the Courts of two countries, as in cases of marriage, divorce, inheritance, etc."

The extent to which foreign judgments will be recognised as conclusive in India has been clearly stated in section 13, Civil Procedure Code, which runs as follows :

"A foreign judgment shall be conclusive as to any matter thereby directly adjudicated upon between the same parties or between parties under whom they or any of them claim, litigating under the same title, except—

- (a) where it has not been pronounced by a Court of competent jurisdiction ;
- (b) where it has not been given on the merits of the case ;
- (c) where it appears on the face of the proceedings to be founded on an incorrect view of international law or a refusal to recognise the law of British India in cases in which such law is applicable ;
- (d) where the proceedings in which the judgment was obtained are opposed to natural justice ;
- (e) where it has been obtained by fraud ;
- (f) where it sustains a claim founded on a breach of any law in force in British India."

Needless to say, section 13, Civil Procedure Code, is based on well-known decisions of the House of Lords, Privy Council and other Courts in England and abroad, and the High Courts in India. Though, after the coming into force of the Constitution of India on 26th January, 1950, and the Independence of India and the severance of India's dependence on the King of England and the Privy Council, the rulings of the Privy Council are not legally binding on Courts in India, they are treated with very great respect, as held by the Federal Court and the Supreme Court and various High Courts including our own see the Bench decision in *Lakshmi Narsa Reddi v. Official Receiver, Sree Films, Ltd.*¹. That is why Counsel on both sides have profusely quoted from English rulings and text-books, Indian rulings being few, as India was not having this question of foreign judgments frequently till she became independent in 1947. We may add that the qualities required in Judges, and regarding a Court of competent jurisdiction and rules of natural justice, and what constitutes fraud and the effect of fraud on judgments, do not differ appreciably in English law and the law of the Indian Republic. The Constitution of India accords the same recognition to foreign judgments as section 13, Civil Procedure Code, does, and has not altered the law of India in this respect. We may go further and say that even under the immemorial Hindu Law the views held regarding the qualities required in Judges and judgments and the views about natural justice were much the same as held in Indian Courts now, and judgments were held to be null and void in cases of proved perjury, bribery and fraud and also where the party was not given an opportunity to be heard.

We shall now state the well-settled principles of private international law regarding the recognition of judgments and the application of section 13 to them, and discuss the merits of the contentions in these appeals. A "foreign judgment" has been defined by the Privy Council in *Brijlal v. Govindram*², confirming the view expressed by Beaumont, C.J. and Weston, J., in the Bench decision of the Bombay High Court reported in *Brijlal v. Govindram*³, the Privy Council decision being given on appeal. The Privy Council has said that the expression 'foreign judgment' must be understood to mean 'an adjudication by a foreign Court upon the matter before it,' and has added that it would be quite impracticable to hold that a foreign judgment means a statement by a foreign Judge of the reasons for his order, since, if that were the meaning of the judgment, section 13, Civil Procedure Code, would not apply to an order where no reasons were given. It is clear to us that the Full Bench judgment is a foreign judgment, as mentioned in section 13 within the definition accepted by the Privy Council. The phrase 'directly adjudicated upon between the same parties' in section 13 also admits of little difficulty. It is clear from the Full Bench judgment that all the properties included in C.S. No. 214 of 1944 and the properties in Mysore State, including the Bangalore Cantonment, were directly adjudicated upon, except the four items of immoveable properties included in this suit, regarding which there was no direct adjudication at all. We cannot agree with the learned Advocate-General, who appeared for the executors-appellants in O.S.A. No. 67 of 1950, that simply because all the properties of Ramalinga, moveable and immoveable, were held by the Full Bench to be the self-acquired properties of Ramalinga, and no exception was made, there was an adjudication that these four items of immoveable properties, which were not covered by the decree of the trial Court, Bench Court or Full Bench, would be a matter directly adjudicated upon. When there was no decree at all regarding them, there cannot be any adjudication. Besides, Dicey, Wolff and other authorities on private international law are emphatic that a municipal Court of a country has no jurisdiction to entertain an action for the determination of the title to or the right to the possession of immoveables situated in foreign lands. The exception that where a municipal Court has jurisdiction to entertain a suit for administering an estate or trust and the property includes moveables or immoveables situated abroad, the municipal Court may have jurisdiction to determine questions of title to the foreign immoveables for purposes of the administration, mentioned as an exception to rule 20 by Dicey, and relied on by the learned Advocate-General, will have no application to this case for three reasons. First of all, the trial Court's decision and the decision of the Bench and the Full Bench in these cases were not in administration suits or proceedings, but in regular suits for recovery of properties from the executors, claiming them to be ancestral properties not devisable by Ramalinga by will. Secondly, there was no decree or adjudication regarding these four items, one of them not being included in the suits at all, and the other three being omitted from the decree after objection was taken to jurisdiction. Thirdly, the learned Advocate-General had to confess that there was no direct decision in his favour. The decisions relied on by the learned Advocate-General, namely, *In re Piercy*¹, *In re Holles*² and *In re Duke of Wellington*³, will not prove the point raised by the appellants in O.S.A. No. 67 of 1950, as, though the lands in those cases were situated in Italy, Canada (Ontario) and Spain, the jurisdiction was assumed by the Courts in England and the party submitted to their jurisdiction and there was no consideration or recognition of a foreign judgment and its applicability to lands in England at all. Besides, as already mentioned, the lands were covered by the decree in those cases, and were not left out of the decrees, as in our case, expressly owing to want of jurisdiction. In *In re Ross*⁴, it has been held that the lex loci (local law) or lex situs (law of country where the lands are situated) will govern immoveables, though the law of domicile will govern moveables. That is also the view taken in India, as in all civilised countries: see *Khur Singh v. Achar Khasia*⁵. It follows, therefore, that Rajagopalan J.'s judgment holding that res judicata did not operate by virtue of the Full Bench judgment of the Mysore High Court regarding the four immoveables was right, and must be confirmed, and the appeal, O.S.A. No. 67 of 1950, dismissed, regarding that matter. We may add that the clause "the matter directly adjudicated upon" in section 13, Civil Procedure Code, is narrower than the clause "the matter directly and substantially in issue" in section 11.

We now come to the contention of the learned Advocate-General, in O.S.A. No. 67 of 1950, that Rajagopalan, J., was not justified in ordering any enquiry regarding the motor car allegation or the alleged attempt to dissuade Mr. L. S. Raju from appearing for the plaintiffs, and the contention of Mr. Padmanabha Mudaliar in O.S.A. No. 84 of 1950, that Rajagopalan, J., should have ignored the Full Bench judgment in toto regarding the moveables also or, at least, directed a full and unrestricted enquiry into all allegations of interest, bias, partiality, misconduct, preconceived notions, and errors in procedure, on the part of Medappa, C.J. and Balakrishnayya, J., who took part in the Full Bench. The scope of an enquiry into a foreign judgment, for holding it not to be conclusive, has been laid down in the exceptions to section 13, Civil Procedure Code, which will be conclusive in the matter, as can be inferred from the judgment of the Privy Council in *Brijlal v. Govindram*⁶. Dicey and Wolff also expressly say that the foreign judgment of a Court of competent jurisdiction regarding moveables will be conclusive unless it is vitiated by fraud, or, is opposed to fundamental principles of natural justice, as, for example, by want of due notice to the party affected thereby, or denial of an opportunity to a party of presenting his case to the Court (under which last heading the alleged attempt of Medappa, C.J., to dissuade Mr. L. S. Raju, if proved, will fall). Dicey says that the fraud invalidating a foreign judgment may be either fraud on the part of the party in whose favour the judgment is given (as by bribing the Judge to give a decision in his favour, misleading the Judge into giving a decision in his favour, by proved false evidence, etc.), or fraud on the part of the Court pronouncing the judgment (as, for example, by writing a judgment before hearing the parties and delivering that judgment after hearing the parties and pretending that it was written only after hearing the parties, or taking a bribe for delivering a corrupt and untenable decision in favour of a party).

Dicey says :

"There are two rules relating to these matters which have to be borne in mind and the joint operation of which gives rise to difficulty. First of all, there is the rule, which is perfectly well established and well known, that a party to an action can impeach the judgment in it for fraud. Whether it is the judgment of an English Court or of a foreign Court does not matter; using general language, that is a general proposition, unconditional and undisputed. Another general proposition which, speaking in equally general language, is perfectly well settled is, that when you bring an action on a foreign judgment, you cannot go into the merits which have been tried in the foreign Court."

Relying on the ruling in *Abouloof v. Oppenheimer*¹ and *Vadala v. Lawes*² he says that in cases of fraud bringing about a foreign judgment, the municipal Court will have to go into the very facts which were investigated and which were in issue in the foreign Court. Mr. Padmanabha Mudaliar, for the appellants in O.S.A. No. 84 of 1950, urged before us that the Full Bench judgment was already prepared and was ready before the hearing before it began, and was delivered after the hearing, fraudulently pretending that it had been prepared only after the hearing, and, so, was vitiated by fraud and should be treated as null and void and as not operating as res judicata even regarding the moveables. The learned Advocate-General urged before us that this point was not raised before Rajagopalan, J., and so should not be allowed to be raised before us. We agree. The only thing urged by the plaintiffs, even according to Mr. Padmanabha Mudaliar, in their affidavit dated 28th January, 1950, before Rajagopalan, J., was the following passage in the affidavit :

"One other feature which makes his judgment unacceptable is that, within 24 hours of the closing of arguments in the case I refused to appear or to be represented by Counsel, he pronounces judgment on a complicated matter and accounts, requiring days of laborious study and research, thus giving room for suspicion that the judgment was a foregone conclusion, and that the Full Bench hearing was a farce. Memorials against such an unjudicial performance have been forwarded to the authorities concerned and we are awaiting their decision and action. In these circumstances, which I beg leave of Court to prove by evidence, the said Full Bench judgment is a nullity and the rights of the parties said to have been acquired thereunder are equally null and void."

It is clear to us that that passage only mentioned a preconceived opinion by the Judges, and that it has not actually covered the point of fraud now raised before us, which is much wider and would have been stated in that form had that been the contention relied on, especially seeing that Dicey's rule would have covered it and invalidated the judgment. Section 13 (d), Civil Procedure Code, also invalidating it, as the proceedings, in which the judgment was obtained, would then be clearly opposed to natural justice. So, we cannot allow the plaintiff-appellants to raise this point before us, and reject this argument, though, we agree that fraud, if alleged and proved, will, indeed, vitiate every judgment, as held by the House of Lords in *Castrique v. Imrie*³ and accepted by all Courts and those book writers.

The next argument of Mr. Padmanabha Mudaliar, for the plaintiffs-appellants, was that, as per the ruling in *Pemberton v. Hughes*⁴ a foreign judgment would only be recognised and acted upon in England, notwithstanding any irregularity of procedure under the local law, provided the foreign Court had jurisdiction over the subject-matter and over the persons brought before it and the proceedings did not offend against English views of substantial justice. He urged that the clause 'opposed to natural justice' in section 13 (d) would also mean 'opposed to notions of justice entertained in this Court.' He then relied on the rulings in The King v. Sussex Justices : Ex parte *Mecarthy*⁵, The King v. Essex Justice : Ex parte *Perkins*⁶, Rex v. Divine : Ex parte *Walton*⁷ and The King v. Salford Assessment Committee : Ex parte *Ogden*⁸ and urged that, as per those rulings, justice must not only be done, but must also seem to be done, and that a mere apprehension in the minds of the parties that the decision would not be delivered by a Judge impartially, and without bias or partiality, is enough to vitiate a judgment delivered by such a Judge, especially when the party had protested before the Judge himself, as here, against his hearing the case, and that, therefore, the Full Bench judgment of the Mysore High Court would be null and void and would not operate as res judicata even regarding the moveables, and that even proof of the alleged acts of bias, partiality, misconduct, preconceived notion, etc., would be unnecessary in such a case. We cannot agree. The rulings relied on by him are all rulings of a municipal Court about Courts subordinate to it, and simply vitiated the rulings of subordinate Courts, and not any foreign judgments. The learned Advocate-General rightly urged that there is a distinction in this matter between vitiating the judgments of Courts subordinate to one's jurisdiction on the grounds of suspected bias; interest, etc., and in vitiating the judgments of foreign Courts. As he urged, foreign judgments are recognised by private international law only on the principle of comity between the nations, reciprocity, acquired rights, acquired obligations, international usage and custom, etc.; and not as fundamental rights guaranteed by any world Constitution or world Court, the world not having reached that stage yet. That is why, as already noticed the Privy Council in *Brijlal v. Govindram*¹ agreeing with the Bombay High Court, held that a foreign judgment of a competent Court, not falling within the exceptions to section 13, Civil Procedure Code, would be conclusive, even if it gave no reasons for the judgment, which, of course, would be unthinkable in the case of Courts subordinate to the High Court or Privy Council. That is also why the Privy Council and the Bombay High Court held in that case an Indian Court cannot go into the question of the misconduct of arbitrators appointed by a foreign Court, by allowing unauthorised persons to approach them and discuss the merits of the arbitration matter with them, to be not vitiating the foreign judgment, as it did not go to the jurisdiction of the foreign Court. Needless to say, the decision would have been different if the misconduct was of arbitrators appointed by a Court subordinate to the municipal Courts, and not by a foreign Court, though in *Eckersley v. The Mersey Docks and Harbour Board*² it was held that the rule which applies to a Judge or other person holding judicial office, namely, that he ought not to hear cases in which he might be suspected of a bias in favour of one of the parties does not apply to an arbitrator named in a contract, to whom both of the parties have agreed to refer disputes which might arise between them under it. The view of the Bombay High Court and the Privy Council in *Brijlal v. Govindram*¹ in the case of a foreign judgment, is in favour of the executors, and precludes, in our opinion, an enquiry into mere bias, interest, etc., of the Judges in a foreign judgment.

The learned Advocate-General urged that it is neither expedient nor proper to apply to judgments of foreign Courts, which may be Courts of U. S. A., United Kingdom, U. S. S. R., or other powerful foreign country, in future (and not merely of nearby Mysore, Pudukkottai, Indore or Bikaner, now part of India), now that India has attained independence and is having ambassadors in those countries and close relations with them, and that, therefore, any principle invalidating foreign judgments not warranted by specific rulings or by authoritative text-book writers like Dicey and Wolff, and merely resting on an alleged bias, partiality, pre-conceived opinion, procedural irregularity, or alleged misconduct of Judges, like those raised by Mr. Padmanabha Mudaliar for the plaintiffs and not recognized by any rulings, or responsible text-book writers should not be recognized, by any theory of logical extension, as that would act like a boomerang, recoil on Indian Courts and their judgments when relied on in foreign Courts to the great detriment of private international law and the worsening of relations between nations and countries. On this ground, he vigorously opposed the "logical extension" of the well-established principles of private international law, attempted by Rajagopalan, J., in directing an enquiry into the car episode and the attempt to dissuade Mr. L. S. Raju. There is force in what he says so far as the car episode is concerned. The alleged attempt to dissuade Mr. L. S. Raju for the plaintiff, if proved, will fall within the scope of well-established rules. We are not disposed to agree with Mr. Padmanabha Mudaliar in his extreme contentions. It is well settled that a mere error in procedure in a foreign Court will not affect its conclusive nature under section 13, Civil Procedure Code, provided that error in procedure does not amount to a violation of natural justice under section 13 (d), Civil Procedure Code, as held in *Pemberton v. Hughes*¹. If a judgment is pronounced by a foreign Court over persons within its jurisdiction and in a matter with which it is competent to deal, it was held in that case that English Courts will never investigate the propriety of the proceedings of the foreign Court unless they offend against the English views of substantial justice. Of course, one of the rules of substantial justice all over the world is that a man shall not be a Judge in his own cause, and that is the basis of the ruling in *Price v. Dewhurst*², where a judgment of a Danish Court, consisting of persons interested in the property in dispute, was held to be vitiated and was disregarded by the English Court. That is also the basis of disregarding foreign judgments where a party is not given notice of the hearing of the case, or is not allowed an opportunity of representing his case to the Court. This will all be opposed to natural justice under section 13 (d), and will make the Court, in most cases, not a Court of competent jurisdiction also under section 13 (a), Civil Procedure Code.

It is, therefore, clear to us that errors in procedure, interest of slight nature (like using cars, eating marriage dinners, etc.) mere suspected bias, pungent observations of Judges at hearings, a non-liberal attitude towards requests for constituting another Bench and not hearing the case themselves, and not granting adjournments for engaging eminent Counsel, will all be inadequate for vitiating a foreign judgment of a competent Court, as not affecting the jurisdiction or coming under any other exception mentioned in section 13, Civil Procedure Code. The Full Bench had given its judgment regarding the moveables on the merits of the case, under section 13 (b). That judgment was not founded on any incorrect view of international law, or a refusal to recognise the law of British India in cases in which such law is applicable, under section 13 (c), it being admitted before us that the Hindu law applicable to the parties and concerning the matter is the same in Mysore State as in Madras. Under the ruling of the Privy Council in *Nataraja v. Subbaraya*³, where the law is the same, the judgment of the foreign Court regarding moveables, over which it has jurisdiction, will be conclusive under section 13, Civil Procedure Code, unless vitiated by one of the exceptions in section 13, Civil Procedure Code, like being opposed to natural justice, etc.

It follows from the above discussion that we do not agree with the view of Rajagopalan, J., that a logical extension can be made of the well-settled principles of private international law on the point, and an enquiry into the motor car incident justified in order to show that Medappa, C.J., had so identified himself with the executors, who were alleged to have allowed him the use of the car, as to make him practically a person deciding his own cause, he having made the plaintiff's cause his own. It is not as if the plaintiffs had alleged that Medappa, C.J., had claimed the Mercedes car to be his own and was, therefore, not a person competent to decide on the title to the properties under section 13 (a). It was merely alleged that he used the car for himself and his wife and children. It was not even stated whether he had used the car free or for hire. There was no claim by the plaintiffs or others on Medappa, C.J., for any dues in respect of the alleged use of the car. The car itself was alleged to have been used in 1943-1945 when Medappa, C.J., was District Judge, Bangalore Cantonment, and was hearing the probate application. It was sold away in 1945 or 1946, long before Medappa, C.J., sat on this Full Bench. It is too much to say that from these facts, Medappa, C.J., would be coram non judge, or had identified himself with the executors and that his taking part in the Full Bench would be opposed to natural justice. Nor in our opinion, can the contention that Medappa, C.J. and Balakrishnayya, J., were disqualified to sit on the Full Bench by reason of previous acquaintance with the matters in dispute and forming opinions regarding the matters in dispute, come within any of the exceptions to sections 13, Civil Procedure Code, as interpreted by the Privy Council or our High Courts. Regarding Mallappa, J., nothing was alleged before us, and he was the person who wrote the judgment of the Full Bench in question. Incidentally, that will also militate against the allegation that the judgment of the Full Bench was ready before the hearing began, as it is this Judge, against whom nothing is alleged who wrote the judgment, and not Medappa, C.J. or Balakrishnaiah, J. However, we entirely agree with Rajagopalan, J., that the matter of the attempt to dissuade Mr. L. S. Raju from appearing for the plaintiffs, and alleged statements to him defaming the plaintiffs, will fall within section 13 (a) and section 13 (b), Civil Procedure Code, and amount to a denial of an opportunity to a party of presenting his case to the Court properly and make Medappa, C.J., coram non iudice and vitiate the Full Bench judgment, if proved. We cannot agree with Mr. Padmanabha Mudaliar that a mere allegation to that effect, without enquiring into it, or proof of it, will do to vitiate the judgment. Allegations and apprehensions will not do to vitiate a judgment (municipal or foreign) under our law. It is one thing for a Judge himself to decide not to hear a case which the party does not want him to hear, because of alleged fears of the party that he will not get an impartial hearing and judgment; it is quite another thing to hold a judgment to be vitiated when such a request is refused, as here. So too, it is one thing for the executors to decide not to raise the question of res judicata in this suit and rely on it but to prove by evidence let in in this suit, that the properties are the self-acquired properties of Ramalinga and not ancestral properties; it is quite another thing to compel them not to raise and rely on res judicata. It is obvious that a party is entitled to rely on res judicata and burk a trial, if he can do so under the law, and many reasons will operate on his mind in deciding on his course of action. What the law allows, a Court cannot disallow. So too, a mere statement by a party of alleged misconduct disentitling a Judge (like Medappa, C.J.) to sit on a Full Bench on the ground of incompetency or incongruity with natural justice, will not do. As observed by Jaimini, the Hindu expert on Mimamsa and Evidence, two thousand years ago, mere assertion is not proof, and repeated assertions cannot take the place of proof. So, Rajagopalan, J., was fully justified in holding that, even regarding the alleged attempt of Medappa, C.J., to dissuade Mr. L. S. Raju from appearing for the plaintiffs, and presenting their case to the Court, and thus disentitling him from sitting on the Full Bench, proof was necessary and mere allegation or assertion would not do.

In the end, therefore, we are of opinion that O.S.A. No. 84 of 1950 deserves to be dismissed with costs, and that O.S.A. No. 67 of 1950 deserves to be allowed in part, regarding the deletion of the enquiry ordered by Rajagopalan, J., into the Mercedes car incident, but has to be dismissed regarding all other findings, and we do so accordingly. The judgment of Rajagopalan, J., will be modified by deleting the enquiry into the Mercedes car episode, and confirmed in all other respects. In O.S.A. No. 67 of 1950, all the parties are directed to bear their own costs.

North Madras Firewood Trading Company

Respondent.

Madras General Sales Tax Act (IX of 1939), section 8—Commission Agent for procurement of firewood for Government for sale in ration shops—Not liable to sales tax.

Where the Government, instead of themselves buying firewood from the owners (for distribution through ration shops) gave a sort of monopoly to the respondents to procure from sellers the firewood and to supply the Government, and fixed a commission for the respondents, the respondents must be held to be merely commission agents to whom section 8 of the Madras General Sales Tax Act applied and they were not liable to pay the sales tax.

Appeal against the decree of the City Civil Court, Madras, dated 16th November, 1949, in O.S. No. 933 of 1947.

The Government Pleader (P. Satyanarayana Raju) for Appellant.

V. V. Srinivasa Aiyangar and N. R. Raghavachari for Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

The Chief Justice.—The State of Madras is the appellant before us. The appeal arises out of a suit brought by the respondents, a registered firm carrying on business in firewood, for a declaration that the demand for and levy of sales-tax on them by the State for the period ending 31st March, 1945, were illegal and unjustified and for a refund of the amount of such sales-tax paid by them. The learned Additional City Civil Judge decreed the suit, holding that the demand and levy were illegal.

The facts necessary for a disposal of this appeal may be stated briefly as the scope of the controversy in the suit lies within a narrow compass. In or about December, 1943, there was acute scarcity of firewood in the city and the Government were anxious to introduce in the city a system of rationing of firewood. For this purpose it was necessary to provide for a regular and satisfactory supply of firewood. The respondent-firm, who were engaged in firewood business, submitted to the Government that they had been carrying on the business of supplying firewood as commission agents for over 25 years, that if the Government were to get all their supplies direct from the producers it would entail them much expenditure and suggested that they may be employed to procure for the Government such quantity of firewood as the Government may require for distribution in the city. The Government apparently accepted the proposal. On 31st January, 1944, an agreement was entered into between the respondent-firm and the Commissioner of Civil Supplies, Madras, under which the respondents undertook to supply such quantity of firewood as the Commissioner may from time to time require from the private forests and topes in particular areas of Chingleput and Nellore districts. The respondents who were described as the "suppliers" were given exclusive monopoly to transport the firewood from these areas to the city. The firewood was to be supplied at prices which were fixed from time to time by the Government as the wholesale price for firewood within the city of Madras. This price was to be paid by the Collector of Madras to the suppliers. Paragraph 6 of this agreement is as follows :

"It is understood that ordinarily the suppliers will acquire the firewood by contract with the owners of the topes in the said areas The price fixed as the proper price for the same shall be in relation to the sale price such that the suppliers (after paying the purchase price and the expenses of cutting, transport and supply, etc.) will have such margin of profit as the Government may deem fair and proper."

In pursuance of this arrangement, the course of dealings between the three parties, viz., the producers, i.e., the owners of the firewood, the respondent-firm and the Government was as follows : The respondent-firm were transporting the firewood from the areas specified and collecting from the Collector, or to be more accurate from the dealers to whom the firewood was eventually consigned, the cost of firewood supplied by them, and after retaining a sum of Re. 0-13-0 per ton of casuarina and Re. 1-0-0 per ton of junglewood as their commission, paying over the balance to the sellers. It appears from the correspondence, that this rate of commission was fixed by the Government and agreed to by the owners of the firewood, i.e., the sellers. When, however, the respondents attempted to deduct more than the agreed rate of commission the sellers complained to the Government and we find the Board of Revenue passing proceedings warning the respondents against charging more than the agreed and fixed commission. Subsequently, there was another agreement entered into between the State and the respondent firm on 9th October, 1944, Exhibit B-4. Though the terms of this agreement were not identical with the terms of the prior agreement, there was no change in the course of dealings between the parties. A concrete instance of such dealings is to be found in a letter addressed by the Firewood Movement Officer, Nellore District, to the Collector of Nellore on 11th October, 1944, Exhibit A-19, wherein he states :

"Casuarina firewood is paid for at Rs. 23-8-0 per ton delivered at Madras wharf. Of this, a sum of Re. 0-13-0 is deduced by the Agency. This commission is authorised by the Government. The net price is therefore Rs. 22-11-0 per ton."

We are not concerned with the subsequent correspondence between the Government and the respondents and the complaints which sometimes the producers were making to the Government against the unauthorised levy of more than the agreed commission by the respondents.

The respondents firm obtained a licence under section 8 of the Madras General Sales Tax Act as commission agents. They returned a turn over of Rs. 8,72,914-15-9 for the year 1944-45 and submitted that they were entitled to the exemption under section 8 of the Act. When the Sales-tax Officers demanded sales tax on this turn over, the respondents objected on the ground that they had been supplying the firewood on behalf of the owners of the firewood who were the principal sellers and they took only such commission as was fixed by the authorities. This objection was, however, overruled. The Deputy Commercial Tax Officer held that having regard to the nature of the transaction and other attendant circumstances the business of the respondents could not be considered to have been done on commission basis and hence their entire turn over was liable to sales tax. The respondents filed an appeal to the Commercial Tax Officer, Madras, but the appeal was dismissed. The appellate authority took the view that though the respondents had been taking only a sum of Re. 0-13-0 or Re. 1-0-0 for every ton of firewood supplied to the Commissioner of Civil Supplies, they really sold the firewood to the Commissioner of Civil Supplies in fulfilment of a contract entered into by them as owners and they could not therefore be treated as selling agents of the persons from whom they got the firewood ; that they were not also buying agents for the Commissioner of Civil Supplies ; and they were therefore clearly liable, as dealers, to be taxed under the Madras General Sales Tax Act. Thereupon the suit out of which this appeal arises was filed.

The application of section 8 to the respondents depends upon a determination of the nature of the concerned transactions, i.e., we have to ascertain whether the respondents were buying or selling for an agreed commission on behalf of known principals. If, from the course of dealings it is clear that the respondents were buying or selling on their own behalf, then of course they will not be entitled to the benefit of the provisions of section 8. In our opinion, on the facts of the case, as to which there is no dispute, only one conclusion is possible, viz., that the respondents were acting merely as commission agents of the owners of the firewood, who were the known seller-principals. Though the language of the agreement, Exhibit B-4, may, taken by itself, support the contention that the respondents were treated by the Government as the sellers, there can be no doubt that the Government never treated the respondents that way. The Government knew, and proceeded throughout, on the basis that the sellers were the persons who owned the firewood. The Government, instead of themselves buying the firewood from the owners, gave a sort of monopoly to the respondents to procure from the sellers the firewood and to supply them, i.e., the Government. It was agreed, or in any event it must be taken as an implied terms of the agreement between the parties, that the respondent should get a commission, which itself was fixed by the Government. Ordinarily no doubt it is the principal who fixes the commission payable to the commission agent ; but it must not be overlooked that we are dealing with a set of circumstances out of the ordinary way. There was an emergency and the Government were acting under extraordinary powers conferred on them by emergency legislation in fixing the prices and in controlling the movement and distribution of essential commodities like firewood. That is, why we find the Government in the interests of all parties, fixing the commission payable to the respondents as agents for the owners of the firewood. The Government having proceeded all along on the assumption that all that the respondents were entitled to was commission at a fixed rate, cannot now claim to treat them as independent dealers.

We agree with the learned trial Judge's finding that the plaintiffs' dealings come within the meaning of section 8 of the Act and that therefore they are not liable to pay the tax.

The appeal therefore fails and is dismissed with costs.

Penal Code (XLV of 1860), section 100—Right of private defence—Limits.

Merely because the stab given by the accused is a little deeper than the one caused by the deceased it cannot be said that the accused is guilty of exceeding his right of private defence. It is not correct to say that a person apprehending danger to life or grievous hurt should inflict an injury of the same nature to the assailant as was caused to him. Under section 100, Indian Penal Code, the killing of an assailant is justified when the victim of the assault apprehends either death or grievous hurt. The only restriction imposed is that the person exercising the right should not use more force than is reasonably necessary and should not inflict an injury out of all proportion to the injury with which he was threatened. Where the assailant is killed by the victim exercising his right of private defence a conviction of the victim under section 304, Indian Penal Code, is not justified and he is entitled to an acquittal.

Appeal against the Order of the Court of Session of the Trichinopoly division in S.C. No. 59 of Calendar for 1951, dated 30th July, 1951, etc.

T. S. Kuppuswami Aiyar for Accused.

The Assistant Public Prosecutor (A. C. Muthanna) for the State.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Chandra Reddi, J.—Criminal Appeal No. 522 of 1951 is a jail appeal preferred by the first accused in Sessions Case No. 59 of 1951 against the judgment of the learned Sessions Judge of Trichinopoly, convicting him under section 304, Indian Penal Code, and sentencing him to three years' rigorous imprisonment while Criminal Appeal No. 237 of 1952 is by the State against the acquittal of the second accused in the same case. The charge against these two accused and accused 3 and 4, acquitted by the trial Court, was that all of them murdered one Ganesan on the 19th of November, 1950, at about 7 A.M.

The case for the prosecution is briefly this. There was longstanding animosity between the deceased on the one hand and accused 1 to 4 on the other and there were a number of clashes between them resulting in complaints and counter-complaints. Because of this ill-feeling between the parties, the deceased always used to carry a bitchuva with him.

On the morning of 19th November, 1950, when the deceased was going from his house towards the Uyyakondan river, the accused accosted him and asked him why he was collecting men to attack them. Not satisfied with this, the four accused beat the deceased with their hands. The reaction of the deceased to this was to meekly submit and to ask them to beat him further, if they so chose. Just at that time, P.W. 8 happened to pass that way when the deceased shouted out to him that the accused were beating him. P.W. 8 went away in order to fetch some help to the deceased. Meanwhile, the third accused taunted the deceased by asking him what would he do if he was beaten by him and followed this up by giving him a slap on his cheek. At once, the deceased pulled out the bitchuva (M.O. 1), which he was having in his waist and stabbed the third accused on the left shoulder. The first accused went to the rescue of the latter which led to the deceased stabbing the first accused over the right shoulder, the injury thus caused being $1\frac{1}{4}'' \times \frac{5}{8}'' \times \frac{1}{2}''$. The second accused, who happened to be nearby, in order to disable the deceased from inflicting any further injuries on the first accused caught the deceased from behind his waist. Immediately, the first accused wrenched the bitchuva from the hands of the deceased and inflicted an injury on the back of the deceased, which resulted in his death. The accused, thereupon, ran away from the scene.

P.W. 8, who returned to the scene of occurrence with one Olakkan found the deceased lying dead. P.W. 4 informed his brother-in-law, P.W. 5, about this occurrence and the latter gave a report, Exhibit P-1, to the Village Munsif. Upon this, the Village Munsif sent his reports, Exhibits P-5 and P-6 to the Police and the Magistrate. The Sub-Inspector P.W. 17, on receipt of this information, reached the village at about 10-30 A.M. held an inquest and sent the body for post mortem. He also recovered the bitchuva, which was used to stab the deceased from the house of the second accused on information given by the first accused.

The plea of the accused was that it was the conduct of the deceased that was responsible for the whole incident, that on that morning when the accused met them he questioned them as to why a complaint was filed by the first accused against him and why they showed his house to the police a few days before the occurrence and that he followed it up by stabbing the third accused and that when the first accused went to the rescue of the third accused, the deceased stabbed the first accused also on the back and the latter in the exercise of his right of private defence, stabbed the deceased once.

The Sessions Judge acquitted accused 3 and 4 holding that they did not take any part in the attack on the deceased. So far as the second accused is concerned, he observed that though he caught the deceased, which facilitated the first accused giving the fatal blow, he did it only with a view to prevent the deceased from inflicting any further injuries on the first accused and there was nothing criminal in what he did. For this reason the second accused was also acquitted.

The first accused, in the opinion of the learned Judge, was guilty of an offence under section 304, Indian Penal Code, and was sentenced to three years' rigorous imprisonment. The reasons given by the learned Sessions Judge for holding him guilty under section 304, Indian Penal Code, are rather interesting. The learned Judge, after finding that the whole thing took place in a sudden fight which was unpremeditated and that the first accused did not act in a cruel or an unusual manner or take undue advantage, stated that :

"The accused dealt a stab in the back just as the deceased had stabbed him in the back and with the same weapon. But the stab of the first accused went deeper than the stab dealt by the deceased. I consider that the 1st accused is also entitled to the benefit of exception (2)."

We do not agree with the learned Judge that merely because the stab given by the first accused is a little deeper than the one caused by the deceased, the first accused is guilty of exceeding his right of private defence. In our opinion, the first accused was entitled to cause the injury which he did in this case in the exercise of his right of private defence. It is not correct to say that a person apprehending danger to life or grievous hurt should inflict an injury of the same nature to the assailant as was caused to him. Under section 100, Indian Penal Code, the killing of an assailant is justified when the victim of the assault apprehends either death or grievous hurt. The only restriction imposed is that the person exercising the right should not use more force than is reasonably necessary and should not inflict an injury out of all proportion to the injury which he received or which he was threatened with. It must be noted here that the learned Sessions Judge found that at the time when the first accused dealt the fatal blow, he was not out of danger as the deceased might get back the bitchuva into his hands and also that there was no time for him to think coolly before acting. In these circumstances, we think that the conviction of the first accused under section 304, Indian Penal Code, is not justified and he is entitled to an acquittal. We, therefore, set aside the conviction and sentence passed on the appellant.

As regards the appeal filed by the State, we do not think that the order acquitting the second accused calls for interference. We have found that the first accused was justified in inflicting the injury on the deceased as he was acting in the exercise of his right of private defence. It should be observed that when the second accused caught the deceased from behind, it was only with a view to prevent the deceased from inflicting any further injuries on the first accused. Hence the second accused cannot be said to have committed any crime in doing so. He did it at great risk to his own person with intent to prevent the deceased from using the bitchuva more freely and causing the death of the first accused. We do not think that this deserves any condemnation. On the other hand we feel that he acted quite rightly in the circumstances of the case and that he does not deserve to be branded a criminal and sent to jail. We are told that the second accused, who is a postman, has been dismissed after the case was filed against him. In our opinion there are no grounds so far as this case is concerned to merit his dismissal or for not restoring him to his position. We think, he does not deserve to be punished.

In the result Criminal Appeal No. 237 of 1952 is dismissed.

Criminal Appeal No. 522 of 1951 allowed and Criminal Appeal No. 237 of 1952 dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908), Order 21, rule 52—Scope—Payment out of moneys ordered by Court though actual payment has not yet been made—Attachment of such amount by other creditors—Permissibility.

When once an order for payment out is made there cannot be any subsequent attachment of the moneys, even though the moneys continue to remain in Court and no cheque has been issued to the party in whose favour the payment out order has been made. Where however the judgment-debtor against whom an order for attachment has been made and the person in whose favour the order for payment out has been made are one and the same person, it cannot be said that the moneys still in the custody of the Court cannot be attached. In such a case the subsequent attachment can be given effect to.

E. R. Krishnan for Applicants.

S. Amudachari and G. Natarajan for Defendants.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Krishnaswami Nayudu, J.—This reference raises a question of some importance which comes up frequently for consideration on the Original Side of the High Court.

In and by the decree in Civil Suit No. 423 of 1949, the applicant herein, who is the third plaintiff in the suit, became entitled to a sum of Rs. 3,800-10-0 out of the entire sum standing to the credit of that suit. He asked for payment out of a sum of Rs. 3,753-2-0 being the balance he was entitled to, after retaining a sum of Rs. 47-8-0 being the cost of stamps for engrossing the decree. On 20th April, 1951, the learned Master passed an order ordering payment out. An order of attachment of the moneys standing to the credit of the applicant in this suit was issued by the Court of Small Causes in execution of a decree obtained by one Krishnamurthi Ayyar against the applicant in Small Cause Suit No. 361 of 1951 and the said order of attachment was received in this Court on 26th April, 1951. Attachment was effected by this Court, and the original order was returned after service. Though the attachment was subsequent to the order for payment out, a cheque was issued in favour of the applicant in pursuance of the order of the learned Master dated 20th April, 1951, after deducting the amount for which the attachment was issued. Objection having been taken to it, the matter is posted before me for orders.

The contention on behalf of the applicant is that once an order has been made for payment out there is no fund in Court available for attachment and that the order of attachment must have been returned with the endorsement that there is no fund in Court available for attachment. In support of this contention, the view expressed by Kumaraswami Sastri, J., on 27th January, 1926, in Civil Suit No. 774 of 1923 in almost similar circumstances is cited which is as follows :—

“ I think the correct rule is that, where a Court orders payment to be made, that order must be treated as if the payment had actually been made at the date of the order so as to prevent subsequent attachment on the money in Court. There is always a certain interval between the passing of the order and its issue and the payment being made on the strength of that order and I do not think that the party should be prejudiced simply because there is delay. When he has actually got the order the proper course is to treat the order of payment as an actual payment so far as the rights of third persons to attach are concerned.”

A different view was taken by Rajagopalan, J., in Application No. 794 of 1951, in Civil Suit No. 181 of 1948, by his order, dated 26th February, 1951. In that case, in pursuance of a decree passed on 30th January, 1951, in terms of the memorandum of compromise certain payments were directed to be made out of the funds in Court to the parties to the compromise decree. Subsequent to the date of the decree, two attachments were received on 7th February, 1951. A similar reference was made to Rajagopalan, J., and the learned counsel for the applicant in whose favour payment out order had been made relied upon the judgment of Kumaraswami Sastri, J., in Civil Suit No. 774 of 1923, dated 27th January, 1926. The attaching decree-holder in Civil Suit No. 181 of 1948 took out application No. 794 of 1951 for directions to retain the attached amount, viz., Rs. 1,604-4-0 and send it to the transmitting Court. With reference to the respective contentions of the applicant in whose favour payment out has been ordered and the attaching decree-holder, the learned Judge observed as follows :—

“ From the records I find that there was an order of attachment issued by the Registrar, Court of Small Causes, to attach a sum of Rs. 1,604-4-0 and that the attachment was executed and the warrant returned. Mr. D. R. Krishna Rao for the respondent contends that since there was an order passed by this Court that the amount including this amount of Rs. 1,604-4-0 should be paid over to the respondent and since that order was long prior to the attachment effected at the instance of the applicant, the money vested in the respondent on the date of the order of this Court, and that there was therefore nothing still in the custody of the Court which could be attached under Order 21, rule 52, Civil Procedure Code. But I cannot be called upon to pronounce upon the soundness of this contention or otherwise in these proceedings. The attachment was ordered by the Court of Small Causes, and the validity of that attachment will be for the Court of Small Causes to decide. It is perfectly open to the respondent to move the competent Court to decide whether the attachment which had been ordered to be effected and which has been effected in pursuance of that order is valid or not. If the attachment is set aside by the attaching Court, then the money will be available for payment out to the respondent. But I am unable to accept the contention of Mr. D. R. Krishna Rao for the respondent, that it is for this Court to decide whether the order of attachment issued by the Court of Small Causes was validly executed or not.”

This view of Rajagopalan, J., apparently proceeds on the language of the proviso to Order 21, rule 52, Civil Procedure Code, which provides that :

“ Where such property is in the custody of a Court any question of title or priority arising between the decree-holder and any other person, not being the judgment-debtor, claiming to be interested in such property by virtue of any assignment, attachment or otherwise, shall be determined by such Court.”

The proviso to Order 21, rule 52 comes into operation only after there has been an attachment of the fund in Court. Only when there is a fund in Court which would be available for attachment in pursuance of an order issued by another Court, the claim relating to the fund attached should properly be raised before the Court which issued the order of attachment. Could it, however, be said in the present case that, after an order for payment out had been made on 20th April, 1951, there was any fund in Court available for attachment under the order issued by the Court of Small Causes? Under Order 21, rule 52, if the property to be attached is in the custody of any Court the attachment shall be made by a notice to such Court requesting that such Court may hold the property subject to further orders of the Court from which the notice is issued.

The sum of Rs. 3,753-2-0 ordered to be paid out was no doubt in the custody of the Court on 26th April, 1951, when the order of attachment was received. But it is not sufficient if the property (here money) was in the custody of the Court. It must have been in the custody of the Court to the credit of the judgment-debtor, i.e., the third plaintiff-applicant, or it must be shown that the money was held on his behalf. In view of the order for payment out made on 20th April, 1951, from the date of the order the money must be deemed to have been held on behalf of the person in whose favour the order for payment out has been made. Further, once an order for payment out has been made, it must be treated that the property in these moneys has passed to the person in whose favour the order has been made; and from that date of the order, the person, who has got the payment out order in his favour, becomes the owner of the moneys, notwithstanding that he may not have got actual possession of the same. As was observed by Kumaraswami Sastri, J., once an order for payment out has been made, it must be treated that payment out has been actually made and whatever amount that was ordered to be paid out, belonged to him and it cannot be made available to the claims of third parties to that amount. There can therefore be no valid attachment of these moneys subsequent to the order for payment out. On the passing of the order which is the judicial act, the property is transferred to the person in whose favour the order is made and the issue of a cheque or payment of the money is a ministerial act and any delay in the performance of which could not prejudice the right of the person who has obtained the order for payment out. For instance suppose an immovable property has been in the possession of a receiver appointed by Court, it must be treated to be in the Court's custody. If during the possession of the property in the hands of the receiver, an order for sale is made by the Court and the sale in favour of any purchaser is confirmed and if after such confirmation and before actual delivery of possession of the property by the receiver to the purchaser an attachment order of the property is received, it cannot be said that the property could be validly attached. The circumstance that the possession continued to be with the receiver notwithstanding that the sale in favour of the third party has been confirmed, would not be sufficient to treat the property as the property of the parties on whose behalf the receiver was appointed. The correct and also the reasonable view that could be taken in such cases is that when once an order for payment out is made, there cannot be any subsequent attachment of the moneys, even though the moneys continue to remain in Court and no cheque has been issued to the party.

In the present case the difficulty, however arises in view of the judgment-debtor in the Small Cause suit against whom an order for attachment has been made and the applicant in whose favour the order for payment out has been made are one and the same person, viz., the third plaintiff. If the applicant in the application for payment out is a third party, the principle that is now laid down will be applicable and the third party—applicant would be entitled to the amount once the order for payment out is made, notwithstanding any order of attachment subsequently received on the ground that the funds in Court ceased to be held on behalf of the judgment-debtor under the order of attachment. It is, however, stated by Mr. E. R. Krishnan, learned Counsel for the applicant, that the two persons are different, the decree in the Small Cause Court being against the third plaintiff in his capacity as the executor of Chokkammal, while the payment out order here was in his favour. But a reference to the decree in this Court shows that he was added as an executor of the first plaintiff Chokkammal and the payment out order could only be in his capacity as executor of Chokkammal, who is the first plaintiff in this suit. There is certainly therefore no difference between his position in this suit and his position in the Small Cause suit. So, in this case, the property, though it ceases to be in the custody of the Court, does not cease to be held by the Court on behalf of the judgment-debtor in the Small Cause suit, who is the very same person as the applicant. The amount would therefore stand to the credit of the applicant—third plaintiff. It cannot therefore be contended that the judgment-debtor who is the third plaintiff-applicant has ceased to have any interest in the amount and therefore the amount cannot be attached. I am of the opinion that in this case the attachment must be given effect to and the payment out could only be in respect of such amount that is available after deducting the amount mentioned in the warrant of attachment.

Court-fee—Suit by quondam minor to set aside various alienations made at different times by the guardian—Court-fee is payable separately on the several alienations—Court-Fees Act (VII of 1870), section 17—Applicability.

Where the guardian of the plaintiff when he was a minor alienated the minor's properties in favour of various defendants at various times and places, and the quondam minor sues to set aside such alienations it cannot be said that the cause of action or the subject-matter as against all the defendants is the same. Accordingly court-fee must be paid on the several alienations separately.

Petition under section 115 of Act V of 1908, praying that the High Court will be pleased to revise the Order of the Subordinate Judge's Court of Kumbakonam, dated 19th April, 1951, in O.S. No. 16 of 1946.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—The order of the learned Subordinate Judge directing court-fee to be paid on the several alienations separately is correct. This is a case where the fourth defendant as guardian of the plaintiff when he was a minor alienated minor's properties in favour of various defendants at various times and places. It cannot be said that the cause of action as against all the defendants is the same. But it is contended on behalf of the petitioner that the subject is the same and therefore section 17 of the Court-fees Act would not be applicable. What that section says is that where a suit embraces two or more distinct-subjects court-fee has to be paid separately on the value of each subject and not on the aggregate value of all the reliefs. There is no doubt that each of the alienations is a different subject and court-fee has to be paid on them separately. The learned advocate for the petitioner relies upon two decisions of this Court in *Parameswara Pattar, In re*¹ and *Thangaswami Pillai v. Dhanabagiammal*². Neither of these cases is one to set aside the alienations in favour of different persons at different times and in my opinion these cases cannot apply.

This civil revision petition is dismissed with costs. The petitioner will be given two months' time from this date to pay the court-fee.

The Public Prosecutor

*Appellant

P. V. Audinarayana Chetty

(Accused).

Criminal Procedure Code (V of 1898), section 417—Charges for offences under Penal Code (XLV of 1860), section 161 and Prevention of Corruption Act (II of 1947), section 5—Conviction for offence under section 161, Penal Code by trial Court and acquittal on appeal—Appeal by State against acquittal under Penal Code, section 161 only—Powers of appellate Court to review the evidence at large and come to its own conclusion—Limits.

Where an appeal is preferred by the State under section 417, Criminal Procedure Code, unlike in a Criminal Revision Petition preferred by a private party against an acquittal, it is open to the High Court to review at large the evidence upon which an order of acquittal is founded and the Code makes no distinction between an appeal from an acquittal and an appeal from a conviction. In an appeal from an acquittal if the Court thinks the lower Court has taken an erroneous view of the evidence it has no jurisdiction to refuse to convict. In reviewing at large the evidence, the court has to consider such matters as (i) the views of the trial Judge as to the credibility of the witnesses, (ii) the presumption of innocence in favour of the accused, (iii) the right of the accused to the benefit of any doubt and (iv) the slowness of an appellate court in disturbing a finding of fact arrived at by a Judge who had the advantage of seeing the witnesses. Where the lower appellate court without considering these matters has reversed the conviction and sentence of the trial Court, the High Court can itself review the evidence and arrive at its conclusion.

Though the trial Court acquitted the accused in respect of an offence under the Prevention of Corruption Act (II of 1947) and convicted the accused only under section 161, Indian Penal Code and the lower appellate Court acquitted the accused; in an appeal against such acquittal under section 161, Indian Penal Code, only the whole evidence can be looked into for the purpose of finding out whether a charge under section 161, Indian Penal Code, has been made or not for the limited purpose permissible under sections 5 to 9, 11, 14, and 15 of the Indian Evidence Act.

Appeal under section 417 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, against the acquittal of the aforesaid Respondent (Accused) by the Court of Session of Chittoor Division in Criminal Appeal No. 36 of 1950, preferred against the Order of the Assistant Sessions Judge, Chittoor Division, in S.C. No. 17 of 1950.

The Public Prosecutor (V. T. Rangaswami Aiyangar) for the Appellant.

V. Rajagopalachari and S. Ramachandra Ayyar for the Respondents.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal preferred against the acquittal by the learned Sessions Judge of Chittoor Division Mr. M. A. Azeem reversing the conviction under section 161, Indian Penal Code (i.e., receiving illegal gratification by a Supervisor of Highways) and sentence of one year's rigorous imprisonment awarded by the learned Assistant Sessions Judge of Chittoor Division Sri D. R. Venkatesa Ayyar, M.L., in S.C. No. 17 of 1950.

[His Lordship then sets out the facts elaborately the gist of which was as follows : The accused a Supervisor in the Highways Department, Madras State, was alleged to have been taking bribes as fixed mamools from various contractors and on one of such contractors moving in the matter a trap was laid and marked currency notes given by the contractor were recovered from the accused by the Police. There was also other evidence. The accused was charge-sheeted for offences under sections 5 (i) (a) and (d) and 5 (2) of the Prevention of Corruption Act (II of 1947) and also for an offence under section 161, Indian Penal Code. The Stationary Sub-Magistrate after a preliminary enquiry committed the accused to the Sessions and the accused was tried by the Assistant Sessions Judge.]

The learned Assistant Sessions Judge has after thoroughly analysing the evidence with great care in an elaborate judgment come to the conclusion that the offence regarding the first charge, viz., habitual taking of bribes was not made out because of two reasons, namely, that in regard to these payments these contractors stood in the position of accomplices or willing payers of the bribes and that therefore their evidence required independent corroboration in regard to each of them and that in this case, though he accepted the testimony of the four contractors themselves there was such independent corroboration only as regards the testimony of P.W. 7 in regard to the transaction covered by Exhibit P-5 and that therefore the charge under the Prevention of Corruption Act II of 1947 failed as this solitarily corroborated instance would be inadequate to support the finding of habitual bribe-taking which is contemplated under section 5 (1) (a) and (2) of Act II of 1947. In regard to the offence under section 161, Indian Penal Code, the learned Assistant Sessions Judge agreeing with the unanimous opinion of the four assessors in the case came to the conclusion that the charge had been brought home by reliable and corroborative evidence against this accused and convicted him thereunder and sentenced him to one year's rigorous imprisonment.

In appeal, the learned Sessions Judge of Chittoor Mr. M. A. Azeem came to the conclusion that the charge under section 161, Indian Penal Code, had not been brought home to the accused and acquitted him. The State of Madras has thereupon preferred this appeal.

Before discussing the evidence in this case I must briefly point out that this being an appeal preferred by the State under section 417, Criminal Procedure Code, unlike a criminal revision petition preferred by a private party against an acquittal, it is open to the High Court to review at large the evidence upon which an order of acquittal is founded and the code makes no distinction between an appeal from an acquittal and an appeal from a conviction. In an appeal from an acquittal if the Court thinks the lower Court has taken an erroneous view of the evidence it has no jurisdiction to refuse to convict : see *Emperor v. Moti Khoda*¹. This Court has laid down that in reviewing at large the evidence upon an order of acquittal, the High Court has to consider such matters as (i) the views of the trial Judge as to the credibility of the witnesses, (ii) the presumption of innocence in favour of the accused, (iii) the right of the accused to the benefit of any doubt, and (iv) the slowness of an appellate Court in disturbing a finding of fact arrived at by a Judge who had the advantage of seeing the witnesses : *Sheo Swarup v. Emperor*². But in this case we have the opposite, viz., the lower appellate Court without considering these matters has reversed the conviction and sentence of the learned Assistant Sessions Trial Judge. And yet, bearing in mind these considerations laid down by this Court I shall review the evidence and arrive at my conclusion.

The other point to be borne in mind is that in regard to two charges based upon several acts of bribe-taking including the receiving of illegal gratification of Rs. 300 the subject-matter of the trap, the trial Court itself on the ground that adequate corroboration was not forthcoming, acquitted the accused in respect of offences under Act II of 1947 and convicted him under section 161, Indian Penal Code. This appeal to the High Court has been preferred only against the acquittal under section 161, Indian Penal Code, and in such a case can the whole evidence be looked into for the purpose of finding out whether the charge under section 161, Indian Penal Code, has been made out or not? This has been answered in the affirmative in a decision of this Court in *In re Rangarao*³. In that case an accused was charged for the offence of cheating effectuated by means of forgery, that is to say, for offences under sections 420 and 467, Indian Penal Code. The accused was acquitted in regard to cheating and convicted for forgery. On appeal a reference was made to the High Court by the Sessions Judge and the High Court answered the reference as follows :

"The whole evidence is before the Court. He is entitled if he thinks fit, to express his disagreement with the findings of fact in the acquittal although there being no appeal the acquittal still stands. He is not in the least bound by any finding of facts in the acquittal. The fact that the trial Judge was able to acquit of cheating and convict of forgery makes evident that this is not a case when on precisely the same facts a man is tried for two offences. . . . The reference will be returned to the learned Sessions Judge with these observations. He can come to his conclusion with regard to the appeal against the conviction under section 467 quite untrammelled by the fact

1. (1923) 26 B.L.R. 113.

I.L.R. 56 All. 645 (P.C.).

2. (1934) 67 M.L.J. 664 : L.R. 61 I.A. 398 :

3. (1945) 1 M.L.J. 183.

that the acquittal under section 420 of the Indian Penal Code stands. It may act as a plea in bar to further trial of cheating but does not in the least act as a plea in bar with regard to the facts in so far as they are relevant in considering the charge of forgery."

But fortunately in this case the evidence for the offence under section 161, Indian Penal Code, stands apart from and was not the subject-matter of adjudication in respect of the offences under Act II of 1947. This was so because the habitual bribe-taking constituted the preliminary part and the offence under section 161, Indian Penal Code, constituted the sequel as a result of the trap to catch this habitual bribe-taker. Therefore, it is not necessary in this case to consider or make use of the evidence on which the acquittal of the trial Court was based though I need not point out it can be made use of wherever relevant and proved in the adjudication of this offence under section 161, Indian Penal Code, for the limited purpose permissible under sections 5 to 9, 11, 14 and 15 of the Indian Evidence Act.

There is no dispute regarding the recovery of the three one-hundred rupee currency notes from the person of the accused at the bus stand by P.W. 15, and the only point of dispute is according to the prosecution these notes had been given by P. W. 1 as an illegal gratification in the circumstances set out by them and in order to catch the accused red-handed and according to the accused P.W. 1, Rangiah Naidu gave him the three currency notes at the Koneri near the bus stand in the following circumstances: The explanation of the accused is that when he met Rangiah Naidu the latter expressed inability to leave Tirupathi to Puttur on account of a case in Court and that Rangiah Naidu's son-in-law would be waiting at the Puttur bus stand expecting Rangiah Naidu with money and that Rangiah Naidu requested him to take the three currency notes to be handed over to his son-in-law and that the accused undertook the errand with a view to help the coolies so that the work would not suffer and that at that time one T. Ramakrishnayya (D.W. 1) was in his company.

On a review of the entire circumstances of the case I have come to the conclusion that the prosecution had brought home beyond reasonable doubt that the three currency notes recovered from the accused had been received by him as an illegal gratification as alleged by the P.W.s and in the circumstances set out by them and incidentally that the explanation which the accused has put forward to give an innocent origin for his possession is thoroughly false. I shall now set out my reasons.

The first and foremost point in regard to this explanation by the accused to be borne in mind is that it is a deliberate after-thought and that it was not forthcoming when these three currency notes were recovered from him. This is the evidence of the concerned persons. P.W. 1 states:

"At the direction of the Deputy Superintendent of Police the accused got down from the bus.

Q.—What did the Deputy Superintendent of Police ask the accused?

A.—Where is the three hundred rupee notes that Rangiah Naidu (pointing to me) gave you as bribe? (On objection as to admissibility I hold that the portion of the sentence 'as bribe' is inadmissible since it is presumption of commission of guilt and invites confession from accused either by express statement or conduct). Accused took out two money purses from his inside coat pocket. From an old money purse M.O. 2 he took out three (one hundred) hundred-rupee currency notes and handed them over to the Deputy Superintendent of Police. He asked Raghava Reddy to verify if the numbers on the currency notes agreed with the numbers in Exhibit P-4. . . . The accused was arrested and taken to his house by the Deputy Superintendent of Police."

P. W. 2 Dr. Simham gave similar evidence and stated:

"The Deputy Superintendent of Police asked the accused to produce the money (portion relating to 'given as bribe' held inadmissible). The accused stood without talking for a while. He then unbuttoned his coat and took out two purses. . . ."

P.W. 4 mentioned:

"At Deputy Superintendent of Police's direction he (accused) got down the bus and the Deputy Superintendent of Police asked him where the money he took was ('as bribe' directed to be omitted being inadmissible). Accused got a fright and after five minutes unbuttoned his coat etc., etc."

P. W. 15 the Deputy Superintendent of Police stated similarly. There was no suggestion in cross-examination of these witnesses about the present explanation given by the accused. Now, if really this accused had received the three hundred-rupee currency notes as a good samaritan to be handed over to the son-in-law of P.W. 1 for disbursement to coolies so that the work would not suffer and public interest would be safe as he says, would he not have pointed out P.W. 1 then and there and told all these people present that the money was given to him by P.W. 1 in the circumstances now mentioned by him. Therefore this explanation is a deliberate after-thought evolved later to suit the exigencies of the evidence.

This accused has examined one Ramakrishnayya as D.W. 1 in support of his explanation. The evidence of that witness was disbelieved by the trial Court, viz., the experienced and learned Assistant Sessions Judge who has analysed the evidence of D.W. 1 in paragraph 31 of his judgment. The evidence of this witness has to be read in order to be disbelieved as a tissue of falsehoods. He is stated to have met this accused by chance and accompanied him to the bus stand. His answers in cross-examination showed that he was not acquainted with this accused at all except on that occasion and in any case excepting as a co-passenger in the buses at some earlier period. It is unlikely that such a person would go along with this accused in the manner mentioned by him. Then the learned Assistant Sessions Judge has not believed him in regard to his having pretended to have remembered this incident of the handing over the three currency notes because he was not present at the subsequent development in the bus stand and which would have fixed in his mind the giving of the currency notes by P.W. 1 to the accused. On the other hand he is said to have left on his own work without going to the bus stand. This witness had no special reason for noting either the handing over of the currency notes or the remembering of the alleged conversation. This witness stated that the accused put the currency notes in a money purse of a particular description which detail on comparison with the actual purse in which the notes were recovered is found to be false. Therefore the learned Assistant Sessions Judge who had the advantage of seeing this witness in the box has declined to accept his testimony and this is a circumstance entitled to weight. I have no doubt that this witness has been giving perjured testimony suborned to on that behalf by the accused.

This need not detain us further because it is not for the accused to prove his innocence and it is for the prosecution to prove his guilt. It is on that footing that we shall examine the rest of the evidence.

In regard to the handing over of the three currency notes as a bribe in pursuance of a trap, we have first of all evidence to show that from this very contractor this accused has been taking other amounts not to speak of other contractors P.Ws. 7, 11 and 12, and whose evidence has not been disbelieved at all. In the case of this P.W. 1 this accused has been pressing him to cough up the money promised to him. This evidence comes from not only P.W. 1 but also from P.W. 5. This P.W. 5 testifies :

"Fifteen days before the accused was arrested he had asked to bring P.W. 1 Rangiah Naidu. I could not find P.W. 1 when I first visited his house. I went a second time and met him in the house. P.W. 1 Rangiah Naidu replied saying that he would come. I went away but he did not come to see the supervisor (accused). About 4 days before arrest accused again wanted P.W. 1 to come. I met P.W. 1 and told him. He asked me to tell the accused that he could not be found."

This evading by Rangiah Naidu to meet the accused, and on the other hand his making arrangements to get the accused trapped, is consistent only with his giving the money to the accused as a bribe in pursuance of a trap and not being handed over to his son-in-law for disbursement to coolies.

Then we have evidence of the petitions put in by P.W. 1 and Venkataraju and the corroboration evidence of the Divisional Engineer Mr. N. T. Gnana-prakasam (P.W. 13) and the Deputy Superintendent of Police P.W. 15 about the bribe-givings to the accused, the accused's pressure to increase the mamool to 10 per cent. and the evading of the payment on the last bills cashed by P.W. 1 and Venkataraju. These facts show beyond doubt that this P. W. 1 could not have employed the accused to take the three currency notes for disbursement to the coolies by his son-in-law.

In fact, the accused's own version is that on account of bitter ill-feelings between himself and this P.W. 1 and other contractors they have foisted this false case on him. If that were so would this accused, as pertinently pointed out by the learned Assistant Sessions Judge, have allowed himself to be saddled with the three hundred-rupee notes by one of his ill-wishers out to ruin him according to the accused and would he have agreed to be the messenger with such tell-tale sum of money.

There is further clear evidence that at that stage no contract work of this Rangiah Naidu was going on at Puttur. In fact, if such work had been going on necessitating the disbursement of a large sum of money this supervisor would have easily proved it. On the other hand the only bit of evidence on which the accused relies is that of P.W. 5 :

"No work on the road was being done during the period of the arrest of the supervisor. Some 10 or 15 coolies were doing stone-blasting work."

In such circumstances would a sum of Rs. 300 be given and that too in the shape of hundred-rupee currency notes for disbursement to coolies and this accused imagining that thereby he would be promoting public interest and non-stoppage of work in progress. This story will not appeal even to the meanest intelligence as a plausible one.

There is no evidence whatsoever that at any time before this, accused has acted as a messenger like this for transmission of money either for this Rangiah Naidu or for any other contractor. The learned Assistant Sessions Judge has pertinently pointed out :

"Nor is it possible to believe that the son-in-law would have been waiting, for witness Rangiah Naidu himself had arranged to go and pay and if the difficulty arose only on account of an unexpected detention in Tirupathi. If no work was actually going on for some days before that date and no wages were therefore due to coolies it is not likely that Rangiah Naidu would have represented that wages had to be paid to the coolies, nor is it probable or likely that accused would have believed any such representation."

In these circumstances the learned Assistant Sessions Judge after a careful and exhaustive enquiry and after bearing in mind the relevant principles laid down by several High Court decisions regarding corroboration, came to the conclusion that the accused received the three currency notes as gratification for himself and that the prosecution in such a case was entitled to ask for a presumption under section 4 of Act II of 1947, viz., that the gratification was a motive or reward such as was mentioned in section 161, Indian Penal Code, and agreeing with the opinion of the four assessors in this case, convicted the accused under section 161, Indian Penal Code.

The learned Sessions Judge has based his acquittal for the reasons given by him in paragraph 11 of his judgment as follows. The first reason is :

"The evidence of P.W. 1 cannot be sufficient for basing a conviction unless it is corroborated in material particulars by other reliable evidence. There is no direct evidence to corroborate P.W. 1 as to the conversation between him and the accused before or at the moment of delivery of M.O. 4 series to the accused."

In advancing this reason the learned Sessions Judge seems to consider that corroboration must consist in the shape of direct oral testimony and which it need not be as laid down in the leading decision of *R. v. Baskerville*¹. We can look to circumstantial details for such corroboration and how such corroborative evidence has been forthcoming in this case has been indicated above. In fact, the learned Sessions Judge himself very considerably weakens his own reasoning by adding :

"It is true that three one hundred rupee currency notes could not have been used in payment of wages without being changed into smaller currency notes or coins."

The second reason is :

"It cannot be said to be improbable that in order to make the accused take the money and put it into his pocket P.W. 1 made the representations alleged in the accused's statement and that the accused believed the representation and agreed to oblige P.W. 1."

This is merely begging the question because the point to be decided itself is when the accused put the money into his pocket did he receive it as a bribe or as an obliging messenger. The third reason given is :

"The fact that P.W. 1 made accusations against the accused in his (P.W. 1's complaints Exhibits P-1, P-2 and P-3 prior to the occurrence cannot by itself be sufficient corroboration of P.W. 1's evidence about the occurrence."

Why not? The learned Sessions Judge does not indicate why he considers this to be so. The fourth reason is of the same variety, viz., that P.W. 1's avoiding to meet the accused is not corroboration. Why not? Once again the learned Sessions Judge does not indicate. The fifth reason of the learned Sessions Judge is :

"It seems to me that the trap was closed rather too early without giving the accused an opportunity to commit himself by his subsequent dealings with M.O. 4 series. If P.W. 1 had paid the money inside the bus or if the accused had been watched after the payment until he reached Puttur and began to deal with M.O. 4 series some clear corroborative evidence might have been available."

I am unable to follow this reasoning of the learned Sessions Judge who seems to think that he would have arranged the trap more cleverly than the C.I.D. officer, and in any event I am unable to see its relevance or logic. Sixthly, the learned Sessions Judge makes much of the immaterial discrepancy, viz., that when the Deputy Superintendent of Police asked the accused to hand up the money taken as bribe one witness said that the accused got a fright and after five minutes unbuttoned his coat and another witness said that he stood motionless without talking for a while and a third said that he did not tremble. But it is curious that the learned Sessions Judge does not say that on account of these discrepancies he disbelieves these witnesses but merely contents himself with the remark "There are discrepancies" without finding whether they are more apparent than real or cut at the root of the prosecution story. It has been laid down by several High Courts that immaterial discrepancies of this nature do not affect the conclusion one way or the other. See *Emperor v. Narotam*¹, *Ghanshyam Singh v. Emperor*² and *Mahla Singh v. Emperor*³. It is not surprising that this inconsequential discussion of the evidence of the learned Sessions Judge has been wound up with an observation from the decision in *Hector Huntley v. King Emperor*⁴, wholly overlooking that the learned Assistant Sessions Judge himself, an officer of great experience and considerable ability, has scrupulously weighed the evidence and come to his conclusion in the light of the principles laid down in this very decision. On the other hand it is the treatment accorded to the evidence by the learned Sessions Judge which recalls the dissatisfaction expressed by one of the eminent Judges of this Court the late Mr. Justice Sri V. Bhashyam Aiyengar in *Ramaswami Goundan v. King Emperor*⁵ about over-subtilising of the law of the country for the protection of corrupt officials and not for the furtherance of justice.

I have therefore not the slightest hesitation in setting aside the acquittal by the learned Sessions Judge of Chittoor, and I find the accused guilty of the offence under the second charge, viz., section 161, Indian Penal Code, and convict him thereunder and sentence him to one year's rigorous imprisonment.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—The learned Subordinate Judge finds as a question of fact that the petitioner paid Rs. 550 to the mother of D.W. 1 only for the sake of continuing as shanbogue and in consideration of D.W. 1 not reverting to that post. On that finding the question is whether the Kaikada suffers from the infirmity mentioned in section 23 of the Contract Act as being opposed to public policy. It has been held in *Swaminatha Aiyar v. Muthuswami Pillai*¹, that an undertaking to pay money to a public servant to induce him to retire and thus make way for the appointment of the promisor is practically trafficking in office and as such void under section 23 of the Contract Act. Here a sum of money was paid to the mother of the previous shanbhogue in order that the shanbhogue should not revert to the office. The decision in *Swaminatha Aiyar v. Muthuswami Pillai*¹ applies to the facts of the present case. But Mr. Nambiar contends that this defence was not raised in the reply to the lawyer's notice. Even if that is so, when once it is found on the evidence which cannot be disputed here, that the money was paid as consideration for an object which is opposed to public policy, it cannot be said that the learned Judge erred in dismissing the suit. The civil revision petition is therefore dismissed with costs.

*Appellants

v.

The Ceded District Auto Transport Co., Ltd., Kurnool, represented by its Managing Director at Kurnool and others

Respondents.

Motor Vehicles Act (IV of 1939), section 64 (a) and (b) and section 68—Rules under—Rule 208—Bus route extended—Permit—Order of Regional Authority—Appeal against order to Central Road Traffic Board—Whether appeal lies—Whether Government has jurisdiction to revise order.

On the questions whether there was a right of appeal to the Central Road Traffic Board against an order of the Regional Transport Authority refusing to grant the application of the appellants to extend the route of their bus service, and whether the Government's order passed in the exercise of their revisional jurisdiction confirming the order of the Central Road Traffic Board was void, Held, that under clause (b) of section 64 of the Motor Vehicles Act and rule 208 of the Rules framed by Government under the Act by virtue of section 68 of the Act, the order of the Regional Transport Authority will not be appealable.

The rule-making authority would not be within their powers in conferring a new right of appeal expressly or by implication. Rule 208, therefore, could not be construed in such a manner as to transgress limits of the power of the rule-making authority as laid down and circumscribed in section 68 of the Act. R. and W. Paul, Ltd. v. Wheat Commission, (1937) A.C. 139, applied.

The application of the procedure applicable to the disposal of the applications for grant of a permit to cases of variation of the condition of a permit, does not even by implication carry with it a right of appeal.

Case-law reviewed.

The Central Road Traffic Board had no jurisdiction to entertain the appeal against the order of the Regional Transport Authority, nor was the Government right in confirming the order in its exercise of revisional jurisdiction.

T. R. Srinivasan and V. V. Raghavan for Appellants.

The Government Pleader (P. Satyanarayana Raju) and S. Obul Reddi for Respondents.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Satyanarayana Rao, J.—This Letters Patent Appeal is against the judgment of our learned brother, Subba Rao, J., setting aside the order of the Government and that of the Central Road Traffic Board and allowing writ petition No. 282 of 1951 to quash the orders. The only question, that was debated before him and now before us, is whether there was a right of appeal to the Central Road Traffic Board against the order of the Regional Transport Authority dated 31st August, 1950, refusing to grant the application of the appellants to extend the route of the bus service from Atmakur to Velgode. The learned Judge held that the appeal was incompetent, that therefore the order of the Central Road Traffic Board extending the permit in favour of the appellants to Velgode was without jurisdiction, and that the order passed by the Government in the exercise of their revisional jurisdiction confirming the order of the Central Road Traffic Board was also void.

In order to appreciate the contention that the appeal to the Central Road Traffic Board is incompetent, it is necessary to state a few relevant facts. The appellants, two in number, were running buses along the route Kurnool-Atmakur from the year 1944 under permits granted by the Regional Transport Authority in that year. In 1949, it was decided by the Regional Transport Authority to extend the route to Velgode, i.e., a place beyond Atmakur. Applications for that route were filed by the first respondent and also by the appellants. On 16th June, 1950, the Regional Transport Authority called for objections to grant the permits for the extended route to the applicants. By an order of 28th June, 1950, the Regional Transport Authority granted a permit to the first respondent to run his buses up to Velgode. The application by the appellants, however, was not disposed of till 31st August, 1950, when the Regional Transport Authority made an order rejecting their application. The order of 28th June, 1950, granting a permit to the first respondent was not carried on appeal by the appellants. The order made on their application was the subject-matter of an appeal to the Central Road Traffic Board, and notwithstanding the objection of the first respondent that the appeal was incompetent, the Central Road Traffic Board, overruling the objection, set aside the order of the Regional Transport Authority and granted permits in favour of the appellants also, extending their service to Velgode. The first respondent carried the matter unsuccessfully in revision to the Government, and thereafter he filed a writ petition, which was disposed by Subba Rao, J. As stated above, he allowed the application and held that the appeal to the Central Road Traffic Board by the appellants against the order of the Regional Transport Authority dated 31st August, 1950, was incompetent.

In this appeal by the appellants their learned counsel, Mr. Bhashyam, adopted a line of argument which was not the one adopted by him before Subba Rao, J. It is unnecessary therefore to deal in detail with the reasoning of the learned Judge by which he arrived at the conclusion, that the appeal to the Central Road Traffic Board was incompetent. It will be sufficient if we deal in this appeal with the arguments as presented before us by Mr. Bhashyam, the learned counsel for the appellants. He attempted to maintain his position that the appeal was competent by relying upon clauses (a) and (b) of section 64. He further relied on rule 208 of the Rules framed by the Government under the Motor Vehicles Act by virtue of the power conferred upon the Provincial Government by section 68 of the Act. His contention based on the said rule was that the applications made by the appellants should be treated as applications for the grant of a permit as laid down by that Rule, and if so treated, the refusal to grant the extension should be deemed to be a refusal to grant a permit, which order would be appealable under section 64 (a) of the Act. It is therefore necessary to deal with these contentions in the order in which they were stated above.

Learned Counsel of the appellants relied upon the second part of clauses (a) and (b) of section 64. It is as well that the two clauses (a) and (b) are quoted here :

“(a) Any person aggrieved by the refusal of the Provincial or a Regional Transport Authority to grant a permit or by any condition attached to a permit granted to him, or

(b) aggrieved by the revocation or suspension of the permit or by any variation of the conditions thereof may within the prescribed time and in the prescribed manner, appeal to the prescribed authority, who shall give such person and the original authority an opportunity of being heard.”

Rule 147 lays down that :

“An appeal under section 64 of the Act against an order of the Road Traffic Board or against an order of the Secretary of the Board, shall lie to the Central Board within thirty days of the date of despatch of the order appealed against.”

Rule 148 deals with appeals to the Government against an original order of the Central Board or against an order of the Secretary of that Board, with which we are not concerned. It was contended that the refusal to grant the application of the appellants amounted in substance to a refusal to alter the original condition of the permit restricting the route from Kurnool to Atmakur and declining to extend it to Velgode. The appellants therefore, it is claimed, are aggrieved by the condition attached to the permit that the route should be restricted to Kurnool-Atmakur, which was the effect of the decision of the Regional Transport Authority. If the order is so construed, it is urged that under the second part of section 64 (a) the appellants can be treated as persons aggrieved by the condition attached to the permit granted to them, and that the order will therefore be appealable. This argument, in our opinion, proceeds on an erroneous view of the clause in question. The clause, in our opinion, applies only to cases where by reason of the existence of a condition attached to a permit the grantee of the permit was aggrieved by that condition at the time of the grant of the permit. If he was so aggrieved, it was open to him to have the condition removed or modified by an appeal under clause (a) of section 64. It is not claimed on behalf of the appellants that the condition that the route should be restricted to Kurnool and Atmakur was, at the time it was imposed, prejudicial to them, and that they were aggrieved by it. Under section 48-A of the Act it is open to the Regional Transport Authority when granting a permit to attach a condition that the stage carriages shall be used only on specified routes or in a specified area. In 1944 when the original permit was granted to the appellants the only route that was declared was the route between Kurnool and Atmakur, and they were perfectly satisfied at the time of the grant of the permit with the condition or restriction that they should be confined to the route between Kurnool and Atmakur, and they were not in any manner aggrieved by such condition. It is, however, now curiously claimed that by subsequent events, the proposed extension of the route to Velgode and the restriction or the condition in the original permit act adversely to their interests, and that therefore they are aggrieved by the condition now. It is not, in our opinion, the intention of the Legislature when it enacted clause (a) to give a right of appeal in such circumstances. The right of appeal is to be exercised within the period of thirty days from the date of the order granting the permit, under rule 147, and the grievance if any, regarding the condition that exists in the permit must be one that existed by the date of the grant of the permit. It is not a grievance which accrued or which arose subsequent to the grant of the permit, that can be agitated in an appeal. According to the learned Advocate if the grievance is by reason of subsequent events long after the grant of the permit it does not matter. To read the clause in the manner suggested by the learned Advocate for the appellants would be to put upon it an unnatural construction not intended by the Legislature when that clause was enacted. The contention, therefore, that the right of appeal could be justified under clause (a) of section 64 cannot be upheld.

The next argument was that when the Legislature conferred a right of appeal under clause (b) to a person aggrieved by any variation of the conditions of the permit, it implied and carried with it also a right of appeal in a case where the Regional Transport Authority refused to vary the conditions of the permit. The power to vary the conditions of a permit, it was argued, carried with it the power to refuse to vary the conditions in other words, to reject the application for variation or alteration. In support of his argument learned counsel relied strongly upon two decisions, one of the Federal Court and the other of this Court, both of which related to the right of appeal under the Civil Procedure Code against an order refusing to appoint a receiver. Under the present Order 43, rule 1, clause (s) an order under rule 1 or rule 4 of Order 40 except an order under the proviso to sub-rule (2) of rule 4 is appealable. When we turn to rule 1 of Order 40, the orders contemplated therein are an order appointing a receiver or removing any person from the possession or custody of the property, an order committing the same to the possession, custody or management of the Receiver and an order conferring upon the receiver the powers enumerated in clause (d) of rule 1 of Order 40. In none of these orders is an order refusing to appoint a receiver included expressly. It was however ruled by the Federal Court in *Rayarappan v. Madhavi Amma*¹, in an appeal against a decision of this Court that when the Code refers to the power to appoint a receiver, it includes within it the power of removal of a receiver as a matter of construction of the rule, bearing in mind section 16 of the General Clauses Act. It was therefore held that though the Legislature did not specifically and expressly refer to an order removing a receiver as appealable, such order was made appealable by adopting the rule of construction enacted in section 16 of the General Clauses Act. Though no express reference is made in the earlier decision of the Full Bench in *Venkitasami v. Stridhavamma*², to section 16 of the General Clauses Act, the reasoning of the learned Judges in that case is more or less on the same lines, namely, that as a matter of interpretation of sections 503 and 588 of the Code of Civil Procedure then in force (the Code of 1882) the power to appoint carried with it also the power to refuse to appoint, and therefore both orders were appealable, though the later order was not expressly mentioned either in section 503 or section 588. In our opinion, these decisions and the reasoning underlying them do not at all help the appellants and support their argument. No general rule of construction of the kind invoked and applied in the decision of the Federal Court is available to support the interpretation now sought to be placed upon the second part of clause (b). No doubt, an application to vary the conditions of a permit may be granted or refused, but the Legislature for reasons best known to itself, thought fit to make an order which varies the conditions of the permit alone appealable. If one may attempt to find the reason, it seems to be this : If the original conditions of the permit were not such as would be prejudicial to the grantee, he would accept the permit ; if not, he would have carried the matter in appeal to the Central Road Traffic Board under clause (a) of section 64 within the time prescribed by rule 147. If he did not carry the matter in appeal, it must be presumed that he was satisfied with those conditions. If, however, at any later stage those conditions are varied by the concerned authority to the detriment of the grantee of the permit, it is but legitimate and reasonable that he should be given a right of appeal to have the matter agitated in a higher forum. There is no reason to allow a right of appeal if the conditions are not varied, because so long as the permit lasts, those conditions will continue to attach to the permit, particularly as the grantee did not feel aggrieved at the time of the grant of the permit by the existence of those conditions in the permit. That is the reason why we think no right of appeal was conferred by the Legislature in cases where the variation was refused. The analogy, therefore, of the decision of the Federal Court and of this Court in *Venkitasami v. Stridhavamma*², cannot be extended to the present case, and we are therefore unable to accept the argument of the learned counsel for the appellants based on the interpretation of the latter part of clause (b) of section 64.

1. (1949) F.C.R. 667 : (1950) S.C.J. 567 (F.C.). 2. (1886) I.L.R. 10 Mad. 179 (F.B.).

Reliance was strongly placed on rule 208, which lays down the procedure to be followed in applications to vary the conditions of the permit. That rule consists of two parts and reads as follows :

"Rule 208. (a) Upon application made in writing by the holder of any permit, the Transport Authority may, at any time, in its discretion, vary the permit or any of the conditions thereof subject to the provisions of sub-rule (b).

(b) If the application is for the variation of the permit by the inclusion of an additional vehicle or vehicles or if the grant of variation would authorize transport facilities materially different from those authorised by the original permit the Transport Authority shall deal with the application as if it were an application for a permit."

The argument is that the application for variation by reason of this Rule should be treated as an application for a permit and the refusal to grant it is a refusal to grant a permit, which order is appealable under section 64-A of the Act. In other words, the argument amounts to this, that by implication a right of appeal is conferred by this Rule against orders refusing to vary the conditions of a permit. There are very many difficulties in the way of accepting this argument. In the first place, it is well-settled law that a right of appeal is a substantive right and not a matter of procedure and should be created or conferred expressly by a statute. It cannot be inferred by implication. In the very illuminating speech of the Lord Chancellor (Lord Westbury) in the case in *The Attorney-General v. Sillem and others*¹, the learned Lord Chancellor expressed thus :

"The creation of a new right of appeal is plainly an act which requires legislative authority. The Court from which the appeal is given, and the Court to which it is given must both be bound and that must be the act of some higher power. It is not competent to either tribunal, or to both collectively, to create any such right. Suppose the Legislature to have given to either tribunal, that is, to the Court of the First Instance, and to the Court of Error or Appeal respectively, the fullest power of regulating its own practice or procedure, such power would not avail for the creation of a new right of appeal, which is in effect a limitation of the jurisdiction of one Court, and an extension of the jurisdiction of another. A power to regulate the practice of a Court does not involve or imply any power to alter the extent or nature of its jurisdiction."

In the well-known case of the Judicial Committee, *Colonial Sugar Refining Company v. Irving*², it was pointed out by Lord Macnaghten that a right of appeal was a substantive right and not a mere matter of procedure, for the learned Lord observed at page 372 :

"It seems to their Lordships that the question does not admit of doubt. To deprive a suitor in a pending action of an appeal to a superior tribunal which belonged to him as of right is a very different thing from regulating procedure. In principle, their Lordships see no difference between abolishing an appeal altogether and transferring the appeal to a new tribunal. In either case there is an interference with existing rights contrary to the well-known general principle that statutes are not to be held to act retrospectively unless a clear intention to that effect is manifested."

Rule 208, in term, does not purport to confer a right of appeal ; it purports to lay down the procedure applicable to applications for the variation of the conditions of a permit. It has been pointed out already that the substantive provision in the Act conferring a right of appeal in certain specified cases does not include within it a right of appeal against an order refusing to vary the conditions of a permit. If the rule in question does not in terms confer a right of appeal against an order refusing to vary the conditions of a permit, can it be said that it impliedly confers such a right ? As has been pointed out above, a right of appeal must be expressly conferred by a statute and cannot be inferred by implication. It is not within the competence of the rule-making authority constituted under section 68 of the Act to confer a new right of appeal not recognised or granted by section 64 of the Act. The Legislature would not have intended by implication, if from the language of section 69 it could be implied at all, to have conferred a power on the rule-making authority to enlarge and extend the scope of section 64, so as to confer a right of appeal not recognised by section 64. As has been rightly pointed out by the learned Government Pleader in the course of the arguments, all that section 68 lays down with reference to appeals is that in clause (j) of sub-section (2) of that section it is stated that the rule-making power extends to indicate the authorities to whom, the time within which and the manner in which the appeals may be made. This does not in terms confer a power to extend the right of appeal in cases not governed by section 64 of the Act. It was claimed, however, on behalf of the appellants by Mr. Bhashyam that the generality of the language in clause (1) of section 68 might be construed as implying such a power for section 68 (1) states :

"A Provincial Government may make rules for the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of this Chapter," the Chapter in which the provision relating to the right of appeal, section 64, is also included. From such a language a power to lay down by rules and confer a right of appeal cannot be inferred is gatherable from the decision of the House of Lords in *R. & W. Paul, Ltd. v. The Wheat Commission*¹. The by-law there was made by the Wheat Commission under the Wheat Act of 1932. The power to make by-laws therein was conferred among other grounds for giving effect to the provisions of the Act. Notwithstanding the generality of such a provision it was held by the House of Lords that by-law No. 20 made by the Wheat Commission in 1933 excluding the application of the Arbitration Act, 1889, to arbitration proceedings contemplated by by-law No. 20 was ultra vires. Lord Macmillan in his speech at page 154 observed :

"The Arbitration Act is a Statute of general application and it confers a valuable and important right of resort to the Courts of law. To exclude its operation from an arbitration is to deprive the parties to the arbitration of the rights which the Act confers. When a public general statute provides for the reference of disputes to arbitration it is to be presumed that it intends them to be referred to arbitration in accordance with the general law as to arbitrations, with all the attendant rights which the general law confers. I do not think that when Parliament enacts by one statute that disputes under it are to be referred to arbitration it can be presumed to have empowered by implication the abrogation of another statute which it has enacted for the conduct of arbitration. Rather the contrary. If this is intended, express words to that effect are in my opinion essential, and there are here no such express words. I am accordingly of opinion that the Wheat Commission exceeded their powers when they made a by-law that every dispute as to whether any substance is flour should be determined by an arbitration to which the Arbitration Act should not apply. I have only to add that the by-law must, in my opinion, be condemned as a whole and that it cannot be solved by the excision of the objectionable provision, which is not a severable but a vital part of the by-law."

These observations of the learned Lord apply with equal force to the present case, unless the statute by its enacting provisions has expressly conferred a right of appeal. The rule-making authority would not be within their powers in conferring a new right of appeal expressly or by implication. It therefore follows that rule 208 cannot be construed in such a manner as to transgress the limits of the power of the rule-making authority, which have been laid down and circumscribed by section 68 of the Act.

In *The Attorney-General v. Sillem and others*² already cited, by the 26th section of the Queen's Remembrancer's Act (22 and 23 Vict., C. 21) the Chief Baron and two or more Barons of the Court of Exchequer were empowered to make all such rules and orders as to the process, practice and mode of pleading on the Revenue Side of the Court and also to extend, apply or adapt any of the provisions of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1852 and the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854, and any of the rules of pleading and practice on the plea side of the said Court to the Revenue Side of the said Court. In exercise of this power the Chief Baron and two other Barons of the Court of Exchequer purported to confer a right of appeal, and the power was sought to be justified by placing reliance on section 26 of the Act. Notwithstanding the very wide language employed in that section of making rules and orders as to the process, practice and mode of pleading on the Revenue Side of the Court it was held by the House of Lords that the Chief Baron and the two Barons of the Court of Exchequer had no power of authority to confer a right of appeal where it did not otherwise exist.

"These rules"

said Lord Westbury, Lord Chancellor at page 725,

"are so many legislative enactments purporting to create a new jurisdiction in the Court of Exchequer Chamber and House of Lords, and prescribing the mode in which such a new jurisdiction shall be exercised. It is simply an incorrect use of language to call such enactments provisions respecting the process, practice, or mode of pleading in the Court of Exchequer; but unless they can be properly and strictly so denominated, there is not, in my opinion, any authority to make such rules conferred by the 26th section of the Act in question."

The application therefore of the procedure applicable to the disposal of the applications for grant of a permit to cases of variation of the conditions of a permit does not even by implication carry with it a right of appeal, assuming that otherwise the rule-making authority had the power to create a new right of appeal which, as already stated, did not, in fact, exist under section 68. The reliance therefore placed by Mr. Bhashyam on rule 208 in support of the right of appeal cannot be justified by authority or by principle.

Strong reliance was placed by learned counsel for the appellants on the decision of the House of Lords in *National Telephone Company, Ltd. v. Postmaster-General*¹. It is a well-recognised principle established by authority that if a new power or new jurisdiction is conferred upon a Court which is regulated by a Code containing the procedure as well as a right of appeal, the exercise of that new jurisdiction by that Court will carry with it the ordinary incidents of procedure applicable thereto as well as the general right of appeal from its decisions. It is this principle that is illustrated by the decision in *National Telephone Company, Ltd. v. Postmaster-General*¹. The same principle was again reiterated by the Judicial Committee in a very recent case which went up on appeal from this Court in *Adaikappa Chettiar v. Chandrasekhara Thevar*², a decision under Madras Act IV of 1938. Lord Simonds in delivering the judgment stated at page 513 the principle in these terms :

"The true rule is that where a legal right is in dispute and the ordinary Courts of the country are seized of such dispute the Courts are governed by the ordinary rules of procedure applicable thereto and an appeal lies, if authorized by such rules, notwithstanding that the legal right claimed arises under a special statute which does not in terms confer a right of appeal—see *Secretary of State for India v. Chellikani Rama Rao*³ and *Hem Singh v. Mahant Basant Das*⁴."

It is difficult to see how this principle would help the appellants. This is not a case where to an existing Court a new jurisdiction has been added by the Act. The Act, it must be mentioned, is a self-contained Code, and creates new rights and also provides for the adjudication of the disputes arising in respect of such rights. In such a case the remedy provided by the Statute alone must be followed as pointed out by the Judicial Committee in *Secretary of State for India v. Mask & Co.*⁵, quoting from Willes, J.'s judgment in *Wolverhampton New Waterworks Company v. Hawkesford*⁶ :

"Where the statute creates a liability not existing at common law, and gives also a particular remedy for enforcing it With respect to that clause it has always been held, that the party must adopt the form of remedy given by the statute."

In order to determine whether a right of appeal on the facts of the case exists or not, one has to look to the provisions contained in section 64 of the Act, and if a party claiming a right of appeal is not able to bring himself within any of the clauses enumerated in section 64 he has no right of appeal. If the jurisdiction had been conferred upon an ordinary Civil Court to adjudicate upon disputes of the nature contemplated by the Act without providing a right of appeal in the Act itself, the position would have been different. Probably to such a situation the principle of the decisions in *National Telephone Company, Ltd. v. Postmaster-General*¹ and *Adaikappa Chettiar v. Chandrasekhara Thevar*², may be applied, but such is not the situation in the present case. The mere fact that in the last part of rule 208 (b) the Transport Authority is directed to deal with the matter as if it were an application for a permit does not carry with it by implication even a right of appeal, as if it was a refusal to grant a permit within the meaning of section 64 (a) of the Act.

For these reasons we agree with the learned Judge that the Central Road Traffic Board had no jurisdiction to entertain the appeal against the order of the Regional Transport Authority dated 31st August, 1950. The decision appealed against is correct, and this Letters Patent Appeal must therefore be dismissed with costs."

v.

The State of Madras represented by the Secretary, Local Administration Department, Fort St. George, Madras and another

Respondents.

Madras District Municipalities Act (V of 1920), section 43—Scope—Allotment of reserved seat—Duty of Government to 'consult' the Municipal Council—"Consult"—Interpretation, section 351-B, Municipalities Act—If bars High Court's power to issue writs.

Under section 43 of the Madras District Municipalities Act allotment of reserved seats to any ward in a Municipal election can only be made after consulting the municipal council. The statutory condition of consulting was conceived in public interests and expressed in clear terms. It is therefore the duty of the High Court to ensure that there is a full and fair compliance with the statutory condition. The Court will have to scrutinise in each case whether the requisite consultation has taken place, having regard to the substance of the events. The words "consult" implies a conference of two or more persons or an impact of two or more minds in respect of a topic in order to enable them to evolve a correct or at least a satisfactory solution. Such a consultation may take place at a conference table or through correspondence. The form is not material but the substance is important. It is necessary that the consultation shall be directed to the essential points and to the core of the subject involved in the discussions. The consultation must enable the consultor to consider the pros and cons of the question before coming to a decision. A person consults another to be elucidated on the subject-matter of the consultation. A consultation may be between an uninformed person and an expert or between two experts. The final decision is with the consultor, but he will not generally ignore the advice except for good reasons. In the case of a public authority directed to perform a duty in consultation with another authority which is qualified to give advice in respect of that duty, though the final order is made and the ultimate responsibility rests with the former authority, it will not and cannot be a performance of duty if no consultation is made, and even if made, is only a formal compliance with the provisions.

Under section 43 of the District Municipalities Act the consultation referred in sub-section (1) must be read distributively. The local Government shall consult the municipal Council for dividing the municipality into wards and also shall consult the municipality for determining the wards in which the seats, if any, reserved under sub-section (3) of section 7 shall be set apart. If so read, the consultation also must be with reference to the allotment of the reserved seats to the particular wards. [It was found that there was no consultation as to allotment of reserved seat in a ward and therefore it was illegal.]

Section 351-B of the Madras District Municipalities Act cannot affect the power of the High Court to issue suitable writs under Article 226 of the Constitution of India. Under Article 245 of the Constitution the power of the Parliament or the Legislature of a State to make laws is subject to the provisions of the Constitution. So long as Article 226 stands in the Constitution, neither the Parliament nor the Legislature of a State can make laws depriving or limiting the power of the High Court to issue writs.

Petition praying that in the circumstances stated in the affidavit filed therewith the High Court will be pleased to issue a writ of certiorari calling for the records relating to G.O. Ms. No. 1544, Local Administration Department, dated 29th July, 1952, from the Secretary to Government Local Administration Department, Fort St. George, Madras, regarding the reservation of seats for women for wards 2 and 12 of the Aruppukottai Municipality.

S. Mohan Kumaramangalam and Messrs. Row and Reddy for Petitioners.

The Government Pleader (P. Satyanarayana Raju) for the State.

The Court made the following :

ORDER.—This is an application under Article 226 of the Constitution of India for issuing a writ of certiorari to call for the records and quash the order, dated 29th July, 1952, of the the first respondent, the State of Madras. The first petitioner is the Secretary of the Progressive Women's Association, Aruppukkottai ; the second petitioner is a Municipal Councillor of the Arupukkottai municipality. The elections to the said council are now in progress. Under the programme of elections issued by the second respondent Commissioner of the municipality, the last date to file nominations is the 6th and 8th September, 1952 and the date of the polling is fixed on the 6th October, 1952. The municipality is divided into 24 wards with 28 councillors ; one reserved seat for women is allotted to Ward No. 2 and another to Ward No. 12. The said allotment was made by the order of the Government, dated 29th July, 1952. The petitioners seek to get that order quashed for the reasons inter alia that it is vitiated by mala fides on the part of the Government and also on the ground that the Government did not comply with the provisions of the District Municipalities Act in issuing the said order.

The contention of the learned counsel for the petitioners that the Government did not comply with the provisions of section 43 of the District Municipalities Act may be taken up first. Section 43 reads :

"For the purposes of election of councillors to a municipal council, the State Government after consulting the municipal council, may, by notification

- (a) divide the municipality into wards ;
- (b) determine the wards in which the seats, if any, reserved under sub-section (3) of section 7 shall be set apart ; and
- (c) declare for whom such seats are reserved "

Under section 7 (3) the local Government may in their discretion by notification reserve seats for women and determine the number of such seats. The Government accordingly determined to give two seats for women and allotted the said reserved seats to Wards Nos. 2 and 12. Under section 43 such allotment of the reserved seats can only be made after consulting the municipal council. The statutory condition of consulting was conceived in public interests and expressed in clear terms. It is therefore the duty of this Court to ensure that there is a full and fair compliance with the statutory condition. The question therefore is whether the Government consulted the municipal council before determining the wards in which the said seats were set apart. This turns upon the construction of the words "after consulting" in the section. The word "consult" is so familiar that it often eludes the grasp of easy and exact definition. In the Law Lexicon by P. Ramanatha Ayyar it is stated as follows :

"Consultations always require two persons at least ; deliberations may be carried on either with a man's self or with numbers ; an individual may consult with one or many ; assemblies commonly deliberate ; advice and information are given and received in consultations ; doubts, difficulties, and objections are started and removed in deliberations. Those who have to co-operate must frequently consult together ; those who have serious measures to decide upon must coolly deliberate "

The word "consult" was subject of a judicial scrutiny in *Fletcher v. Minister of Town Planning*¹. The question arose in connection with an application taken out for quashing the order made by the Minister for Town and Country Planning. The Minister designated an area of land as the site of a proposed new Town. It was contended that the requirements of the New Towns Act, 1946, had not been complied with in relation to the making of the order, in that there was no "consultation" within the meaning of section 1 (i) of the Act between the Minister and the local authorities before the making of the order designating the area of land in question as the site of the proposed new town. On the facts the learned Judge held that there was the requisite consultation, but in dealing with the question, at page 500 the learned Judge observed :

"The word 'consultation' is one that is in general use and that is well understood. No useful purpose would, in my view, be served by formulating words of definition. Nor would it be appropriate to seek to lay down the manner in which consultation must take place. The Act does not prescribe any particular form of consultation. If a complaint is made of failure to consult, it will be for the Court to examine the facts and circumstances of the particular case and to decide whether consultation was, in fact, held. Consultations may often be a somewhat continuous process and the happenings at one meeting may form the background of a later one."

It is clear from the aforesaid observations that the Court will have to scrutinise in each case whether the requisite consultation has taken place, having regard to the substance of the events. The word "consult" implies a conference of two or more persons or an impact of two or more minds in respect of a topic in order to enable them to evolve a correct, or at least, a satisfactory solution. Such a consultation may take place at a conference table or through correspondence. The form is not material but the substance is important. It is necessary that the consultation shall be directed to the essential points and to the core of the subject involved in the discussions. The consultation must enable the consultor to consider the pros and cons of the question before coming to a decision. A person consults another to be elucidated on the subject matter of the consultation. A consultation may be between an uninformed person and an expert or between two experts. A patient consults a doctor; a client consults his lawyer; two lawyers or two doctors may hold consultations between themselves. In either case the final decision is with the consultor, but he will not generally ignore the advice except for good reasons. So too in the case of a public authority. Many instances may be found in statutes when an authority entrusted with a duty is directed to perform the same in consultation with another authority which is qualified to give advice in respect of that duty. It is true that the final order is made and the ultimate responsibility rests with the former authority. But it will not, and cannot be, performance of duty if no consultation is made, and even if made, is only in formal compliance with the provisions. In either case the order is not made in compliance with the provisions of the Act. Having regard to the aforesaid observations let me now consider the correspondence which ended in the order made by the Government. On 27th June, 1952, the first respondent wrote to the Municipality intimating their proposal to divide the Aruppukkottai municipality into 24 electoral wards and also to reserve two seats for women and allot the same to Wards Nos. 5 and 12. The Chairman, Municipal Council, was also requested to place the above proposals at an urgent meeting of the council within two weeks. He was also informed that any suggestions which the Municipal Council may have to make before the expiry of three weeks would be considered by the Government. On 9th July, 1952 the Municipal Council passed a resolution recommending to the first respondent that the two seats for women be reserved in Wards Nos. 5 and 7 respectively instead of Wards Nos. 5 and 12 as suggested by the Government. The letter of the Chairman of the Municipal Council sent to the three councillors who had dissented from the proposal of the Council, a copy of which was sent to the Government, gives the reasons for preferring Wards Nos. 5 and 7 instead of 5 and 12. It reads:

"the allotment of a woman's seat to Ward No. 12 as now proposed would mean allotting both the women's seats to a single community, the Devangar Community, which is already the biggest single community in the municipality resulting in the distribution of the wards on an unfair basis. Besides this legitimate claim for a woman's seat the Nadar Community has a more reasonable claim to representation of the women in this town because the Nadar women are more than 75 per cent educated and under the auspices of their Lady's Association containing more than 200 members they are taking a leading part in all the activities in this town, which are calculated to further the interests of women educationally and socially. I consider that for this important reason also the Nadar Community deserves to have a woman's seat. The ward committee and the council took this aspect also into consideration in allotting one of the women's seats to Ward No. 7."

The reason given by the Municipality for suggesting a modification of the proposal made by the Government was that if the Government's proposal was carried out, the two women's seats would be captured by women belonging to the Devangar Community and the woman of the Nadar Community would be deprived of their right to be represented in the council. The Government did not accept the proposal of the municipality but instead the two seats for women were reserved in Wards Nos. 2 and 12.

Relying upon the aforesaid correspondence, learned counsel for the petitioners argued generally that though the Government went through the formality of a consultation, they did not, in fact, consult the municipality. It was said that an authority consulting another should at least give reasons for the proposals so that the other may give its considered opinion in regard to the proposals made, for any proposal unaccompanied by such reasons could not afford any opportunity to the other to advice for or against the proposal. It is true that the giving of reasons by the Government would enable the municipality to scrutinise them and offer advice or counter-proposals. But I cannot say that the procedure adopted is not "consultation" in respect of the matters referred within the meaning of the section. The Government sent their proposals. Though the Government did not disclose their mind by giving reasons, nothing prevented the municipality from making their suggestions in respect of the allotment of the reserved seats to Wards Nos. 5 and 12. They could give reasons, as they had given in this case, why the proposal was not conducive in the interests of the women voters and how it could be suitably modified. The Government and the municipality had a "consultation" in respect of the allotment of reserved seats for women of Wards Nos. 5 and 12. The Government wanted to allot to Ward Nos. 5 and 12; the municipality, for reasons given, suggested they should be allotted to Ward Nos. 5 and 7. It is therefore manifest that the Government consulted the municipality in respect of Ward No. 12, and though the municipality did not agree, they allotted the reserved seat to that ward. So far as Ward No. 12 is concerned, the provisions of section 43 have been complied with. But I find it very difficult to say the same in respect of the allotment of the reserved seat to Ward No. 2. Learned Government Pleader contended that the Government consulted the municipality in respect of the division of the municipality into wards and the allotment of the reserved seats to the different wards and it is not necessary that they should have consulted the municipality in respect of the suitability of the allotment of a reserved seat to a particular ward. To put in other words, his argument was that a general consultation would be in compliance with the provisions of the Act and the fact that the allotment of a woman's seat to Ward No. 2 was not referred to the municipality could not invalidate the allotment. This argument, in my view, is not only contrary to the provisions of section 43 but defeats the purpose for which the said section was enacted. Under section 43 the consultation referred in sub-section (i) must be read distributively. The local Government shall consult the municipal council for dividing the municipality into wards and also shall consult the municipality for determining the wards in which the seats, if any, reserved under sub-section (3) of section 7 shall be set apart. If so read, the consultation also must be with reference to the allotment of the reserved seats to the particular wards. If the Government proposed Ward No. 5 for the allotment of a reserved seat and after consulting the municipality in respect of that proposal, allotted the same to Ward No. 2, it is impossible to hold that the Government consulted the municipality in determining the wards for allotting the reserved seats. If the Government asked the municipality to send their proposals in respect of all the wards for allotment of reserved seats and thereafter allotted a reserved seat to a particular ward, it may perhaps be argued on which question I do not express my opinion that the Government has consulted the municipality; but where, as in this case, the attention of the municipality is focused only to a particular ward and their advice in respect of that ward obtained, I find it very difficult to hold that the Government consulted the municipality in respect of the allotment of the seat to a different ward. I therefore hold that the Government in contravention of the provisions of section 43 (b) did not consult the municipality and, in respect of Ward No. 2, therefore, the said allotment is illegal.

Learned counsel for the petitioners then contended that the Government in allotting the reserved seats to Ward Nos. 2 and 12 were actuated by mala fides. It was said that in the elections for these two wards held in 1948 the successful candidates were both from the Congress Party and therefore the present Congress Government allotted those two reserved seats to women so that their party candidates might be selected. In my view there is not even a slender basis for this grave allegation. The fact that Congress candidates were elected in the year 1948 is not a guarantee that the candidates of the same party would be elected in the year 1952. Further, it is not the case of the petitioners in the affidavit that the Congress candidates were elected only for these two wards. Nor is it suggested that in these two wards alone they had an overwhelming majority, whereas they had lost or scraped through in other wards. Assuming that the Congress was successful in these two wards in 1948, it is impossible to hold from that fact alone that the Government allotted the reserved seats to these two wards to help their party candidates. The petitioners fail to establish mala fide in this case.

The learned Government Pleader raised a preliminary objection against the maintainability of the present application on the basis of section 351-B of the Madras District Municipalities Act which reads :

"Notwithstanding anything contained in the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, or in any other law for the time being in force, no Court shall grant any permanent or temporary injunction or make any interim order restraining any proceeding which is being or about to be taken under this Act for the preparation or the publication of the electoral rolls or for the conduct of any election".

This section obviously cannot affect the power of the High Court to issue suitable writs under Article 226 of the Constitution of India. Under Article 245 of the Constitution, the power of the Parliament or the Legislature of a State to make laws is subject to the provisions of the Constitution. So long as Article 226 stands in the Constitution, neither the Parliament nor the Legislature of a State can make laws depriving or limiting the power of the High Court to issue writs. I therefore hold that the provisions of section 351-B cannot in anyway affect the power of the High Court to issue writs in suitable cases. For the aforesaid reasons I hold that the order of the Government allotting the seat reserved for women to Ward No. 2 is illegal and I therefore issue a direction restraining the respondents from holding the election in respect of the said reserved seat. This will not preclude the Government from allotting the said seat reserved for women to any of the wards after complying with the provisions of the Act. As the parties fail and succeed in part, there will be no order as regards costs.

.. Respondent.

Madras City Municipal Act (IV of 1919)—Sum of Rs. 5 levied on every dhoby inside Madras Corporation—If tax or licence fee.

The sum of Rs. 5 levied upon every dhoby inside the Madras Corporation is a licence fee within the ambit of the decision in Varadachari v. State of Madras, (1952) 2 M.L.J. 419 and not a tax and is not repugnant to fundamental rights under the Constitution.

Petition under sections 435 and 439, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, praying that the High Court will be pleased to revise the order of the Court of the VIIIth Presidency Magistrate, Egmore, dated 14th May, 1952, in M. No. 2762 of 1952.

S. Mohan Kumaramangalam and A. Madhavan for the Petitioner.

The State Prosecutor (S. Govind Swaminathan) for the State.

The Court made the following

ORDER.—The point taken by Mr. Mohan Kumaramangalam in this case is whether the fee of Rs. 5 levied upon every dhoby inside the Madras Corporation is a licence fee or a tax.

There is no dispute before me that if this levy is construed as a tax this revision has got to be allowed and if this is construed as a licence fee this revision has got to be dismissed.

In order to determine whether this sum of Rs. 5 levied is a licence fee or a tax—I need not point out that this sum of Rs. 5 is levied as a licence fee—we have got certain tests which have been elaborately gone into and laid down by my Lord the Chief Justice in *Varadachari v. State of Madras*¹. The learned Chief Justice has reviewed the entire case-law on the subject and has delimited the boundary line between a licence fee and a tax.

The learned Chief Justice points out :

“It is now well established that there is a fundamental difference between a tax and a licence fee. The issue of licences to regulate particular branches of business or specified trades or occupations and other matters is part of what in American Constitutional Law is called the ‘police power’ of the State. See *Anantakrishnan v. State of Madras*². For the grant of a licence a fee may be charged to cover probable expenses, which may have to be incurred for the regulation of the particular trade or business or calling in respect of which the licence is required. The licence fee is not intended to raise revenues for the general purpose of the authority levying the fee. For such purposes the levy should be in the shape of a tax. The licence fee must be reasonable, whereas, a tax need not be.”

Courts have often dealt with the question whether a particular licence fee is reasonable or not. Though, ultimately the decision in each case must depend upon the particular facts of that case, certain general tests have been formulated to decide whether a particular fee is reasonable in the circumstances. In laying down these general principles courts have always kept in view the essential difference between a licence fee and tax, namely, that in the case of a licence fee imposition is intended to reimburse the authority in any amount expended by it in respect of the particular business or matter which is intended to be regulated, whereas a tax is the recognised method of raising revenues for general purposes. It is useful to refer to some of the decided cases, on the point and we shall begin with the ruling of the Privy Council in *Pazundaung Bazar Co., Ltd. v. Municipal Corporation of the City of Rangoon*³. That was given on an appeal from the judgment of the Rangoon High Court reported in *Municipal Corporation, Rangoon v. Pazundaung Bazar Co., Ltd.*⁴. Under the City of Rangoon Municipal Act the Corporation had power to charge licence fees for private markets. The question was whether the licence fee imposed was unreasonable. Heald, Officiating Chief Justice rejected the contention of the owners of the private markets who were protesting against the levy that the only charges recoverable by way of licence fees were the cost of the papers on which the licences and receipts were printed together with the costs of printing and writing thereon and the cost of such inspection as was directly connected with the licences themselves. He held (and Mya Bu, J., concurred with him) that the licence fee may reasonably cover the cost of all special services necessitated by the duties and liabilities imposed on the Corporation in respect of the supervision and regulation of private markets. The Privy Council agreed with this statement of law.

In *Corporation of Madras v. Messrs. Spencer & Co., Ltd., Madras*⁵, this Court held that a licence fee imposed by the Corporation of Madras for storing spirits was unreasonable because the imposition was not with a view to pay for the expenses in connection with the licence but was obviously done to increase the revenue of the Corporation from liquor. The learned Judges accepted the view of the trial Judge, Beasley, J., (as he then was) that licence fees were leviable as compensation to the Corporation for the expenses incurred in the issue of licences and the general regulation of the trades and other occupations which were licensed and that there must be some relation between these expenses and the amount of fees leviable. In the case before them they found on the evidence which had been adduced that the expenses of supervising the places where foreign liquor was stored were practically

nil. Reilly, J., enunciated two general principles which may be useful to determine whether licence fees can be held to be reasonable or not, namely:

"If we accept the proposition that the power of charging licence fees cannot be used for taxation, then we must say that as a whole the fees charged by the Corporation must not be very much in excess of what the duties cast upon them and their staff in connection with the licences cost them. There is the cost of issuing the licences; there is the cost of inspecting the premises to see whether they are suitable for the purpose proposed; and there is the subsequent cost of inspecting the premises to see that they are being used properly and that the conditions and restrictions imposed by the Commissioner are observed. But, roughly speaking, if the fees are charged at so high a rate that as a whole they bring in very much more than the cost of these operations to the Corporation, then I think, we can rightly say that they are unreasonable. There is another principle. Although it is almost impossible for the Corporation itself to ascertain, when they are issuing a number of licences to persons engaged in different trades and occupations, exactly what is the cost of any particular licence or of licences for persons engaged in particular trades or occupations—and certainly we could not attempt anything of that sort—yet, surely, it would be unreasonable if they so fixed the fees and that the whole cost incurred by them in connection with all the licences or a grossly disproportionate part of it was imposed on one particular trade or a few particular trades. These principles, I think, may be of help in ascertaining whether a particular fee is reasonable or not."

Of course it is not for a Court to minutely assess and fix what in its opinion is the proper fee. All that the Court can do is to hold whether a particular fee is reasonable or not.

Practically the same principles were reiterated in a subsequent decision of this Court in the *Municipal Council, Kumbakonam v. Messrs. Ralli Bros.*¹. It was held that the licence fee should be commensurate with the extra cost entailed by granting the licences and exercising such supervision as was necessary to see that its terms were complied with. But the fees should not be so assessed as substantially to contribute to the general revenues of the local body.

The decisions above cited were all discussed in *Kunhambu v. Local Fund Overseer, Chirakkal*², in which it was again laid down that the licence fee should not be converted into a tax for the purpose of raising revenue and the licence fee should bear a definite and well-recognised relation to the expenses incurred by the licencing authority.

The decision in *Indian Sugars and Refineries, Ltd. v. Municipal Council, Hospet*³, relied upon by the learned Advocate-General does not lay down any different principle. The following observations of Wadsworth, J., are apposite:

"It is, we think, well settled that a licence fee for carrying on a particular trade or industry should not be regarded a form of taxation the extent of which is to be governed purely by revenue considerations. The licence fee should bear as nearly as possible a relation to the cost of issuing the licence and the cost of supervising the trade or of any special measures rendered necessary by the character of that trade. We doubt whether the municipality would be justified in increasing the licence fee chargeable upon a particular industry merely by reason of the cost of ordinary municipal services to which that industry is entitled by virtue of its position as a tax-payer in the Municipality. But if the industry involves special sanitary precautions, a special supervising agency or such like expenditure, it is, we think, reasonable to take this expenditure into account in fixing the amount of the fee. When a supervision agency is necessary for a number of industries, it will always be difficult to say how the cost is to be apportioned and, so long as the apportionment is to be made on a reasonable basis it is not for the courts to interfere with the way in which it has been achieved."

Substantially similar principles have been laid down by the Supreme Court of the United States. It is sufficient to cite one instance, namely, the decision in *Ingles v. Morf*⁴, in which a permit fee was held to be invalid because it bore no reasonable relation to the total cost of regulation to defray which it was collected.

Bearing these principles in mind, let us examine the facts of the present case on the footing of the additional evidence which was called for and which has been submitted.

The evidence on record clearly shows the following facts. Individual dhobies are not being licensed. But when soiled and washed clothes are stored and clothes are ironed, a licence fee is imposed with reference to the premises wherein this laundry business is carried on. The authority for the Madras Corporation for doing so is to be found in the publication filed by the learned State Prosecutor under the style and name of "Corporation of Madras, By-laws and Rules under the Madras City Municipal Act and the Public Health Act", printed at Rathnam Press, University Printers, 11, Badrian Street, G.T., Madras, in which, at page 66, we find printed the by-laws under section 349 (13) of the Madras City Municipal Act, 1919, regulating the premises used for washing soiled clothes and keeping soiled clothes for the purpose of washing them and keeping washed clothes. There is no doubt that the accused Subbiah Maistry in this case, on 16th February, 1952 and subsequently, had run a laundry in a hut at S. S. Devar, 3rd Street, wherein he resides, without a licence from the Commissioner of the Madras Corporation as required by section 287 of the Madras City Municipal Act and that he thereby committed an offence punishable under section 357 of the said Act. Mr. S. Brady, the Sanitary Inspector attached to Division No. 21, Ayanavaram, has given evidence that he inspected the hut occupied by the accused and he found that the accused was storing soiled and washed clothes and that he was also ironing the clothes. A notice was therefore issued and the accused not having taken out a licence this prosecution has been launched. Therefore, the only point for determination is whether the fee of Rs. 5 imposed has to be construed as a licence fee or a tax.

The evidence in this case clearly shows that this sum of Rs. 5 is only a licence fee and not a tax and here are the reasons.

The Corporation has filed a statement, Exhibit P-2, which shows (i) the designation and number of officers employed or connected with the licensing of trades ;

(ii) The total amount of expenditure incurred by the Corporation by way of pay and allowances ;

(iii) the percentage of work attributable to licensing ;

(iv) The proportionate cost for the work rendered by them ; the figures being taken out of the budget estimate for 1952-53 (Exhibit P-3). Exhibit P-2 does show the amount derived from building licences. Exhibit P-5 is the schedule of licence fees now in force. The substance of this information can be summarised as follows : There are 724 licensed laundries in Madras. The total fee collected from them at Rs. 5 per laundry is Rs. 3,620. The total fee collected by way of licence fees in respect of all trades except private markets is Rs. 6,35,994. The total expenditure involved in the licensing of trades, businesses, etc., is Rs. 7,10,000 as shown in Exhibit P-2. The percentage of expenditure connected with the licensing and supervision resulting therefrom shown in these statements makes out clearly that the licence fee collected does not result in raising revenue for the general purposes of the Corporation but covers only the probable expenses which are being incurred for the regulation of this particular calling for which licence is required.

The Corporation through P.W. 2 has indicated the services rendered in the shape of granting of licences and exercising such supervision as is necessary to see that its terms are complied with and these give us an indication of the cost entailed. The evidence of P.W. 2, the Assistant Revenue Officer, shows the elaborate and multifarious work entailed in the issue of licences and the supervising work relating thereto which falls upon the Health Department, the Revenue Department, the Electricity Department, and the Works Department. Issue of licences entails previous enquiries, inspections, verification and serving of various processes, considerable expenditure of stationery and printing and book-keeping are involved. Then after the issue of licences the premises are inspected frequently throughout the year to see that the conditions of the licence are observed. In the case of refusal of licence, the party can appeal to the Standing Committee whose members use the Corporation motor-van for the purpose of inspection. Then when there is failure or non-compliance with the terms of licence or when licences are not taken out, again much work is involved on the supervising agency in the matter of launching prosecutions and carrying them through various Courts. In other words, the evidence of P.W. 2 shows and the figures given by the Corporation indicate that the licence fee collected does not cover more than the expenses involved in the licensing of the business and that no part of this amount becomes a part of the general revenue of the Corporation, thereby making a licence fee a substitute for a tax.

In the result, on the evidence on record, I have come to the conclusion that the sum of Rs. 5 levied upon every dhoby inside the Madras Corporation is a licence fee within the ambit of the decision in *Varadachari v. State of Madras*¹ and is not a tax.

Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act (IV of 1938), section 9-A (7) (ii) (a)—Usufructuary mortgagor selling subject-matter of mortgage to another in 1941—Amount payable to mortgagee kept with vendor who agreed to put the vendee in possession after paying the mortgagee—Mortgagor if can apply for scaling down the decree debt.

To get the benefit of the provisions of the Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act the usufructuary mortgagor must establish that the property had not devolved by transfer inter vivos. Where the mortgagor sells the subject-matter of the mortgage to another between 30th September, 1937 and 30th January, 1948, and there was no reservation of any interest in the vendor, section 9-A (7) (ii) (a) of Madras Act IV of 1938 directly applies and the mortgagor has no right to apply for scaling down the decree debt. The fact that a portion of the consideration was kept with the vendor to enable him to pay the usufructuary mortgagee or the circumstance that the vendor agreed to put the vendee in possession after the amount was paid to the mortgagee would not confer on him any interest in the immovable property to entitle him to apply for scaling down.

Appeal against the Order of the District Court of Chittoor, dated the 24th October, 1950 and made in A.S.No. 423 of 1949 (I.A. No. 111 of 1949 in O.S. No. 284 of 1941 on the file of the Court of the District Munsif of Sholinghur).

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—This Civil Miscellaneous Second Appeal arises out of an application filed by the appellant under section 19 of the Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act to scale down the decree debt. The appellant is the third defendant in the Suit. He along with others executed a usufructuary mortgage deed in favour of the respondent for a sum of Rs. 400. On 15th May, 1941, he sold the property, the subject-matter of the usufructuary mortgage, in favour of Yengamma for a consideration of Rs. 600. A petition for amendment of the decree was filed on the basis of section 9-A of the Madras Agriculturists Relief Act. The relevant sub-section, viz., 9-A (7) reads as follows :

"(7) Nothing contained in this section except sub-section (i) shall apply to any usufructuary mortgage—

(ii) in respect of property situated in any other area, in the cases mentioned below :—

(a) Where during the period after the 30th September, 1937 and before the 30th January, 1948 the equity of redemption in the property subject to the usufructuary mortgage has devolved either wholly or in part on a person by or through inter vivos either from the original mortgagor or from person deriving title from or through such mortgagor otherwise than by a transfer inter vivos then, to the whole of such part, as the case may be."

* A.A.A.O. No. 154 of 1951.

1. (1952) 2 M.L.J. 410.

13th August, 1952.

Section 9-A will not therefore apply to a case where the equity of redemption was transferred between 30th September, 1937 and 30th January, 1948. Exhibit A-2 whereunder the petitioner sold the property in favour of Yengamma is dated 15th May, 1941. Prima facie therefore section 9-A (7) (ii) (a) will apply and the appellant is not entitled to have his debt scaled down. But the learned counsel for the appellant argued that though the appellant sold the property in favour of Yengamma for a consideration of Rs. 600, as Rs. 400 out of the amount was kept with him to enable him to pay the same to the usufructuary mortgagee and as he agreed to give possession only after the said amount was paid to the mortgagee, it must be held that notwithstanding the transfer he continued to possess an interest in the equity of redemption. Under Exhibit A-2 the appellants sold the property to Yengamma for consideration. No interest in the property sold was reserved. The fact that a portion of the consideration was kept with the vendor or the circumstance that he agreed to put the vendee in possession after the amount was paid to the mortgagee would not confer on him any interest in the immovable property. Under the sale the entire property devolved on Yengamma within the meaning of section 9-A (7) (ii) (a) of the Act. The decision of Ramesam, J., in *Ratnam Pillai v. Kamalambal Ammal*¹, relied upon by the learned counsel, in my view, will not support him. There the question was whether the mortgagor who had sold the property but agreed with the vendee to redeem the mortgage was entitled to redeem the mortgage. It is unnecessary to express any view on the correctness of the decision; but the learned Judge did not say that by reason of such an arrangement the vendor continued to have any interest in the immovable property conveyed absolutely by him to another. In the instant case, in order to get the benefit of the provisions of the Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act, the appellant must establish that the property had not devolved by transfer inter vivos on the vendee under Exhibit A-2. As I have already said, under the sale deed the entire property was sold and there was no reservation of any interest in the vendor. Section 9-A (7) (ii) (a) of the Act directly applies and the court below rightly dismissed the application.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Arbitration Act (X of 1940)—Arbitrator examining each party behind the back of the opposite party and giving his award—Amounts to legal misconduct sufficient to vitiate the award.

Where an arbitrator examines each party in the absence of the other and gives his award the course adopted by the arbitrator is contrary to the principles of natural justice. The arbitrator is guilty of legal misconduct which is sufficient to vitiate the award. The fact that no prejudice was caused to the plaintiff by reason of the arbitrator having obtained a statement from the defendant behind the back of the plaintiff does not make it any the less a legal misconduct.

On appeal from the Judgment and Decree dated the 24th September, 1948, of the High Court of Judicature at Madras (Menon and Mack, JJ.) in A. A. O. No. 688 of 1945 arising out of Judgment and Decree dated the 1st October, 1945, of the Court of the District Judge of Anantapur in Original Petition No. 15 of 1945.

* Civil Appeal No. 37 of 1952.

29th October, 1952.

S. P. Sinha, Senior Advocate (M. O. Chinnappa Reddy and K. R. Choudhury, Advocates, with him), for Respondents.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Bhagwati, J.—The plaintiff filed O. P. No. 15 of 1945 in the Court of the District Judge of Anantapur for setting aside an award on the ground inter alia of legal misconduct of the arbitrator. The trial Court set aside the award. The High Court on appeal reversed the judgment of the trial Court and dismissed the plaintiff's suit. This appeal has been filed by the plaintiff with the certificate of the High Court against that decision.

One P. Narayanappa died in 1927 leaving him surviving the plaintiff his widow, the defendant 1 his undivided brother, the defendant 2 a son of his another pre-deceased brother and defendant 3 his son by his pre-deceased wife. The deceased had purported to make a will dated 1st May, 1927, under which he had made certain provision for her maintenance and residence. The plaintiff stayed with the family for some time but had to leave the family house owing to disputes which arose between her and the senior wife of defendant 1. She lived with her mother for eleven years and ultimately filed a suit in forma pauperis O.S. No. 19 of 1943 in the Court of the District Judge of Anantapur, for maintenance, arrears of maintenance, residence and household utensils as also recovery of some jewels and clothes as her stridhanam properties. The defendants contested the claim of the plaintiff contending that sufficient arrangement had been made for her maintenance and residence under the will dated the 1st May, 1927, that she had accordingly been in possession and enjoyment of the property and that her claim was unsustainable. The defendants also denied her claim for jewels and clothes.

The suit came on for hearing and final disposal before the Subordinate Judge of Anantapur. When the plaintiff was being examined as P.W. 1, in the suit on the 27th February, 1945, all the parties filed a petition under section 21 of the Arbitration Act agreeing to appoint Sri Konakondla Rayalla Govindappa Guru as the 'sole arbitrator' for settling the disputes in the suit and to abide by his decision, and asking the Court to send the plaint, written statement and other records to the arbitrator for his decision. A reference to arbitration was accordingly made by the Court. The arbitrator entered upon the reference and on the 6th March, 1945, examined the plaintiff and got from her a statement which is Exhibit No. 4 in the record. He similarly examined the defendant 1 on the 10th March, 1945, and got from him the statement which is Exhibit No. 5 in the record. After obtaining the two statements, the arbitrator made and published his award on the 12th March, 1945. It was this award that was challenged by the plaintiff.

The legal misconduct which was alleged against the arbitrator was that he examined each party in the absence of the other. It was contended on behalf of the plaintiff that even though the petition for reference to arbitration as also the statements Exhibits Nos. 4 and 5 authorised the arbitrator to settle the disputes according to law after perusing the plaint and the written statements, the arbitrator examined defendant 1 in the absence of the plaintiff and also perused what was called the settlement of the 1st May, 1927, without giving an opportunity to the plaintiff to have her say in the matter and was thus guilty of legal misconduct. It was contended on the other hand by the defendants that what was done by the arbitrator was merely to obtain from the parties a reiteration of their request contained in the petition that he should give his award on the basis of the pleadings, that not a single fact was recorded by the arbitrator from the defendant 1 which did not find a place in his written statement and that therefore the arbitrator was not guilty of legal misconduct.

The petition filed by the parties on the 27th February, 1945, did not give any special powers to the arbitrator. The arbitrator was appointed for settling the disputes in the suit and the parties agreed to abide by his decision. The plaint, the written statement and the other records were agreed to be sent to him for his decision, and if the arbitrator was thus directed to make his award after perusing the plaint and the written statement which were given to him by the Court along with the order, we do not see why the arbitrator went to the plaintiff and defendant 1 and recorded their statements. The statement given by the plaintiff to the arbitrator did not mention anything beyond the request that he should peruse the plaint and written statement and give his decision according to law and justice. The statement which was obtained from the defendant 1 however did not merely repeat this request but contained several statements of fact, which did not find a place in his written statement. These statements were as follows :—

“(2) It is seen from the Government accounts that as per the settlement made by her husband, the lands given to her have been in her possession.”

“(3) Just like the plaintiff has her jewels in her possession, the other females in the house have their jewels in their respective possession only. The undivided family has no manner of right therein.”

“and (4) Considering the domestic circumstances, our elder brother provided maintenance for the third wife, the plaintiff just as he had provided maintenance for his second wife.”

These statements constituted evidence given by the defendant 1 in addition to the averments contained in his written statement and it is futile for the defendant 1 to contend that in obtaining the statement Exhibit No. 5 from him the arbitrator merely obtained from him a narration of what was already found in his written statement.

This position is confirmed when one turns to the award. The arbitrator stated that the Court had directed him to make the award after perusing the plaint and the written statements of the Plaintiff and the Defendant and that it had given him the plaint and the written statement along with the order. He however proceeded to state that in pursuance of the order he took statements from the Plaintiff as well as the Defendant 1 who was the manager of the Defendant's family. He further stated that he had perused the settlement which the Defendant 1 alleged as having been made on 1st May, 1927, in favour of the Plaintiff and proceeded to award to the Plaintiff 8 acres 17 cents of land bearing Survey No. 507 in addition to the 40 acres of land already given by the deceased to her. It is clear from the terms of this award that the arbitrator took into consideration not only the plaint and the written statements of the parties but also the statement which he had obtained from the Defendant 1 and the will dated 1st May, 1927.

There is thus no doubt that the arbitrator heard the Defendant 1 in the absence of the Plaintiff. No notice of this hearing was given by the arbitrator to the Plaintiff nor had she an opportunity of having the evidence of the Defendant 1 taken in her presence so that she could suggest cross-examination or herself cross-examine the Defendant 1 and also be able to find evidence, if she could, that would meet and answer the evidence given by the Defendant 1. As was observed by Lord Langdale, M.R., in *Harvey v. Shelton*¹.

“It is so ordinary a principle in the administration of justice, that no party to a cause can be allowed to use any means whatsoever to influence the mind of the Judge which means are not known to and capable of being met and resisted by the other party, that it is impossible, for a moment, not to see that this was an extremely indiscreet mode of proceeding, to say the very least of it. It is contrary to every principle to allow of such a thing and I wholly deny the difference which is alleged to exist between mercantile arbitrations and legal arbitrations. The first principles of justice must be equally applied in every case. Except in the few cases where exceptions are unavoidable, both sides must be heard, and each in the presence of the other. In every case in which matters are litigated, you must attend to the representations made on both sides, and you must not, in the administration of justice, in whatever form, whether in the regularly constituted Courts or in arbitrations, whether before lawyers or merchants, permit one side to use means of influencing the conduct and the decisions of the Judge, which means are not known to the other side.”

This case of *Harvey v. Shelton*¹ is the leading case on this point and it has been followed not only in England but in India. (See *Ganes Narayan Singh v. Malida Koer*².) She had also no opportunity to have her say in the matter of the settlement of 1st May, 1927. The course of proceeding adopted by the arbitrator was obviously contrary to the principles of natural justice.

1. (1844) 7 Beav. 455 at p. 462.

2. (1911) 13 C.L.J. 392 at pages 401, 402.

Shri S. P. Sinha however urged before us that no prejudice was caused to the Plaintiff by reason of the arbitrator having obtained the statement Ex. No. 5 from Defendant 1 and that therefore the arbitrator was not guilty of legal misconduct. This contention is unsound. The arbitrator may be a most respectable man; but even so, his conduct cannot be reconciled to general principles. "A Judge must not take upon himself to say, whether evidence improperly admitted had or had not an effect upon his mind. The award may have done perfect justice; but upon general principles it cannot be supported." [Per Lord Eldon, Lord Chancellor in (1801) 6 Ves. Jun. 70 at page 72 : 31 E.R. 943].

To the same effect are the observations of Lord Justice Knight Bruce in *Haigh v. Haigh*¹:

"It is true that he states in his affidavit that he did not allow those explanations to influence him in his report upon the accounts, and I have no doubt he honestly intended this to be the case; but it is impossible to gauge the influence which such statements have upon the mind."

We must hold without meaning the least reflection on the arbitrator, that he was guilty of legal misconduct and that was sufficient to vitiate the award.

Shri S. P. Sinha then urged that the plaintiff had waived her right if any to challenge the award on the ground of legal misconduct. No waiver however was pleaded by the Defendant 1 and it was not competent to him to urge this contention at this stage before us.

The result therefore is that the judgment of the High Court cannot stand. We allow the appeal, set aside the judgment and decree passed by the High Court and restore the judgment and decree passed by the trial Court with costs throughout.

Execution—Refusal of petitioner's application for adjournment and dismissal of execution petition without informing petitioner or his advocate—Court correcting the error in exercise of its inherent powers and setting aside the dismissal—Jurisdiction—Order if appealable—Revision if lies—Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908), sections 47, 115 and 151—Scope.

Where a Subordinate Judge after dismissing an application for adjournment at the same time dismissed the execution petition without informing the decree-holder's Counsel that the request for adjournment had been refused and without calling upon him to state what he wanted done in the matter in those circumstances, the Subordinate Judge has jurisdiction on his own initiative, in the exercise of his inherent powers to correct his own error. It was not necessary for him to investigate into the correctness of the various allegations and counter-allegations made by the parties. He was the best judge of the procedure that was usually adopted in his Court in such cases.

The High Court had no jurisdiction in the exercise of its appellate jurisdiction to reverse this decision. The proceedings that commenced with the decree-holder's application for restoration of the execution and terminated with the order of revival can in no sense be said to relate to the determination of any question concerning the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree. Such proceedings are in their nature collateral to the execution and are independent of it.

An order under section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code, simpliciter is not appealable and such an order is not included in the category of appealable orders mentioned in section 104 and Order XLIII, rule 1 of the Code.

Nor is it proper for the High Court to entertain an appeal in the guise of a revision. The errors contemplated in section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure relate to the material defects of procedure and not to errors of either law or fact after the formalities which the law prescribes have been complied with. They do not refer to the decision arrived at but to the manner in which it is reached.

On appeal from the Judgment and Decree dated the 17th/21st February, 1947, of the High Court of Judicature at Calcutta (Mukherjea and Biswas, JJ.) in Appeal from Original Order No. 62 of 1946 with cross-objection and Civil Revision Case No. 657 of 1946 arising out of Judgment and Order dated the 13th March, 1946, of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Howrah, in Title Execution Case No. 68 of 1936.

Mahajan, J.—These are two cross-appeals from the decision of the High Court at Calcutta in its appellate jurisdiction dated 17th February, 1947, modifying the order of the Subordinate Judge of Howrah in title execution case No. 68 of 1936.

The litigation culminating in these appeals commenced about thirty years ago. In the year 1923, one Durga Prasad Chamria instituted a suit against the respondents, Radha Kissen Chamria, Motilal Chamria and their mother Anardevi Sethani (since deceased) for specific performance of an agreement for sale of an immoveable property in Howrah claiming a sum of Rs. 11,03,063-8-3 and other reliefs. The suit was eventually decreed on compromise on the 19th April, 1926. Under the compromise decree the plaintiff became entitled to a sum of Rs. 8,61,000 from the respondents with interest at 6½ per cent. with yearly rests from the date fixed for payment till realisation. Part of the decretal sum was payable on the execution of the solenama and the rest by instalments within eighteen months of that date.

Within fifteen months from the date of the decree a sum of Rs. 10,00,987-15-6 is said to have been paid towards satisfaction of it. No steps were taken either by the judgment-debtors or the decree-holder regarding certification of most of those payments within the time prescribed by law. The judgment-debtors after the expiry of a long time made an application for certification but the decree-holder vehemently resisted it and declined to admit the payments. The result was that the Court only recorded the payment of the last three instalments which had been made within ninety days before the application and the judgment-debtors had to commence a regular suit against the decree-holder for recovery of the amounts paid, and not admitted in the execution proceedings. In the year 1929 a decree was passed in favour of the judgment-debtors for the amount paid by them and not certified in the execution. In the meantime the decree-holder had realized further amounts in execution of the decree by taking out execution proceedings on two or three occasions. The amount for which a decree had been passed against the decree-holder was also thereafter adjusted towards the amount due under the consent decree.

On the 17th March, 1933, the decree was assigned by Durga Prasad to the appellant Keshardeo Chamria. The execution proceedings out of which these appeals arise were started by the assignee on the 10th October, 1936, for the realization of Rs. 4,20,693-8-9 and interest and costs. This execution had a chequered career. To begin with, the judgment-debtors raised an objection that the assignee being a mere benamidar of Durga Prasad Chamria had no locus standi to take out execution. This dispute eventually ended in favour of the assignee after about five years' fight and it was held that the assignment was bona fide and Keshardeo was not a benamidar of the decree-holder.

On the 17th July, 1942, Keshardeo made an application for attachment of various new properties of the judgment-debtors and for their arrest. Another set of objections was filed against this application by Radha Kissen Chamria. He disputed the correctness of the decretal amount, and contended that a certain payment of Rs. 1,60,000 should be recorded and certified as made on the 28th May, 1934, and not on the date the sum was actually paid to the decree-holder. This objection was decided by the Subordinate Judge on the 11th September, 1942, and it was held that the judgment-debtors were liable to pay interest on the sum of Rs. 1,60,000 up to the 12th October, 1936, and not up to the 4th July, 1941, as claimed by the assignee. On appeal the High Court by its judgment dated the 22nd June, 1943, upheld the decree-holder's contention, and ruled that the judgment-debtors were liable to pay interest up to the 4th July, 1941, on this sum of Rs. 1,60,000. The judgment-debtors then applied for leave to appeal to the Privy Council against this decision and leave was granted. On the 13th February, 1945, an application was made to withdraw the appeals, and withdrawal was allowed by an order of the Court dated the 20th February, 1945. Thus the resistance offered by the judgment-debtors to the decree-holder's application of the 17th July, 1942, ended on the 20th February, 1945.

The records of the execution case were then sent back by the High Court and reached the Howrah Court on the 28th February, 1945. The decree-holder's counsel was informed of the arrival of the records by an order dated the 2nd March, 1945. The hearing of the case was fixed for the 5th March, 1945. On the 5th March, 1945, the Court made the following order :

"Decree-holder prays for time to take necessary steps. The case is adjourned to 10th March, 1945, for order. Decree-holder to take necessary steps by that date positively."

The decree-holder applied for further adjournment of the case and on the 10th, the Court passed an order in these terms :

"Decree-holder prays for time again to give necessary instructions to his pleader for taking necessary steps. The petition for time is rejected. The execution case is dismissed on part satisfaction."

When the decree-holder was apprised of this order, he on the 19th March, 1945, made an application under section 151, Civil Procedure Code, for restoration of the execution and for setting aside the order of dismissal. On this application notice was issued to the judgment-debtors who raised a number of objections against the decree-holder's petition to revive the execution. By an order dated the 25th April, 1945, the Subordinate Judge granted the decree-holder's prayer and ordered restoration of the execution. The operative part of the order is in these terms :

"On 10th March, 1945, the decree-holder again prayed for time for the purpose of giving necessary instructions to his pleader for taking steps. That petition was rejected by me. On 10th March, 1945, by the same order—I mean the order rejecting the petition for adjournment—I dismissed the execution case on part satisfaction. The learned counsel on behalf of the present petitioner wants me to vacate the order by which I have dismissed the execution case on part satisfaction. He has invoked the aid of section 151, Civil Procedure Code, for cancellation of this order and the consequent restoration of the execution case. I would discuss at the very outset as to whether I was justified in dismissing the execution case in the same order after rejecting the petition of the decree-holder for an adjournment without giving him an opportunity to his pleader to make any submission he might have to make after the rejection of the petition for time. It is clear from the order that the fact that the petition for time filed by the decree-holder on 10th March, 1945, was rejected by me was not brought to the notice of the pleader for the decree-holder. It seems to me that there was denial of justice to the decree-holder in the present execution proceeding inasmuch as it was a sad omission on my part not to communicate his pleader the result of this petition he made praying for an adjournment of this execution proceeding and at the same time to dismiss the execution case on part satisfaction which has brought about consequences highly prejudicial to the interest of the decree-holder. I think section 151, Civil Procedure Code, is the only section which empowers me to rectify the sad omission I have made in not communicating to the pleader for the decree-holder as to the fate of his application for an adjournment of the execution case and as such I would vacate the order passed by me dismissing the execution case on part satisfaction. The ends of justice for which the Court exists demand such rectification and I would do it. The learned Advocate-General on behalf of the judgment-debtor Radha Kissen has argued before me that this Court has no jurisdiction to vacate the order passed by me on 10th March, 1945, dismissing the execution case on part satisfaction. His argument is that section 48, Civil Procedure Code, stands in my way inasmuch as the law of limitation as provided in the above section debars the relief as sought for by the decree-holder in the present application. I do not question the soundness of this argument advanced by the learned Advocate-General. The facts of this case bring home the fact that in the present case I am rectifying a sad omission made by me which brought about practically a denial of justice to the decree-holder, and as such the operation of section 48, Civil Procedure Code, does not come to the assistance of the judgment-debtor Radha Kissen."

It would have saved considerable expense and trouble to the parties had the dismissal for default chapter been closed for ever by this order of the Judge; the proceedings, however, took a different course. A serious controversy raged between the parties about the correctness of this obviously just order and after seven years it is now before us. An appeal and a revision were preferred to the High Court against this order. By its judgment dated 24th August, 1945, the High Court held that no appeal lay against it as the question involved did not fall within the ambit of section 47, Civil Procedure Code. It, however, entertained the revision application and allowed it, and remanded the case to the Subordinate Judge for reconsideration and disposal in accordance with the observations made in the order. The High Court took the view that the Subordinate Judge was in error in restoring the execution without taking into consideration the point whether the decree-holder's pleader could really take any step in aid of the execution if he had been apprised of the order of the Court dismissing the adjournment application. This is what the High Court said :—

"The ground put forward by the Subordinate Judge in support of his order for restoration is that the order rejecting the adjournment petition should have been communicated to the pleader for the decree-holder but this was not done. We will assume that this was an omission on the part of the Court. The question now is whether it was possible for the decree-holder to take any further steps in connection with the execution of the decree and thereby prevent the execution case from being dismissed for default. No evidence was taken by the learned Subordinate Judge on this point and even the pleader who was in charge of the execution case on behalf of the decree-holder was not examined If really the decree-holder was not in a position to state on that day as to what was the amount due under the decree for which he wanted the execution to be levied and if according to him it required elaborate accounting for the purpose of arriving at the proper figure it was not possible for him to ask the Court to issue any process by way of attachment of the property on that date. It seems to us that the learned Judge should have considered this matter properly and he should have found on proper material as to whether the decree-holder could really take any steps after the application for adjournment was disallowed."

In sharp contrast to the opinion contained in the order of remand is the view now expressed by the High Court on this point in its final judgment under appeal :

"One important circumstance which, in our opinion, tells in favour of the decree-holder is the fact we have noticed before, namely, that after the petition for time was rejected the Court did not call on the execution case and otherwise intimate its decision to go on with it. In one sense this might be regarded as a mere error of procedure on the part of the Court which it would be wrong to tallow the decree-holder to take advantage of, but an error it was, as was admitted by the learned Judge himself who had dealt with the matter, and we do not think his opinion can be lightly brushed aside. There can be no doubt that the learned Judge was in the best position to speak as regards the actual proceedings in his Court on the 10th March, 1945, and if he thought that it amounted to a denial of justice to have rejected the petition for time and by the same order to dismiss the execution case, it is not for us to say that he was not right. It may well be that even if the case was called on the decree-holder's pleader would even then have been absent, but having regard to all the facts and circumstances of the case, we think the Court might yet give the decree-holder the benefit of doubt in this matter, and assume in his favour that his pleader would have appeared before the learned Judge and tried to avert a peremptory dismissal of the execution case, even though he or his client might not have been fully ready with all necessary materials for continuing the execution proceeding."

As we have pointed out before and as the Court below has also found, it was possible for the decree-holder or his pleader to have submitted to the Court some sort of an account of the decretal dues on that date after refusal of the adjournment but even if this could not be done, we still believe that the pleader, if he appeared, could have done something, either by drawing the Court's attention to some of its previous orders or otherwise, by which a dismissal of the case might be prevented."

It was not difficult to envisage what the counsel would have done when faced with such a dilemma. He would have straightaway stated that the execution should issue for an amount which was roughly known to him, and that the Court should issue a process for the arrest of the judgment-debtors. By such a statement he would have saved the dismissal without any detriment to his client who could later make another application stating the precise amount due and praying for additional reliefs.

After remand on the 13th March, 1946, the learned Subordinate Judge restored the execution case in respect of a sum of Rs. 92,000 only and maintained the order of dismissal in other respects. He held that the decree-holder was grossly negligent on the 5th and the 10th March, 1945, and that due to his negligence the execution case was dismissed in default; that even if his pleader had been informed of the order rejecting the application for adjournment he could not have taken any steps to prevent the dismissal of the execution; that the execution being now barred by limitation the judgment-debtors should not be deprived of the valuable rights acquired by them but at the same time they should not be allowed to retain the advantage of an acknowledgment of a debt of Rs. 92,000 made by the decree-holder.

Both the decree-holder and the judgment-debtors were dissatisfied with this order. The decree-holder preferred an appeal to the High Court and also filed an application under section 115, Civil Procedure Code. The judgment-debtors filed cross-objections in the appeal and also preferred an alternative application in revision.

The appeal, the cross-objections and the two revision applications were disposed of together by the High Court by its judgment, dated 17th February, 1947. The order dismissing the execution in default was set aside and the case was restored on terms. The decree-holder was held disentitled to interest on the decretal amount from 10th March, 1945, to the date of final ascertainment of the amount of such interest by the executing Court and was ordered to pay to the judgment-debtors a consolidated sum of Rs. 20,000 by way of compensatory costs. He was to pay this amount to the judgment-debtors within two weeks of the arrival of the records in the executing Court or have it certified in the execution. In default the appeal was to stand dismissed with costs and the cross-objections decreed with costs.

An application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council against this order was made by the judgment-debtors and leave was granted to them on 30th May, 1947. The decree-holder also applied for leave and he was granted leave on 27th June, 1947. Both the appeals were consolidated by an order of the Court dated 4th December, 1947, and thereafter the appeals were transferred to this Court.

On behalf of the decree-holder it was contended that the High Court was wrong in allowing the judgment-debtors Rs. 20,000 by way of compensation for costs, and that having regard to the terms of the compromise decree it had no jurisdiction to deprive the decree-holder of the interest allowed to him by the decree, and that it has neither power nor jurisdiction under section 115, Civil Procedure Code, to set aside the order dated 25th April, 1945, passed by Mr. Chakravarti, Subordinate Judge, under section 151 of the said Code and that the interlocutory remand order of the High Court being without jurisdiction, all subsequent proceedings taken thereafter were null and void.

The learned counsel for the judgment-debtors not only supported the judgment of the High Court to the extent it went in their favour but contended that the High Court should have refused to restore the execution altogether and that the assumption made by it that the decree-holder's pleader could do something to prevent the dismissal of the case or could present some sort of statement to the Court was wholly unwarranted and unjustifiable. It was urged that it ought to have been held that the decree-holder was guilty of gross negligence and he was himself responsible for the dismissal of the case, and that it was not necessary to formally call on the case after the rejection of the petition for adjournment and that a valuable right having accrued to the judgment-debtors by efflux of time, they should not have been deprived of it in the exercise of the inherent powers of the Court.

It is unnecessary to consider all the points taken in these appeals because, in our opinion, the point canvassed on behalf of the decree-holder that the order of remand was without jurisdiction and that all the proceedings taken subsequent to the order of the executing Court reviving the execution were void, has force. The sole ground on which the Subordinate Judge had ordered restoration of the execution was that he had himself made a sad mistake in dismissing it at the same time that he dismissed the adjournment application without informing the decree-holder's counsel that the request for adjournment had been refused and without calling upon him to state what he wanted done in the matter in those circumstances. As the Subordinate Judge was correcting his own error in the exercise of his inherent powers, it was not necessary for him to investigate into the correctness of the various allegations and counter-allegations made by parties. He was the best Judge of the procedure that was usually adopted in his Court in such cases and there is no reason whatsoever for the supposition that when the Subordinate Judge said that he had not given any opportunity to the decree-holder's pleader to take any steps in execution of the decree after the dismissal of the adjournment application he was not right. It could not be seriously suggested that such an opportunity was given to the decree-holder, the dismissal order of the execution having been made at the same moment of time as the order dismissing the application for adjournment. It is quite clear that the interests of justice demanded that the decree-holder's pleader should have been informed that his request for adjournment had been refused, and further given opportunity to state what he wanted done in that situation. It was wholly unnecessary in such circumstances to speculate what the pleader would have done when faced with that situation. The solid fact remains that he was not given that opportunity and that being so, the order dismissing the execution was bad and was rightly corrected by the Court on its own initiative in the exercise of its inherent powers.

The point for determination then is whether such an order could be set aside by the High Court either in the exercise of its appellate or revisional powers. It is plain that the High Court had no jurisdiction in the exercise of its appellate jurisdiction to reverse this decision. In the remand order itself it was held that it was difficult to say that the order by itself amounted to a final determination of any question relating to execution, discharge or satisfaction of a decree, and that being so, it did not fall within the ambit of section 47, Civil Procedure Code. We are in entire agreement with this observation. The proceedings that commenced with the decree-holder's application for restoration of the execution and terminated with the order of revival can in no sense be said to relate to the determination of any question concerning the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree. Such proceedings are in their nature collateral to the execution and are independent of it.

It was not contended and could not be seriously urged, that an order under section 151 simpliciter is appealable. Under the Code of Civil Procedure certain specific orders mentioned in section 104 and Order XLIII, Rule 1 only are appealable and no appeal lies from any other orders (vide section 105, Civil Procedure Code). An order made under section 151 is not included in the category of appealable orders.

In support of his contention that an order made under section 151 may in certain circumstances be appealable, Mr. Daphtary placed reliance on two single Judge judgments of the Madras High Court and on a Bench decision of Oudh. (*Vide Akshia Pillai v. Govindarajulu Chetty*¹; *Govinda Padayachi v. Velu Murugiah Chettiar*²; *Noor Mohammad v. Sulaiman Khan*³). In all these cases execution sale had been set aside by the Court in exercise of inherent powers and it was held that such orders were appealable. The ratio of the decision in the first Madras case is by no means very clear and the reasoning is somewhat dubious. In the other two cases the orders were held appealable on the ground that they fell within the ambit of section 47, Civil Procedure Code, read with section 151. It is unnecessary to examine the correctness of these decisions as they have no bearing on the point before us, there being no analogy between an order setting aside an execution sale and an order setting aside the dismissal of an application. The High Court was thus right in upholding the preliminary objection that no appeal lay from the order of the Subordinate Judge, dated 25th April, 1945.

We now proceed to consider whether a revision was competent against the order of the 25th April, 1945, when no appeal lay. It seems to us that in this matter really the High Court entertained an appeal in the guise of a revision. The revisional jurisdiction of the High Court is set out in the 115th section of the Code of Civil Procedure in these terms :

"The High Court may call for the record of any case which has been decided by any Court subordinate to such High Court and in which no appeal lies thereto, and if such subordinate Court appears :

- (a) to have exercised a jurisdiction not vested in it by law, or
 - (b) to have failed to exercise a jurisdiction so vested, or
 - (c) to have acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity,
- the High Court may make such order in the case as it thinks fit."

A large number of cases have been collected in the fourth edition of Chitale and Rao's Code of Civil Procedure (Volume I), which only serve to show that the High Courts have not always appreciated the limits of the jurisdiction conferred by this section. In *Mohunt Bhagwan Ramanuj Das v. Khetter Mani Dassi*¹, the High Court of Calcutta expressed the opinion that sub-clause (c) of section 115, Civil Procedure Code, was intended to authorise the High Courts to interfere and correct gross and palpable errors of subordinate Courts, so as to prevent grave injustice in non-appealable cases. This decision was, however, dissented from by the same High Court in *Enat Mondul v. Baloram Dey*², but was cited with approval by Lord-Williams, J., in *Gulabchand Bangur v. Kabiruddin Ahmed*³. In these circumstances it is worthwhile recalling again to mind the decisions of the Privy Council on this subject and the limits stated therein for the exercise of jurisdiction conferred by this section on the High Courts.

As long ago as 1894, in *Rajah Amir Hassen Khan v. Sheo Baksh Singh*⁴, the Privy Council made the following observations on section 622 of the former Code of Civil Procedure, which was replaced by section 115 of the Code of 1908 :—

"The question then is, did the Judges of the lower courts in this case, in the exercise of their jurisdiction, act illegally or with material irregularity. It appears that they had perfect jurisdiction to decide the case, and even if they decided wrongly, they did not exercise their jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity."

In 1917 again in *Balakrishna Udayar v. Vasudeva Aiyar*⁵, the Board observed :—

"It will be observed that the section applies to jurisdiction alone, the irregular exercise or non-exercise of it, or the illegal assumption of it. The section is not directed against conclusions of law or fact in which the question of jurisdiction is not involved."

In 1949 in *Venkatagiri Ayyangar v. Hindu Religious Endowments Board, Madras*⁶, the Privy Council again examined the scope of section 115 and observed that they could see no justification for the view that the section was intended to authorise the High Court to interfere and correct gross and palpable errors of subordinate courts so as to prevent grave injustice in non-appealable cases and that it would be difficult to formulate any standard by which the degree of error of subordinate courts could be measured. It was said—

"Section 115 applies only to cases in which no appeal lies, and, where the legislature has provided no right of appeal, the manifest intention is that the order of the trial court, right or wrong, shall be final. The section empowers the High Court to satisfy itself on three matters, (a) that the order of the subordinate court is within its jurisdiction; (b) that the case is one in which the court ought to exercise jurisdiction; and (c) that in exercising jurisdiction the court has not acted illegally, that is, in breach of some provision of law, or with material irregularity, that is, by committing some error of procedure in the course of the trial which is material in that it may have affected the ultimate decision. If the High Courts is satisfied on those three matters, it has no power to interfere because it differs, however profoundly, from the conclusions of the subordinate court on questions of fact or law."

Later in the same year in *Joy Chand Lal Babu v. Kamalaksha Chaudhury*¹, their Lordships had again adverted to this matter and reiterated what they had said in their earlier decision. They pointed out—

"There have been a very large number of decisions of Indian High Courts on section 115 to many of which their Lordships have been referred. Some of such decisions prompt the observation that High Courts have not always appreciated that although error in a decision of a subordinate court does not by itself involve that the subordinate court has acted illegally or with material irregularity so as to justify interference in revision under sub-section (c), nevertheless, if the erroneous decision results in the subordinate court exercising a jurisdiction not vested in it by law, or failing to exercise a jurisdiction so vested, a case for revision arises under sub-section (a) or sub-section (b) and sub-section (c) can be ignored."

Reference may also be made to the observations of Bose, J., in his order of reference in *Narayan Sonaji v. Sheshrao Vithoba*² wherein it was said that the words "illegally" and "material irregularity" do not cover either errors of fact or law. They do not refer to the decision arrived at but to the manner in which it is reached. The errors contemplated relate to material defects of procedure and not to errors of either law or fact after the formalities which the law prescribes have been complied with.

We are therefore of the opinion that in reversing the order of the executing court dated the 25th April, 1945, reviving the execution, the High Court exercised jurisdiction not conferred on it by section 115 of the Code. It is plain that the order of the Subordinate Judge dated the 25th April, 1945, was one that he had jurisdiction to make, that in making that order he neither acted in excess of his jurisdiction nor did he assume jurisdiction which he did not possess. It could not be said that in the exercise of it he acted with material irregularity or committed any breach of the procedure laid down for reaching the result. All that happened was that he felt that he had committed an error in dismissing the main execution while he was merely dealing with an adjournment application. It cannot be said that his omission in not taking into consideration what the decree-holder's pleader would have done had he been given the opportunity to make his submission amounts to material irregularity in the exercise of jurisdiction. This speculation was hardly relevant in the view of the case that he took. The Judge had jurisdiction to correct his own error without entering into a discussion of the grounds taken by the decree-holder or the objections raised by the judgment-debtors. We are satisfied therefore that the High Court acted in excess of its jurisdiction when it entertained an application in revision against the order of the Subordinate Judge dated the 25th April, 1945 and set it aside in exercise of that jurisdiction and remanded the case for further enquiry.

The result therefore is that Appeal No. 12 of 1951 is allowed, as the interlocutory remand order of the High Court was one without jurisdiction and that being so, the subsequent proceedings taken in consequence of it, viz., the order of the Subordinate Judge restoring the application for execution to the extent of Rs. 92,000, the further order of the High Court on appeal restoring the execution case on terms, are null and void and have to be set aside and the order of the executing court dated the 25th April, 1945, restored. We order accordingly. Appeal No. 13 of 1951 is dismissed.

In the peculiar circumstances of this case we direct that the parties be left to bear their own costs throughout, that is, those incurred by them in the High Court in the proceedings which terminated with the remand order, the costs incurred in the subordinate court after the remand order, and the costs thereafter incurred in the High Court and those incurred in this court in these appeals.

Will—Construction—Absolute or limited estate—Tests—Use of words “absolute owner” and “generation after generation”—Effect—Restraint against alienation—Validity—Successive life estates—Validity.

Avadh Estates Act (I of 1869)—Sections 11 and 12—Scope.

The words “absolute estate” (Malik Kamil) and “generation after generation” (Naslan bad naslan) used with reference to estate conferred under a will no doubt are descriptive of a heritable and alienable estate in the donee and they connote full proprietary rights unless there is something in the context or in the surrounding circumstances which indicate that absolute rights were not intended to be conferred. In all such cases the true intention of the testator has to be gathered not by attaching importance to isolated expressions but by reading the will as a whole with all its provisions and ignoring none of them as redundant or contradictory.

Where the dominant intention of the testator was to make provision not for the donee alone but for the benefit of his heirs and successors “generation after generation”, the expression “heirs” in the context will mean the donee’s heirs determined according to the general law of inheritance and not the successors to the estate under the special provisions of the Oudh Estates Act (which governed the parties in the instant case). In the instant case the beneficiaries under the will were the donee and his heirs in succession and in each such heir or set of heirs the rights of malik are given but without any power of alienation. Where the restrictions on alienations are the primary things which the testator desires and they are consistent with the whole tenor of the will, it is a material circumstance to be relied upon for displacing the presumption of absolute ownership implied in the use of the word “malik”.

When a gift is made to a class or series of persons, some of whom are in existence and some are not, it does not fail in its entirety; it is valid with regard to the persons who are in existence at the time of the testator’s death and is invalid as to the rest. The widow of the donee who was in existence at the time of the testator’s death is entitled to take a life estate.

The Oudh Estates Act does not interdict the creation of future estates and limitations provided they do not transgress the rule against perpetuities contained in sections 11 and 12 of the Act.

On appeal from the judgment and decree dated the 4th September, 1946, of the late Chief Court of Oudh, now the High Court of Judicature at Allahabad (Lucknow Bench), (Misra and Walford, JJ.) in First Civil Appeal No. 139 of 1941, arising out of judgment and decree dated the 23rd October, 1941, of the Court of the Civil Judge, Bahraich, in Regular Suit No. 1 of 1941.

Onkar Nath Srivastava, Advocate for Appellant.

Bishan Singh, Advocate for Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Mukherjea, J.—This appeal is on behalf of the plaintiff and is directed against a judgment and decree of the Chief Court of Avadh dated 4th September, 1946, affirming, on appeal, those of the Civil Judge, Bahraich, passed in Regular Suit No. 1 of 1941.

To appreciate the controversy between the parties to this appeal it would be necessary to state a few facts. One Raja Bisheshwar Bux Singh, the father of the plaintiff and of the defendant’s husband, was a taluqdar of Oudh, and the estate known as Gangwal Estate, to which he succeeded in 1925 on the death of the widow of the last holder, is one to which the Oudh Estates Act (I of 1869) applies. Raja Bisheshwar died on 16th October, 1930, leaving behind him two sons, the elder of whom Bajrang Bahadur is the plaintiff in the present litigation; while the younger, whose name was Dhuj Singh, has died since then, being survived by his widow Bhaktraj Kuer, who is the defendant in the suit. Shortly before his death, Raja Bisheshwar executed a will dated 11th September, 1929, by which five properties, described in lists A and B attached to the plaint, were bequeathed to Dhuj Singh, the younger son, by way of making provisions for the maintenance of the said son and his heirs. On the death of Raja Bisheshwar, the estate went to the plaintiff as his eldest son under the provisions of the Oudh Estates Act and Dhuj Singh got only the five properties mentioned above under the terms of his father's will. Dhuj Singh had no issue of his own and on his death in 1940 disputes arose in respect of these properties between the plaintiff on the one hand and Dhuj Singh's widow on the other. The plaintiff succeeded at first in having his name mutated as owner of these properties in the revenue records in place of his deceased brother, but the appellate revenue authority ultimately set aside this order and directed mutation to be made in the name of the defendant. The plaintiff thereupon commenced the suit out of which this appeal arises, praying for declaration of his title to the five properties mentioned above on the allegation that they vested in him on the death of Dhuj Singh and that the defendant could not, in law, assert any right to the same. It may be stated here that four out of these five properties have been described in list A to the plaint and there is no dispute that they are taluqdari properties. The fifth item is set out in list B and admittedly this property is not taluqdari in its character. Besides lists A and B there is a third list, viz., C attached to the plaint, which mentions two other properties as being in possession of the defendant and in the plaint a claim was made on behalf of the plaintiff in respect to these properties as well although they were not covered by the will of Bisheshwar. This claim, however, was abandoned in course of the trial and we are not concerned with it in the present appeal.

The plaintiff really rested his case on a two-fold ground. It was averred in the first place that Dhuj Singh had only a life interest in the properties bequeathed to him by Bisheshwar and on the termination of his life interest, the property vested in the plaintiff as the heir of the late Raja. In the alternative the case put forward was that even if Dhuj Singh had an absolute interest created in his favour under the terms of his father's will, the plaintiff was entitled to succeed to the taluqdari properties at any rate, under the provision of section 14 (b) read with section 22 (5) of the Oudh Estates Act.

The defendant in her written statement resisted the plaintiff's claim primarily on the ground that Bisheshwar Bux Singh, as the full owner of the properties, was competent to dispose of them in any way he liked and under his will it was the defendant and not the plaintiff in whom the properties vested after the death of Dhuj Singh. The contention, in substance, was that the will created a life estate for Dhuj Singh followed by a devise in favour of the widow as his personal heir.

The decision of the point in dispute between the parties thus hinges on the proper construction of the will left by Bisheshwar. The trial Court after an elaborate consideration of the different portions of the will, viewed in the light of surrounding circumstances, came to the conclusion that Dhuj Singh got a life interest in the devised properties but there were similar life estates created in favour of his personal heirs in succession, the ultimate remainder being given to the holder of the estate when the line of personal heirs would become extinct. The defendant, therefore, was held entitled to the suit properties so long as she was alive and in that view the plaintiff's suit was dismissed. Against this decision, the plaintiff took an appeal to the Chief Court of Avadh and the Chief Court affirmed the decision of the trial Judge and dismissed the appeal. The plaintiff has now come up to this Court on the strength of a certificate granted by the High Court of Allahabad with which the Chief Court of Avadh was amalgamated sometime after the disposal of this case.

The learned counsel appearing for the appellant first of all drew our attention to the provisions contained in certain sections of the Oudh Estates Act and it was urged by him on the basis of these provisions that as Dhuj Singh, who got the suit properties under the will of his father, the late taluqdar, came within the category of persons enumerated in clause (1) of section 13-A, Oudh Estates Act, he could, under section 14 of the Act, hold the properties subject to the same conditions and the same rules of succession as were applicable to the taluqdar himself. In these circumstances, it is said that the provisions of section 22 (5) of the Act would be attracted to the facts of this case and the plaintiff, as the brother of Dhuj Singh, would be entitled to succeed to the properties of the latter in preference to his widow.

The argument formulated in this way does not appear to us to be helpful to the appellant. Section 11 of the Oudh Estates Act confers very wide powers of disposition upon a taluqdar and he is competent under the section :

"to transfer the whole or any portion of his estate, or of his right and interest therein, during his lifetime, by sale, exchange, mortgage, lease or gift, and to bequeath by his will to any person the whole or any portion of such estate, and interest."

Sections 13 and 13-A make certain special provisions in cases of transfers by way of gift and bequest in favour of certain specified persons and lay down the formalities which are to be complied with in such cases. Section 14 then provides that "if any taluqdar or grantee, or his heir or legatee, shall heretofore have transferred or bequeathed, or if any taluqdar or grantee, or his heir or legatee shall hereafter transfer or bequeath the whole or any portion of his estate—

(b) to any of the persons mentioned in clauses (1) and (2) of section 13-A, the transferee or legatee and his heirs and legatees shall have same rights and powers in regard to the property to which he or they may have become entitled under or by virtue of such transfer or bequest, and shall hold the same subject to the same conditions and to the same rules of succession as the transferor or testator."

It is true that Dhuj Singh being a younger son of the testator came within the purview of clause (1) of section 13-A of the Oudh Estates Act and if he became full owner of the properties under the will of his father, succession to such properties after his death would certainly be regulated by the special rules of succession laid down in the Oudh Estates Act, and not by the ordinary law of inheritance. But section 14 would have no application if the disposition by the will did not make Dhuj Singh an absolute owner of the properties and he was given only an interest for life which was followed by subsequent interests created in favour of other persons.

It cannot also be contended that a taluqdar governed by the Oudh Estate Act cannot convey anything less than his absolute proprietary right in a property by transfer inter vivos or by will, or that it is not competent for him to create any limited interest or future estate. Apart from the plenary provision contained in section 11, section 12 of the Act which makes the rule against perpetuity applicable to transfers made by a taluqdar, furnishes a clear indication that the Act does not interdict the creation of future estates and limitations provided they do not transgress the perpetuity rule.

The questions, therefore, which require consideration in this case are really two in number. The first is, whether Dhuj Singh got an absolute estate or an estate for life in the properties given to him by the will of Raja Bisheshwar? If he got an absolute estate, the contention of the appellant should undoubtedly prevail with regard to the taluqdari properties specified in list A of the plaint. If, on the other hand, the interest was one which was to inure only for the period of his life, the further question would arise as to whether any subsequent interest was validly created by the will in favour of the widow on the strength of which she can resist the plaintiff's claim. If the life estate was created in favour of Dhuj Singh alone, obviously the plaintiff as the heir of the grantor would be entitled to come in as reversioner after his death.

The answers to both the questions would have to be given on a proper construction of the will left by Raja Bisheshwar. The will has been rightly described by the trial Judge as a most inartistic document with no pretension to any precision of language, and apparently it was drawn up by a man who was not acquainted with legal phraseology. The Civil Judge himself made a translation of the document, dividing its contents into several paragraphs and this was found useful and convenient by the learned Judges of the Chief Court. The material portions of the will, as translated by the trial Judge, may be set out as follows :—

"As I have become sufficiently old and no reliance can be placed on life, by God's grace I have got two sons, namely, Bajrang Bahadur Singh, the elder, and Dhuj Singh, the younger. After my death the elder son would, according to rule, become the Raja, the younger one is simply entitled to maintenance.

(1) Consequently with a view that after my death the younger son and his heirs and successors, generation after generation, may not feel any trouble and that there may not be any quarrel between them.

(2) I have decided after a full consideration that I should execute a will in favour of Dhuj Singh with respect to the villages detailed below.

(3) So that after my death Dhuj Singh may remain in possession of those villages as an absolute owner with the reservation that he will have no right of transfer.

(4) If God forbid, Dhuj Singh may not be living at the time of my death, his son or whoever may be his male heir or widow may remain in possession of the said villages on payment of the Government Revenue as an absolute owner,

(5) The liability for the land revenue of the said villages will be with Dhuj Singh and his heirs and successors; the estate will have no concern with it.

(6) Although Dhuj Singh and his heirs are not given the power of transfer, they will exercise all other rights of absolute ownership, that is to say, the result is that the proprietor of the estate or my other heirs and successors will not eject Dhuj Singh or his heirs or successors in any way.

(7) Of course if Dhuj Singh or his heirs become ever heirless then the said villages will not escheat to the Government but will revert and form part of the estate.

(8) Hence with the soundness of my mind without any force or pressure and after having fully understood and also having thought it proper I execute this will in favour of Dhuj Singh, my own son, with the above-mentioned terms."

The learned counsel for the appellant naturally lays stress upon the words, "absolute owner" (Malik Kamil) and "generation after generation" (Naslan bad naslan) used in reference to the interest which Dhuj Singh was to take under the will. These words, it cannot be disputed, are descriptive of a heritable and alienable estate in the donee, and they connote full proprietary rights unless there is something in the context or in the surrounding circumstances which indicate that absolute rights were not intended to be conferred. In all such cases the true intention of the testator has to be gathered not by attaching importance to isolated expressions but by reading the will as a whole with all its provisions and ignoring none of them as redundant or contradictory.

The object of the testator in executing the will is clearly set out in the preamble to the document and in spite of the somewhat clumsy crafting that object seems to have been kept in view by the testator throughout, in making the provisions. The language and tenor of the document leave no doubt in our minds that the dominant intention of the testator was to make provisions not for Dhuj Singh alone but for the benefit of his heirs and successors, "generation after generation" as the expression has been used. The expression "heirs" in this context obviously means and refers to the personal heirs of Dhuj Singh determined according to the general law of inheritance and not the successors to the estate under the special provisions of the Oudh Estates Act, for paragraph 6 of the will mentioned above is expressly intended to protect the personal heirs of Dhuj Singh from eviction from the properties in question by the future holders of the estate.

Thus the beneficiaries under the will are Dhuj Singh himself and his heirs in succession and to each such heir or set of heirs the rights of malik are given but without any power of alienation. On the total extinction of this line of heirs the properties affected by the will are to revert to the estate. As it was the intention of the testator that the properties should remain intact till the line of Dhuj Singh was exhausted and each successor was to enjoy and hold the properties without any power of alienation, obviously what the testator wanted was to create a series of life estates one after another, the ultimate reversion being given to the parent estate when there was a complete failure of heirs. To what extent such intention could be given effect to by law is another matter and that we shall consider presently..

But it can be said without hesitation that it was not the intention of the testator to confer anything but a life estate upon Dhuj Singh in respect of the properties covered by the will. The clause in the will imposing total restraint on alienation is also a pointer in the same direction. In cases where the intention of the testator is to grant an absolute estate, an attempt to reduce the powers of the owner by imposing restraint on alienation would certainly be repelled on the ground of repugnancy; but where the restrictions are the primary things, which the testator desires and they are consistent with the whole tenor of the will, it is a material circumstance to be relied upon for displacing the presumption of absolute ownership implied in the use of the word "malik". We hold, therefore, that the courts below were right in holding that Dhuj Singh had only a life interest in the properties under the terms of his father's will.

Of course this by itself gives no comfort to the defendant; she has to establish, in order that she may be able to resist the plaintiff's claim, that the will created an independent interest in her favour following the death of Dhuj Singh. As we have said already, the testator did intend to create successive life estates in favour of the successive heirs of Dhuj Singh. This, it is contended by the appellant is not permissible in law and he relies on the case of *Tagore v. Tagore*¹. It is quite true that no interest could be created in favour of an unborn person but when the gift is made to a class or series of persons, some of whom are in existence and some are not, it does not fail in its entirety; it is valid with regard to the persons, who are in existence at the time of the testator's death and is invalid as to the rest. The widow, who is the next heir of Dhuj Singh, was in existence when the testator died and the life interest created in her favour should certainly take effect. She thus acquired under the will an interest in the suit properties after the death of her husband, commensurate with the period of her own natural life and the plaintiff consequently has no present right to possession. The result, therefore, is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Madras Estates Land (Reduction of Rent) Act (XXX of 1947)—Notification of half a village granted as dharmasanam—Validity.

Grants made to separate persons cannot be clubbed together to form a whole village for the purpose of definition of an "estate" under the Estates Land Act. It would be an a priori case if such grants were made on different dates. When only a share of the village was granted it cannot be a grant of a whole village. Such a dharmasanam village is not an estate to which Madras Act XXX of 1947 applies and the notification under that Act must be quashed.

Petition praying that in the circumstances stated in the affidavit filed therewith the High Court will be pleased to issue a writ of certiorari calling for the records of the proceedings taken by the respondent under the Madras Act XXX of 1947 with regard to the petitioners' village Athankothangudi Sikkal Zemin Taluq in the Ramanathapuram district and annul and quash the said proceedings.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for issuing a writ of certiorari to quash the order of the Government of Madras, notifying the village of Athankothangudi, under Madras Act XXX of 1947. The simple question is whether the village is an estate within the meaning of the Act. It would be an estate if originally the entire village was granted to the petitioners' ancestors. The only document filed in the case is the Inam Fair Register. The Inam Fair Register shows the history of the grant. The village was situated in the Zamindari of Ramanadhapuram. Half of the village was granted for the support of Sri Adi Jagannadhaswami in Tiruppullany and the remaining half as Dharmasanam.

The former grant was a permanent one and the latter was a hereditary grant. Column 11 of the Inam Fair Register indicates that the name of the grantor in regard to one half is not known, whereas the name of the other grantor is given as Raghunatha Sethupathi. Column 8 shows that one half was granted to Dharmasanam and the other half for the support of Sri Adi Jagannadhaswami. From the recitals of the document it is manifest that the grantors, the grantees and the purpose of the grant were all different. The Inam Commissioner confirmed the grant to two different persons and issued separate title deeds. On these facts it is not possible to hold that the Dharmasanam grant, with which I am now concerned, is a grant of a whole inam village at the time it was made. The Supreme Court in the decision in *District Board, Tanjore v. Noor Mohammad Rowther*¹, had to consider the scope of a grant, which was the subject-matter of the appeal before them. There the grant was made in one deed of different extents of a village to different persons. Even so, their Lordships expressed the view that the grant would not satisfy the definition of an estate. Mahajan, J., observed at page 590 as follows:

"It is difficult to hold positively, though it is probable, that the grant to Mudali as well as the Yerayali grant were by the same Paravangi, but even so, these will be two separate grants though written on one piece of paper, the contracting parties being two different persons. Neither of these grants can be held to be a grant of a whole village."

It follows from the abovesaid observations that the grant made to separate persons cannot be clubbed together to form a whole village for the purpose of the definition of an "estate" under the Act. It would be an a priori case if the two grants were made on different dates. When the grant was made to the petitioner's ancestor only a share of the village was granted and therefore it could not have been a grant of a whole village. I therefore hold that the Dharmasanam Athankothangudi village is not an estate to which the Act applies.

The notification, therefore, is quashed. The petitioner will have his costs.

Notification quashed.

the mills were completely destroyed. The insurance companies therefore paid the assessee company various amounts under the policies. On a question whether the amounts so received was income assessable to tax,

Held (in the circumstances) the money so paid is a receipt and in so far as it represents loss of profits, as opposed to loss of capital and so forth, it is an item of income in any normal sense of the term. The receipt is inseparably connected with the ownership and conduct of the business and arises from it. Accordingly it is not exempt.

On appeal by Special Leave from the Judgment and Order, dated the 18th March, 1949, of the High Court of Judicature at Bombay (Chagla, C.J. and Tendolkar, J.) in Income-tax Reference No. 5 of 1948, arising out of Order, dated the 27th September, 1947, of the Income-tax Appellate Tribunal, Bombay Bench 'A' in I.T.A. The Judgment of the Court was delivered by Bose, J.—This is an appeal from the High Court at Bombay in an Income-tax Reference under section 66 (1) of the Indian Income-tax Act of 1922.

The reference was made to the Bombay High Court by the Bombay Bench of the Income-tax Appellate Tribunal in the following circumstances.

The appellant-assessee is a company known as the Raghuvanshi Mills, Ltd., of Bombay. The assessment year with which we are concerned is 1945-46. The assessee had insured its buildings, plant and machinery with various insurance companies and also took out, besides those policies, four policies of a type known as a "Consequential Loss Policy." This kind of policy insures against loss of profit, standing charges and agency commission. The total insured against under the latter heads was

Rs. 37,75,000 on account of loss of profits and standing charges, and

Rs. 2,25,000 on account of agency commission, making a total of Rs. 40,00,000.

On the 18th of January, 1944, a fire broke out and the mills were completely destroyed. The various insurance companies therefore paid the assessee company an aggregate of Rs. 14,00,000 on account in the year with which we are concerned under these policies. This was paid in two sums as follows : Rs. 8,25,000 on 8th September, 1944 and Rs. 5,75,000 on 22nd December, 1944. These payments have been treated as part of the assessee's income and the company has been taxed accordingly. The question is whether these sums are or are not liable to tax.

Before we set out the question referred, it will be necessary to state that the whole of this Rs. 14,00,000 has been treated as paid on account of loss of profits. The learned Solicitor-General, who appeared for the appellant-assessee, contended that that was wrong because the portion of it assignable to Standing Charges and Agency Commission could not on any construction be liable to tax.

This contention is new and involves questions of fact and travels beyond the scope of the question referred. We are consequently not able to entertain it. It has been assumed throughout the proceedings, right up to this Court, that the whole of the Rs. 14,00,000 was assignable to loss of profits. There is nothing on the record to show that it was ever split up among the other heads or that it was ever treated as having been split up either by the insurance companies or by the assessee, nor is there any material on which we would be able to apportion it. Our decision therefore proceeds on the assumption that the whole sum is assignable to loss of profits and we make it clear that we decide nothing about other moneys which may be distributable among other heads.

° The question has been referred in these terms :—

Whether in the circumstances of the case, the sum of Rs. 14,00,000 was the assessee company's income within the meaning of section 2 (6-C) of the Indian Income-tax Act and liable to pay income-tax under the Indian Income-tax Act.

We are concerned in this case with four policies of insurance with four different insurance companies. The clauses relevant to the present matter are the same in all four cases though the sum insured against by each insurance company differs. They are as follows :

* Policy No. C.L. 10018.

Rupees X Lacs only.

On Loss of Profits, Standing Charges and Agency Commission of the above Co.'s Mills, situate at Haines Road, Mahaluxmi, Bombay, following fire

The total amount declared for insurance is Rs. 40,00,000 and for 18 months' benefits, only as under :—

Rs. 37,75,000 on Loss of Profits and Standing Charges.

Rs. 2,25,000 on Agency Commission.

Rs. 40,00,000 out of which this policy covers Rs. X lacs only

* * * * *

Schedule attached to and forming part of Policy No. C.L. 10018.

The Company will pay to the assured :—

The loss of Gross Profits due to (a) Reduction in Output and (b) Increase in Cost of Working and the amount payable as indemnity hereunder shall Definitions of those two terms follow. We need not reproduce them. Then come the following definitions :—

Gross profit.—The sum produced by adding to the Net profit the amount of the Insured Standing Charges, or if there be no Net Profit the amount of the Insured Standing Charges, less such a proportion of any net trading loss as the amount of the Insured Standing Charges bears to all the Standing Charges of the business.

Net profit.—The net trading profit (exclusive of all capital receipts and accretions and all outlay properly chargeable to capital) resulting from the business of the Insured at the premises after due provision has been made for all Standing and other charges including depreciation.

Insured standing charges.—Interest on Loans and Bank Overdrafts, Rent Rates and Taxes, Salaries to permanent Staff and Wages to skilled employees, Directors' Fees, Auditors' Fees, Travelling Expenses, Insurance Premiums, Advertising and agency Commission.

* * * * *

Period of indemnity.—The period beginning with the occurrence of the fire and ending not later than eighteen consecutive calendar months thereafter during which the results of the business shall be affected in consequence of the fire.

Rate of Gross Profit.—The rate of Gross profit per unit earned on the output during the financial year immediately before the date of the fire to which such adjustments shall be made as may be necessary to provide for the trend of the business and for variations in or special circumstances affecting the business either before or after the fire or which would have affected the business had the fire not occurred so that the figures thus adjusted shall represent as nearly as may be reasonably practicable the result which, but for the fire, would have been obtained during the relative period after the fire."

The italicised words show that the insurance in respect of profits was to represent as nearly as possible the profits which would have been made had the Mills been working in its normal way.

We turn next to the Income-tax Act. Under section 3, the "total income of the previous year" is liable to tax subject to the provisions of the Act. Section 4 defines the total income to include "all income, profits and gains from whatever source derived."

There are certain qualifications but they do not concern us here.

It will be seen that the taxable commodity, "total income," embraces three elements "income," "profits" and "gains." Now though these may overlap in many cases, they are nevertheless separate and severable, and the simple question is whether the Rs. 14 lacs falls under any one or more of those heads. In our opinion, it is "income" and so is taxable.

It was argued on behalf of the assessee that it cannot be called profits because the money is only payable if and when there is a loss or partial loss and that something received from an outside source in circumstances like these is not money which is earned in the business and if there are no earnings and no profits there cannot be any income. But that only concentrates on the word "profits." This may not be a "profit" but it is something which represents the profits and was intended to take the place of them and is therefore just as much income as profits or gains received in the ordinary way. Section 4 is so widely worded that everything which is received by a man and goes to swell the credit side of his total account is either an income or a profit or a gain.

No attempt has been made in the Act to define "income" except to say in section 2 (6-C) that it includes certain things which would possibly not have been regarded as income but for the special definition. That however does not limit the generality of its natural meaning except as qualified in the section itself. The words which follow, namely, "from whatever source derived," show how wide the net is spread. So also in section 6. After setting out the various heads of taxable income it brings in the all embracing phrase "income from other sources."

There is however a distinction between "income" and "taxable income." The Act does not purport to subject all sources of income to tax, for the liability is expressly made subject to the provisions of the Act and among the provisions are a series of exceptions and limitations. Most of them are set out in section 4 itself but none of them apply here. The nearest approach for present purposes is section 4 (3) (vii) :—

"Any receipts . . . not being receipts arising from business . . . which are of a casual and non-recurring nature."

But the sting, so far as the assessee is concerned, lies in the words "not being receipts arising from business."

The assessee is a business company. Its aim is to make profits and to insure against loss. In the ordinary way it does this by buying raw material, manufacturing goods out of them and selling them so that on balance there is a profit or gain to itself. But it also has other ways of acquiring gain, as do all prudent businesses, namely, by insuring against loss of profits. It is indubitable that the money paid in such circumstances is a receipt and in so far as it represents loss of profits, as opposed to loss of capital and so forth, it is an item of income in any normal sense of the term. It is equally clear that the receipt is inseparably connected with the ownership and conduct of the business and arises from it. Accordingly, it is not exempt.

This question was considered by the Supreme Court of Canada which decided that a receipt of this nature is not a "profit" and so is not taxable. (*B. C. Fir and Cedar Lumber Co. v. The King*¹.) But the Court did not examine the wider position whether it is "income" and in any event the decision was reversed on an appeal to the Privy Council. Their Lordships held it is "income". This was followed later by the Court of Appeal in England and endorsed by the House of Lords in *Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. William's Executors*². In so far as these decisions do not turn on the special wording of the Acts with which they are respectively concerned and deal with the more general meaning of the word "income", we prefer the view taken in England.

It is true the Judicial Committee attempted a narrower definition in *Commissioner of Income-tax v. Shaw-Wallace & Co.*³ by limiting income to "a periodical monetary return 'coming in' with some sort of regularity, or expected regularity, from definite sources" but, in our opinion, those remarks must be read with reference to the particular facts of that case. The non-recurring aspect of this kind of receipt was considered by the Privy Council in The King v. B. C. Fir

2. (1941) 26 Tax Cases 28.

3. (1932) 63 M.L.J. 124 : L.R. 59 I.A.
206 : LL.R. 59 Cal. 1343 (P.C.).

and *Cedar Lumber & Co.*¹ and we do not think their Lordships had in mind a case of this nature when they decided *Shaw Wallace & Company's case*².

The learned Solicitor-General relies strongly on a clause which appears in three of the four policies with which we are concerned. That is a clause which states that the insured must do all he can to minimise the loss in profits and until he makes an endeavour to restart the business the moneys will not be paid. This he argued shows that the money was paid as an indemnity against the loss of profits and was neither income nor profits, nor was it a gain within the meaning of the section. We are unable to see how these receipts cease to be income simply because certain things must be done before the moneys can be claimed.

In our opinion, the High Court was right in holding that the Rs. 14,00,000 is assessable to tax. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Court-Fees Act (VII of 1870), section 7 (iv) (c) and Schedule II, Article 17—Applicability—Dismissal of suit on preliminary ground—Appeal giving up one of the reliefs and paying court-fee on remaining relief—Court-fee—Sections 5 and 12 of Court-Fees Act—Scope—Decision as to court-fee—"Finality"—Limits.

It is always open to the appellant in an appeal to give up a portion of his claim and to restrict it. It is further open to him, unless the relief is of such a nature that it cannot be split up, to relinquish a part of the claim and to bring it within the amount of court-fee already paid. For the purpose of deciding whether the memorandum of appeal was properly stamped according to the subject-matter of the appeal, it is not open to the court to canvass the question whether the suit with one of the prayers eliminated from it fell within the mischief of the proviso to section 42 of the Specific Relief Act. That is a question which relates to the merits of the appeal and does not concern its proper institution. Accordingly the Court cannot demand additional court-fee from the plaintiff appellant in respect of the prayer that is relinquished and dismiss the appeal for failure to meet it.

The difference in the phraseology employed in sections 5 and 12 of the Court-Fees Act indicates that the scope of section 12 is narrower than that of section 5, which declares decisions on questions of court-fee, whenever they arise in the Chartered High Courts as final makes a decision as to the necessity of paying a fee or the amount thereof final. Whereas section 12 makes a decision on every question relating to valuation for the purposes of determining the amount of any fee payable under Chapter 3 on a plaint or memorandum of appeal final. When the two sections in the same Act relating to the same subject-matter have been drafted in different language, it is not unreasonable to infer that they were enacted with a different intention and that in one case the intention was to give finality to all decisions of the taxing officer or the taxing Judge, as the case may be, while in the other case it was only intended to give finality to questions of fact that are decided by a Court but not to questions of law. Whether a case falls under one particular section of the Act or another is a pure question of law and does not directly determine the valuation of the suit for purposes of court-fee. The question of determination of valuation or appraisement only arises after it is settled in what class or category it falls.

Section 12 when it says that such a decision shall be final between the parties only makes the decision of the Court on a question of court-fee non-appealable and places it on the same footing as other interlocutory non-appealable orders under the Civil Procedure Code and it does no more than that. If a decision under section 12 is reached by assuming jurisdiction which the Court does not possess or without observing the formalities which are prescribed for reaching such a decision the order obviously would be revisable by the High Court in the exercise of revisional powers. Similarly, when a party thinking that a decision under section 12 is palpably wrong takes the risk of his plaint being rejected or suit dismissed and then appeals from the order rejecting the plaint or from the decree dismissing the suit but not from the decision on the question of court-fee, then it is open to him to challenge the interlocutory order even on the question of court-fee made in the suit or appeal. The word "finality" construed in the limited sense in which it is often used in statutes means that no appeal lies from an order of this character as such and it means no more than that.

In any event a decision that as the suit could not be maintained without asking for relief No. 2, the same fee was payable on the memorandum of appeal as on the plaint, is only a decision as to the maintainability of the appeal without first deciding whether the appeal had been properly instituted in that Court, and no finality can attach to it by the provisions of section 12 as in reality it decides no question within the ambit of section 12 of the Court-Fees Act.

On Appeal from the Judgment and Order, dated the 22nd March, 1945, of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, Ajmer-Merwara, Ajmer (R. H. W. Davies, Judicial Commissioner) in Civil First Appeal No. 16 of 1944, arising out of Judgment and Decree, dated the 13th March, 1944 of the Court of the Judge, Small Causes, Ajmer and Additional District Judge, Ajmer, in Civil Suit No. 28 of 1942.

S. S. Deedwania, Advocate for Appellants.

M. C. Setalvad, Attorney-General for India (J. N. Sharma, Advocate with him), for Respondents.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Mahajan, J.—This is an appeal by special leave granted by the Privy Council and limited to the question of court-fee, viz., whether on the memorandum of appeal presented to the High Court court-fee was payable under section 7 (iv) (c) or Article 17 of Schedule II of the Court-Fees Act.

The question whether the memorandum of appeal was properly stamped arose in the following circumstances : Edward Mills, Co., Ltd., is a joint-stock company situate in Beawar, Ajmer-Merwara. In accordance with the provisions of the articles of the company one Seth Gadh Mal Lodha and Rai Sahib Moti Lal (respondent No. 2) were its chairman and managing director respectively since 1916. Seth Gadh Mal Lodha represented his family firm of Kanwal Nain Hamir Singh, while Rai Sahib Moti Lal represented the joint family firm of Champa Lal Ram Swaroop. On 1st July, 1938, Rai Sahib Moti Lal and his firm were adjudged insolvents by the Bombay High Court. The result was that respondent No. 2 had to vacate the office of managing director and the members of his firm also became ineligible for it. By a resolution of the Board of Directors passed on 18th July, 1938, Gadh Mal Lodha was appointed to take the place of Rai Sahib Moti Lal as managing director. Gadh Mal Lodha died on 11th January, 1942 and the board of directors then appointed Seth Sobhagmal Lodha to act as chairman as well as managing director till the appointment was made by the company. An extraordinary meeting of the company was called for the 8th February, 1945, for the election of the chairman. At this meeting conflict arose between the two groups represented by Sobhagmal Lodha and Moti Lal. The chairman therefore dissolved the meeting but the supporters of Moti Lal continued to hold it and passed a resolution appointing him as the sole agent and chairman for a period of twenty years on a remuneration equal to ten per cent. of the profits of the company. It is this resolution of the 8th February, 1942, which has led to the present dispute.

Seth Sobhagmal in the situation that arose approached the District Judge of Ajmer with the prayer that a general meeting of the company may be held under the supervision of the Court. This request was allowed on 11th February, 1942 and the Court ordered that the meeting be held on 12th February, 1942, under the chairmanship of Seth Sobhagmal. Respondent No. 2 being aggrieved by this order, filed an application in revision in the Court of the Judicial Commissioner impugning the order. The learned Judicial Commissioner allowed the revision and directed that the resolution of the 8th February, 1942, should be acted upon.

Having failed to get redress in the summary proceedings, the appellant then filed the suit out of which this appeal arises for quashing the resolution of the 8th February, 1942. In the plaint he asked for the following reliefs :—

1. That it be declared that the appointment of defendant No. 2 is illegal, invalid and ultra vires and that he has no right to act as chairman, managing director, etc., of defendant No. 1 ;

2. That a receiver be appointed to take charge of the management of the company, until a properly qualified chairman, managing director, etc., is duly appointed as required by the memorandum and articles of the company.

The plaint bore a court-fee stamp of Rs. 10 only, but on the objection of the respondents that court-fee was payable on relief No. 2, the appellants paid ad valorem fee on Rs. 51,000 which was the valuation of the suit for purposes of jurisdiction.

The Additional District Judge dismissed the suit on the preliminary ground that it was not maintainable as it related to the internal management of the company and that the appellants had no right to bring it without impleading the directors who were necessary parties to it.

Aggrieved by this decision of the trial Judge, the appellants preferred an appeal to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, Ajmer-Merwara, at Ajmer. The memorandum of appeal was stamped with a court-fee stamp of Rs. 10 and it was expressly stated therein that relief No. 2 of the plaint was given up. An objection was raised regarding the amount of court-fee paid on the memorandum of appeal. The Judicial Commissioner ordered that proper court-fee be paid thereon in a month. In this order no reasons were given for this decision. The additional fee demanded was not paid, and the Judicial Commissioner dismissed the appeal with costs on 22nd March, 1945. An application was made for leave to appeal to the Privy Council against this order but it was refused. In the order refusing leave it was said as follows :—

“ On appeal to this Court, the memorandum was again stamped with a ten rupee stamp only and the respondents therefore objected. It having been conceded by plaintiffs earlier that the relief for the receivership was consequential to the relief for the declaration, the appellants were directed to pay the same stamp as had been paid in the trial Court. They objected stating that they had expunged from their memorandum of appeal the request that the Court should appoint a receiver and that they were not, therefore, liable to pay the same amount. On this a notice was issued and counsel were heard.

It being clearly set out in section 42 of the Specific Relief Act that no Court shall grant a declaration only where the plaintiff being able to seek further relief than a mere declaration of title omits to do so, the appellants were directed to pay as earlier ordered the same amount as had ultimately been paid on the plaint. They had earlier sought a consequential relief and the Court was, therefore, entirely unable to hold that the plaintiffs were unable to seek a further relief, they having sought the relief in the lower Court and it having been refused to them. The amount of the stamp was not paid and the appeal was therefore dismissed with costs.”

The reasons for demanding additional court-fee, though not mentioned in the original order, are stated in this order.

The question for determination in this appeal is whether the order of the Judicial Commissioner demanding additional court-fee can be sustained in law. A memorandum of appeal, as provided in Article 1 of Schedule I of the Court-Fees Act, has to be stamped according to the value of the subject-matter in dispute in appeal; in other words, the relief claimed in the memorandum of appeal determines the value of the appeal for purposes of court-fee. The only relief claimed in the memorandum of appeal was the first one mentioned in the plaint. This relief being purely of a declaratory character, the memorandum of appeal was properly stamped under Article 17 of the II Schedule.

It is always open to the appellant in an appeal to give up a portion of his claim and to restrict it. It is further open to him, unless the relief is of such a nature that it cannot be split up, to relinquish a part of the claim and to bring it within the amount of court-fee already paid: *Brahmanandam v. Secretary of State for India*¹; *Ram Prasad v. Bhiman*²; *Karam Chand v. Jullundur Bank, Ltd.*³; *Neelachalam v. Narasinga Dass*⁴; *Sah Ramchand v. Ponnalal*⁵; *Chuni Lal v. Sheo Charan Lal Lalman*⁶. The plaintiffs in express terms relinquished the second relief they had claimed in the plaint, in their memorandum of appeal. For the purpose of deciding whether the memorandum of appeal was properly stamped according to the subject-matter of the appeal, it was not open to the Judicial Commissioner to canvass the question whether the suit with the second prayer eliminated from it fell within the mischief of the proviso to section 42 of the Specific Relief Act. That was a question which related to the merits of the appeal and did not concern its proper institution. On this ground, therefore, the Judicial Commissioner had no jurisdiction to demand additional fee from the plaintiffs and the appeal could not be dismissed for failure to meet it. We are thus of the opinion that the order demanding additional court-fee on the memorandum of appeal as it stood, that is, minus the second prayer, was erroneous and we hold that the memorandum of appeal was properly stamped, as the subject-matter of the appeal was purely of a declaratory character.

Mr. Setalvad for the respondents contended that the first relief claimed in the plaint, and which was the subject-matter of the appeal included within it consequential relief and was not purely declaratory in nature and therefore the Judicial Commissioner was right in demanding additional court-fee on the value of the consequential relief. It was said that the words that respondent No. 2 "had no right to act as chairman and managing director" amounted to a claim for consequential relief. We are unable to agree. The claim contained in the first relief of the plaint is to the effect that it be declared that defendant No. 2 has no right to act as chairman and managing director because of his appointment being illegal, invalid, and ultra vires. The declaration claimed is in negative form that defendant 2 has no right to act as chairman and managing director. No claim for a consequential relief can be read within this prayer. The words "that defendant 2 has no right to act as chairman," are mere repetition and reiteration of what is contained in the opening sentence of the paragraph. The contention of Mr. Setalvad, therefore, cannot be sustained.

It was next contended that in view of the provisions of section 12 of the Court-Fees Act it should be held that the decision of the Judicial Commissioner was final, and could not be challenged in appeal. Section 12 of the Court-Fees Act enacts as follows :

"Every question relating to valuation for the purpose of determining the amount of any fee chargeable under this chapter on a plaint or memorandum of appeal shall be decided by the Court in which such plaint or memorandum, as the case may be, is filed and such decision shall be final as between the parties to the suit."

The provisions of this section have to be read and construed keeping in view the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure. Order VII, Rule 11, Civil Procedure Code, provides as follows :

"The plaint shall be rejected—

(b) where the relief claimed is undervalued, and the plaintiff, on being required by the Court to correct the valuation within a time to be fixed by the Courts, fails to do so ;

(d) where the relief claimed is properly valued, but the plaint is written upon paper insufficiently stamped, and the plaintiff, on being required by the Court, to supply the requisite stamped paper within a time to be fixed by the Court, fails to do so."

An order rejecting a plaint is a decree as defined in section 2, sub-section (ii) and is appealable as such. There is an apparent conflict between the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure and the provisions of section 12 which make the order relating to valuation final and efforts to reconcile the provisions of the Court-Fees Act and the Code have resulted in some divergence of judicial opinion on the construction of the section. In a number of decisions the Calcutta High Court took the view that the finality declared by section 12 of the Court-Fees Act had been taken away by the relevant provisions of the Code, as the order rejecting a plaint was appealable as a decree, no matter whether the dispute related to the category under which the same falls for purposes of court-fee or only to valuation pure and simple under a particular category : *Vide In re Omrao Mirza v. Mary Jones*¹ and *Tara Prasanna Chongdar v. Nrisingha Moorari Pal*². This extreme view has not been maintained in later decisions and it has been held that the finality declared by section 12 is limited only to the question of valuation pure and simple and does not relate to the category under which a certain suit falls : *Joriman Khatoon v. Secretary of State for India in Council*¹. The Allahabad High Court in its earlier decisions took the extreme view : Vide *Muhammad Sadik v. Muhammad Jan*². Later on that Court veered round to the view that the finality declared by section 12 only related to matters of appraisal. The High Court of Lahore has placed a similar construction on the meaning of the expression "valuation" in section 12 and has held that the finality attaches only to a decision which concerns valuation simpliciter and no finality attaches when a Court decides a question whether a case falls within one or other category of the cases mentioned in the different sections and schedule of the Court-Fees Act : Vide *Mahna Singh v. Bahadur Singh*³ ; *Mst. Parmeshri v. Panna Lal*⁴. This view has consistently been held in that Court. The Madras High Court took the same view in *Lakshmi Amma v. Janamajayam Nambiar*⁵, *Annamalai Chetty v. Cloete*⁶ ; and *Narasimhalu Chetty v. Ramayya Naidu*⁷. Mr. Setalvad drew our attention to the recent Full Bench decision of that Court in *Madana Mohana Naiko v. Kripasindhu Naiko*⁸. That case, however, concerned the second part of section 12 and was not concerned directly with the construction to be placed on the first part of the section. It, however, contains certain observations indicating that in the opinion of the Judges there was no ground for this restricted construction of the word "valuation" in section 12 and that the finality declared by section 12 attached not only to valuation pure and simple but also attached to decisions relating to category under which a suit or appeal falls for purposes of Court-fee. These obiter observations, however, cannot be said to overrule the earlier Full Bench decision of that Court in *Lakshmi Amma v. Janamajayam Nambiar*⁵. In a later decision in *Narasimhalu Chetty v. Ramayya Naidu*⁷, the decision of the Full Bench was explained as not in any way overruling the decision in *Lakshmi Amma v. Janamajayam Nambiar*⁵. All recent decisions of the Bombay High Court have taken the same view : Vide *Dada v. Nagesh*⁹, *Krishnaji Hari Dhandhere v. Gopal Narain Dhandhere*¹⁰. Mr. Setalvad drew our attention to an earlier decision of the Bombay High Court in *Vithal Krishna v. Balkrishna Janardhan*¹¹. In that case the Court undoubtedly held that no appeal lay and the finality declared by section 12 was comprehensive enough to include all questions whether relating to category or valuation pure and simple. It was, however, held that the High Court could correct an erroneous decision in the exercise of its revisional powers. Thus the finality declared by section 12 was destroyed by the exercise of powers of appeal under the guise of exercising revisional jurisdiction. In Patna and Oudh the same view has been taken as in Lahore. Vide *Chandramoni Koer v. Basdeo Narain Singh*¹² ; *Gumani v. Banwari*¹³. It thus appears that the consensus of judicial opinion is against the construction suggested by Mr. Setalvad. We think that the construction given to the language in section 12 in these decisions is right, and our reasons for saying so are these :

The difference in the phraseology employed in sections 5 and 12 of the Court-Fees Act indicates that the scope of section 12 is narrower than that of section 5. Section 5 which declares decisions on questions of court-fee whenever they arise in the chartered High Courts as final makes a decision as to the necessity of paying a fee or the amount thereof final. Whereas section 12 makes a decision on every question relating to valuation for the purpose of determining the amount of any fee payable under Chapter 3 on a plaint or memorandum of appeal final. Had section 12 been drafted somewhat as follows :

1. I.L.R. (1940) 2 Cal. 166.

3. 1919 Punjab Record 16.

"If any dispute arises as to the amount of any fee chargeable under this chapter on a plaint or memorandum of appeal, it shall be decided by the Court in which such plaint or memorandum is filed and such decision shall be final as between the parties," then the construction contended for by Mr. Setalvad might have been upheld. When the two sections in the same Act relating to the same subject-matter have been drafted in different language, it is not unreasonable to infer that they were enacted with a different intention and that in one case the intention was to give finality to all decisions of the taxing officer or the taxing Judge, as the case may be, while in the other case it was only intended to give finality to questions of fact that are decided by a Court but not to questions of law. Whether a case falls under one particular section of the Act or another is a pure question of law and does not directly determine the valuation of the suit for purposes of court-fee. The question of determination of valuation or appraisal only arises after it is settled in what class or category it falls.

It has been argued in some decisions that it is absolutely necessary to decide the category in which a case falls before assessing its value and therefore the determination of the question of category is necessarily involved in the determination of the valuation of the suit for purposes of court-fee. This argument, though plausible, does not seem sound. The actual assessment of the value depends either on arithmetical calculations or upon a valuation by an expert and on the evidence led in the case, while the decision of the question of category is one of law and may well be said to be an independent question antecedent but not relating to valuation. The expression "valuation" interpreted in its ordinary meaning of "appraisal" cannot be said to necessarily include within its ambit the question of category which is a matter of law. The construction placed on this section by a long course of decisions is one which reconciles the provisions of the Court-Fees Act with that of the Code of Civil Procedure and does not make those provisions nugatory and is therefore more acceptable than the other constructions which would make the provisions of either one or the other of these statutes nugatory. Perhaps it may be possible to reconcile the provisions of the two statutes by holding that the finality declared by section 12 of the Court-Fees Act means that the parties cannot impugn such a decision by preferring an appeal but that it does not confer on such decisions a complete immunity from examination in a higher Court. In other words, section 12 when it says that such a decision shall be final between the parties only makes the decisions of the Court on a question of court-fee non-appealable and placed it on the same footing as other interlocutory non-appealable orders under the Code and it does no more than that. If a decision under section 12 is reached by assuming jurisdiction which the Court does not possess or without observing the formalities which are prescribed for reaching such a decision, the order obviously would be revisable by the High Court in the exercise of revisional powers. Similarly, when a party thinking that a decision under section 12 is palpably wrong takes the risk of his plaint being rejected or suit dismissed and then appeals from the order rejecting the plaint or from the decree dismissing the suit but not from the decision on the question of court-fee, then it is open to him to challenge the interlocutory order even on the question of court-fee made in the suit or appeal. The word "finality" construed in the limited sense in which it is often used in statutes means that no appeal lies from an order of this character as such and it means no more than that.

Conceding for the sake of argument but not admitting that Mr. Setalvad is right in his contention that section 12 is comprehensive enough to include within its ambit all questions relating to court-fee whether they involve a decision as to question of category or as to valuation simpliciter, in the present case the Judicial Commissioner decided none of these questions and his decision cannot be said to be one falling within the ambit of section 12. All that the Judicial Commissioner decided was that as the suit could not be maintained without asking for relief No. 2, the same fee was payable on the memorandum of appeal as on the plaint. In substance the Court decided an issue regarding the maintainability of the appeal without first deciding whether the appeal had been properly instituted in that Court. No finality can attach to such a decision by the provisions of section 12, as in reality it decides no question within the ambit of section 12 of the Court-Fees Act.

For the reasons given above the second objection raised by Mr. Setalvad that no appeal lies from the order of the Judicial Commissioner by special leave is without force and is overruled.

The result is that the appeal is allowed, the decision of the Judicial Commissioner dismissing the appeal is set aside and the case remanded to him for decision in accordance with law on the basis that the memorandum of appeal presented to him was properly stamped. The appellants' costs of this appeal will be costs in the appeal in the Court of the Judicial Commissioner.

IN THE HIGH COURT OF JUDICATURE AT MADRAS.

PRESENT :—MR. JUSTICE CHANDRA REDDI.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), section 53—Fraudulent transfer—Fraud not carried out—Transferor if and when entitled to recover the property from the transferee.

So long as the contemplated fraud is not carried out or at least there has been no substantial part performance of it, the grantor although in pari delicto is entitled to invoke the assistance of a Court for the recovery of the properties he has parted with, irrespective of the fact whether the frustration of the fraud was the result of the locus penitentiae of the transferor or due to other causes like the intervention of the Court or third parties.

Whether a sale deed was a sham and simulated one not intended to convey any title or whether it was a real one intended to pass title to the transferee depends upon the animus transferendi at the time when the parties entered into the transaction and each case has to be decided with reference to the documents and surrounding circumstances. It cannot be said, that, in all cases of fraudulent transfers intended to defraud the creditors, they should be presumed to be mere sham and bogus transactions not intended to be operative between the grantor and the grantee. Where the document is not sham but an operative one, and as such voidable, the grantor cannot ask for a mere declaration that he is entitled to the property without asking for the avoidance of that document.

The property cannot be recovered without a prayer for setting aside the sale deed.

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Chingleput, in Appeal Suit No. 81 of 1946, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsiff of Tiruvallur in Original Suit No. 154 of 1943.

M. Natesan for Appellant.

After calling for certain findings from the lower appellate Court, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—This Second Appeal is filed by the 1st defendant against the judgment and decree of the Subordinate Judge of Chingleput who reversed the decision of the trial Court dismissing the suit brought by the respondents for a declaration of their title to the suit property and for the recovery of possession thereof. The facts material for the purpose of this enquiry are as follows : One Damodara Mudali executed a sale deed Ex. P-1 in favour of the appellant conveying his divided half share in the suit house for a stated consideration of Rs. 600-0-0 on 9th June, 1935 and had it registered on 3rd October, 1935. The vendor took the same property on lease from the vendee evidenced by the original of Ex. D-1, dated 3rd October, 1935. A creditor of Damodara attached the suit house in execution of a decree which he obtained against him. The 1st defendant in the present suit intervened with a claim petition but his claim was disallowed on the ground that the sale was effected with a view to defraud the creditors. The defeated claimant did not bring a suit to set aside the claim order as the decree debt was satisfied out of the sale proceeds of other properties belonging to Damodaram. Subsequently, the present plaintiffs instituted a suit O. S. No. 176 of 1936 against the present 1st defendant, that is the vendee under Ex. P-1 and the widow and mother of Damodara (Damodara having died by that time) for an injunction restraining them from interfering with the plaintiff's possession on the allegations that Damodara and the plaintiffs were members of an undivided joint family and that on the death of Damodara the plaintiffs got the suit property by survivorship. This suit was ultimately dismissed as it was found that Damodara on the date of Ex. P-1 was divided from the plaintiffs and that the plaintiffs were not in possession of the property at the time of the suit. It is not necessary for me to refer to some other litigation in respect of the same property as that has no bearing on the controversy in the present appeal. Having failed there, the plaintiffs laid this action for the reliefs mentioned above with the averments that Ex. P-1 was a sham and nominal document not intended to convey title and that they were entitled to the properties as the reversioners to the estate of Damodara.

The suit was resisted mainly on the plea that the sale deed Ex. P-1 was a genuine one and that the plaintiffs could not put forward any claim thereto. The trial Court dismissed the suit holding that Ex. P-1 evidenced a real transaction and that it was not a nominal document executed in fraud of creditors. On appeal the lower appellate Court in disagreement with the trial Court found that Ex. P-1 was executed with a view to defraud the creditors. In the result, it decreed the suit.

It may be stated that the learned Subordinate Judge had not kept in view the distinction between a sham and fictitious document under which no title was intended to pass and a real document executed with intent to defraud creditors. Having regard to this fact, I had to call for a finding when the appeal came on for hearing for the first time in September, 1951, as to whether Ex. P-1 was a mere sham document under which no title was intended to pass to the vendee and therefore a mere nullity or whether it was a document by which legal title was intended to vest in the vendee with the object of defrauding the creditors. The finding submitted by the learned Subordinate Judge is that the intention of Damodara was not to defraud his creditors but that his object was only to retain the suit property for himself and make the creditors proceed against the other properties, that consequently Ex. P-1 was not intended to convey legal title to the 1st defendant and that it was merely a sham document. I will presently show that this finding is not borne out by the evidence on record and is also self-contradictory and is therefore not entitled to any weight. I propose to consider the evidence afresh and give a decision on this question on the materials before me.

In support of this appeal, Mr. Natesan on behalf of the appellant contended that in view of the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge that there were no creditors at all in fraud of whom this document is said to have been executed, the only conclusion that could have been reached by the learned Subordinate Judge was that Ex. P-1 evidenced a genuine transaction and could not be impeached on the ground that it was entered into with a view to defraud the creditors. I do not think that I can accede to this argument having regard to the fact that there is evidence to show that there were some creditors at the time of the execution of Ex. P-1 to defeat whom the document is said to have been executed and that the finding given in all the prior litigations was that this document was executed with intent to defraud the creditors.

It was next argued that the object in entering into the transaction being a fraudulent one and the reason for the non-fulfilment of the fraud being not the locus penitentiae of the fraudulent grantor but the intervention of the Court, the transferor cannot invoke the aid of the Court to recover the property transferred by him. According to him, it is only when an illegal transaction is not carried out due to repentance on the part of the transferor and not due to the intervention of third parties that the transferor would be entitled to claim the recovery of the property through Court. In support of this proposition reliance was placed by him on *Muthuraman Chetti v. Krishna Pillai*¹, and also on the opinion expressed by Pritchard, J., in *Bigos v. Bousted*².

I do not think that *Muthuraman Chetti v. Krishna Pillai*¹, carries the appellant very far. All that was laid down there was that the rule that a person in pari delicto cannot recover is applicable not only to cases where contemplated fraud is completely carried out but to cases where there has been substantial part performance of the same as well. Undue weight cannot be attached to the remarks at page 74 of the Report which run thus :

"Turning to the facts here, we do not find a case when a party to a fraudulent transaction repented before anything was done in pursuance of the intended fraud and the unlawful compact was in no way carried out."

These remarks should be understood only with reference to the context in which they are used.

No doubt the judgment of Pritchard, J., in *Bigos v. Bousted*², supports to a greater extent the position taken up by Mr. Natesan. The following observations of the learned Judge at page 100 of the report are pertinent :

"I confess that there was a time when I thought it would be right to apply to the facts of this case the reasoning of the decision in *Taylor v. Bowers*³, but having considered all the authorities, I do not take that view. I think that what is to be extracted from the authorities may be treated as follows : I think that they show, first, that there is a distinction between what may, for convenience, be called the repentance cases, on the one hand, and the frustration cases, on the other hand. If a particular case may be held to fall within the category of repentance cases I think the law is that the Court will help a person who repents, provided his repentance comes before the illegal purpose has been substantially performed. If I were able in this case, to take the view that the defendant has brought himself within that sphere of the authorities, it might well be that I would have been able to help him by saying that his repentance had come before the illegal purpose had been substantially performed but I do not take that view. I think, however, that this case falls within the category of cases which I call the frustration cases."

I do not think I can share this view of the learned Judge. It is not only opposed to the rule of law contained in section 84 of the Indian Trusts Act but to the principles enunciated in the Privy Council decision in *Petheperumal Chetty v. Muniandy Servai*⁴, which has been followed by the Full Bench of this Court in *Venkataramayya v. Pullayya*⁵.

In *Petheperumal Chetty v. Muniandy Servai*⁴, in order to defeat the claim of an equitable mortgagee to certain property the predecessor-in-interest of the plaintiff and another member of the joint Hindu family executed a document purporting to be a sale of the property in favour of the predecessor-in-interest of the defendant. But the equitable mortgagee succeeded in getting a declaration that his mortgage could be enforced against the property covered by the last conveyance in priority to the last-mentioned conveyance as the transferee under the sale-deed was aware of the existence of the equitable mortgage. The claim arising under the mortgage was subsequently satisfied. In a suit filed by the transferor for the recovery of the property purported to have been conveyed under the sale deed the defence put forward was that as the grantor was in pari delicto his successor-in-interest could not recover the property although the fraud was not successfully carried out. This objection was overruled and a decree was granted. The Privy Council repelled the contention that if the plaintiff was allowed to recover the property in dispute and if the maxim in pari delicto potior est conditio possidentis were not rigorously applied to such cases, much confusion would be imported into the law in the following words :—

"The answer to that is that the plaintiff, in suing to recover possession of his property is not carrying out the illegal transaction but is seeking to put everyone, as far as possible, in the same position as they were in before that transaction was determined upon. It is the defendant, who is relying upon the fraud, and is seeking to make a title to the lands through and by means of it.

And despite his anxiety to effect great moral ends, he cannot be permitted to do this. And, further, the purpose of the fraud having not only not been effected, but absolutely defeated, there is nothing to prevent the plaintiff from repudiating the entire transaction, revoking all authority of his confederate to carry out the fraudulent scheme, and recovering possession of his property. The decision of the Court of Appeal in *Taylor v. Bowers*¹, and the authorities upon which this decision is based, clearly establish this. *Symes v. Hughes*², and *In re Great Berlin Steamboat Company*³ are to the same effect. And the authority of these decisions, as applied to a case like the present, is not in their Lordships' opinion, shaken by the observations of Fry, L.J., in Kearley v. Thompson.⁴

The statement contained in the subsequent portion of the judgment that it is only when a contemplated fraud was effected that a fraudulent transferor would forfeit the right to seek the assistance of a Court to get back the property he has parted with furnishes a complete answer to the contention put forward by Mr. Natesan. It is evident from these observations that there is no foundation for the distinction between the fraud not being carried out on account of the repentance of the grantor and the frustration of the fraud through the intervention of Courts or third parties. In my opinion, in judging whether a fraudulent grantor can recover the property he had parted with, with the aid of the Court, the test is whether the fraud has been perpetrated or whether there has been a substantial part performance of it and not whether it was due to the penitence of the fraudulent grantor or whether it fell through on account of the intervention of a Court or third parties.

*Pethaperumal Chetti v. Muniandy Servai*⁵, was followed by a Full Bench of this Court in *Venkataramayya v. Pullayya*⁶. What happened there was this. With a view to cheat his son a Hindu father transferred an item of joint family property in favour of his daughter. Subsequent to this he filed a suit for partition of family properties in which the property covered by the sale deed was not included. When objection was taken to it by the son in his written statement to this exclusion, the father agreed to include this property for partition and asked for its being allotted to his share. Ultimately the matter was compromised and the property was allotted to his share and he recovered possession thereof from his son. Shortly thereafter the maternal grandson that is the transferee's son filed a suit for the recovery of the property in dispute. The defence to the suit was that the sale in favour of his daughter was a benami transaction entered into for the purpose of cheating his son. The question arose whether it was open to the 1st defendant to plead his own fraud. The answer given by the Full Bench was in the affirmative. It took the view following *Pethaperumal Chetti v. Muniandy Servai*⁵, that in order to deprive a fraudulent grantor of his right to recover the property with the assistance of a Court, the intended fraud must have been effected or at least there must have been a substantial part performance of the intention to defraud. The learned Judges expressed the opinion that a mere fraudulent intention as evidenced by the impeached document, was not sufficient.

I may also refer to section 84 of the Indian Trusts Act. The rule enacted in that section is in conformity with the principles embodied in the decisions quoted above. Section 84 runs thus :

"Where the owner of a property transfers it to another for an illegal purpose and such purpose is not carried into execution, or the transferor is not as guilty as the transferee, or the effect of permitting the transferee to retain the property might be to defeat the provisions of any law, the transferee must hold the property for the benefit of the transferor."

On this statutory provision and the principles enunciated in *Pethaperumal Chetti v. Muniandy Servai*⁵, followed in *Venkata Ramayya v. Pullayya*⁶, and in other rulings to which I need not allude here, my conclusion is that so long as the contemplated fraud is not carried out or at least there has been no substantial part performance of it, the grantor although in pari delicto is entitled to invoke the assistance of a Court for the recovery of the properties he has parted with irrespective of the fact whether the frustration of the fraud was the result of the locus penitentiae of the transferor or due to other causes. I therefore reject the contention based on the theory propounded by Pritchard, J., in *Bigos v. Boustead*¹, and find that the plaintiffs can get a decree for the recovery of the property if otherwise they are entitled to do so.

The next submission made by Mr. Natesan is that if the object in executing a sale deed was to defraud the creditors it must be considered to be a fraudulent transfer which has to be avoided and not a sham and colourable transaction not intended to convey title which need not be set aside. In support of this he cited to me the judgment of Krishnan, J., in *The Secretary of State for India v. Dadi Reddi Nagiah*². That judgment does lend support to this contention of Mr. Natesan. But the other learned Judge Ayling, J., remarked thus :

"I speak thus cautiously, because we have not had the benefit of any argument contra and the words are open to the construction placed upon them by the learned District Judge."

The dictum laid down by Krishnan, J., is opposed to a Bench decision of this Court in *Swaminatha Aiyar v. Rukmani Ammal*³. In *Palaniandy Chetti v. Appavu Chettiar*⁴ a Bench of this Court consisting of Coutts Trotter and Seshagiri Ayyar, JJ., called for a finding whether a document executed with a view to defraud the creditors was merely a colourable one leaving the real beneficial enjoyment with him who purported to transfer it or a real one meant to effect a real transfer of the property from the transferor to the transferee. The decision in *Pethaperumal Chetti v. Muniandi Servai*⁵, also seems to be opposed to what is stated by Krishnan, J., in *The Secretary of State for India v. Dadi Reddi Nagiah*². In the last mentioned case it was observed that if the transaction impeached was a benami one not intended to be operative as between the grantor and the grantee the successor-in-interest of the grantor could recover the property without asking for the cancellation of the document. It looks to me that the proposition was too broadly stated by Krishnan, J., in that decision. In my opinion, whether a sale deed was a sham and simulated one not intended to convey any title or whether it was a real one intended to pass title to the transferee thereunder depends upon the animus transferendi at the time when the parties entered into the transaction and each case has to be decided with reference to the documents and the surrounding circumstances. Nor is there any substance in the contention of Mr. Veeraraghava Aiyar that in all cases of fraudulent transfers intended to defraud the creditors they should be presumed to be mere sham and bogus transactions not intended to be operative between the grantor and the grantee.

This leads me to the question whether the document in this case is a mere paper transaction under which no legal title passed to the transferee and the beneficial interest was retained by the transferor or whether it was a real document intended to be given effect to. On a consideration of the evidence on record and the surrounding circumstances, the only reasonable conclusion I can arrive at is that Ex. P-1 was not a mere fictitious or a bogus document but was a document intended to be operative and to be given effect to. It was a real transaction which was acted upon as can be seen from the following circumstances. On the death of Damodara the vendor who occupied the house subsequent to Ex. P-1 as a tenant under Ex. D-1, his widow and his mother were not living in the house as spoken to by P.W. 2. It is evident from the admission of P.W. 1 the next friend of the plaintiffs that the 2nd defendant to whom the property was leased out under Ex. D-20 occupied the house after the demise of Damodara. She categorically stated that she came to know about this impeached document when there was a talk that the 2nd defendant was occupying the house. It is also in evidence that the 1st defendant paid kist for the suit property. All these circumstances clearly indicate that under the document Ex. P-1 legal title was intended to pass and was meant to be an operative one and that effect was given to this document subsequently.

The next question is that if this document was not a mere sham and colourable transaction but a real one, could the plaintiffs ask for a mere declaration that they are entitled to the property without asking for the avoidance of that document? In my judgment, they cannot do it. The document not being void but only voidable will be valid till it is set aside and the plaintiffs without having it avoided cannot recover the property. In this case there is no prayer for setting aside the sale deed and the reliefs asked for are the declaration mentioned above and recovery of possession of the property. Consequently, they cannot recover possession of the property from the 1st defendant.

It follows that the reliefs asked for cannot be granted and the suit has to be dismissed. The decision of the lower appellate Court decreeing the suit is unsustainable. Hence the appeal is allowed. In the circumstances of this case, I direct the parties to bear their own costs throughout.

IN THE HIGH COURT OF JUDICATURE AT MADRAS.

PRESENT : MR. JUSTICE RAGHAVA RAO.

The Coimbatore Municipality represented by its Commissioner ... *Appellant **

v.

C. S. Govindayyar

... Respondent.

Madras District Municipalities Act (V of 1920), section 354, Proviso—Action of Municipality capricious and arbitrary in adopting valuation of property for assessment—Suit by owner of house challenging the assessment and for refund of amount paid—Not barred.

Where the action of a Municipality is capricious and arbitrary in adopting valuation of property for assessment it cannot be said that the provisions of the Madras District Municipalities Act have been complied with by the municipality in substance or in effect. The mere fact of the existence of a right of appeal under the provisions of the Act against the assessment by the municipality does not necessarily oust the jurisdiction of the Civil Court to entertain a suit in challenge thereof.

The Udipi Municipal Council v. Vasudevacharya, (1949) 2 M.L.J. 629 and Commissioner, Municipal Council, Vizagapatnam v. Srimati Siddeswara Devi, (1948) 2 M.L.J. 111, considered and distinguished.

Appeal against the Decree of the District Court of Coimbatore in A.S. No. 93 of 1946, preferred against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Coimbatore in O.S. No. 166 of 1944.

K. Kutikrishna Menon and C. Vasudeva Mannadiar for Appellant.

K. V. Ramachandra Aiyar for Respondent.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—The interesting question argued in this second appeal is the maintainability of a suit by the owner of a house in a municipality questioning the assessment in respect thereof by the Municipality and seeking a refund of the amount collected by the municipality on the basis of such assessment. The plaintiff is the owner of a house property bearing door No. 5/7, in the Imperial Bank Road, Coimbatore. The defendant is the Municipality of Coimbatore represented by its Commissioner. The case of the plaintiff is that the property is liable to a house-tax only of Rs. 124-14-0 per half year on the basis of an annual rental value of Rs. 1,665. That was the value fixed by the Deputy Inspector of Municipal Councils on the basis of the monthly rental of Rs. 150 fixed as the fair rent for the house by the District Collector of Coimbatore under the House Rent Control Order. The plaintiff attacks the value of Rs. 4,440, adopted by the Municipality for determining the house-tax as being capricious and unreasonable in view of the orders of the Deputy Inspector of Municipal Councils and of the District Collector of Coimbatore aforesaid. The defendant pleaded that it was not bound by such orders and that the levy was justified under section 82 of the Madras District Municipalities Act, which will hereinafter be referred to as the Act. It also raised the contention that since the provisions of the Act had been complied with the jurisdiction of the Court stood excluded, and that the plaintiff had accordingly to be non-suited. The learned Subordinate Judge of Coimbatore by whom the suit was tried upheld the pleas of the Municipality and dismissed the action. The learned District Judge on appeal has reversed him and decreed the suit.

It is argued for the municipality in this second appeal that however erroneous the levy of tax under section 82 of the Act may be, section 354 interposes a bar in the way of a suit to question it. It is also contended that the only remedy of the plaintiff was to appeal against the assessment under the Act.

Section 82 of the Act so far as material provides in sub-section (2) that the annual value of buildings shall be deemed to be the gross annual rent at which they may reasonably be expected to let from month to month or from year to year. Section 354 so far as material provides as follows :

"(1) No assessment under the authority of this Act shall be impeached or affected by reason of any clerical error or by reason of any mistake in respect of the amount assessed provided that the provisions of this Act have been, in substance and effect, complied with.

(2) No suit shall be brought in any Court to recover any sum of money collected under the authority of this Act or to recover damages on account of any assessment, or collection of money made under the said authority :

Provided that the provisions of this Act have been, in effect, complied with."

The learned District Judge in appeal held that in view of the order of the District Collector under the House Rent Control Order the amount of assessment charged by the defendant was not on the basis of the annual rent at which the premises could reasonably be expected to let from month to month or from year to year within the meaning of section 82 (2) of the Act, and that in view of the order of the Deputy Inspector of Municipal Councils based upon the fair rent fixed by the Collector the annual value of the lands for the purpose of that section and that sub-section could not be what the municipality adopted in disregard of that order. It followed in the opinion of the learned District Judge that the Civil Court "has jurisdiction to entertain the suit as the action of the defendant was arbitrary and capricious." Section 354 of the Act did not, according to the learned District Judge, create a difficulty in the way of the plaintiff apparently because the provisions of the Act relating to assessment were not, in substance and effect, complied with and the proviso to the section did not accordingly stand satisfied.

Whether in terms of section 82 (2) of the Act the annual rent adopted by the municipality is such as the premises may reasonably be expected to let at from month to month or from year to year is a question of fact. Unless vitiated by any error of principle the finding of the learned District Judge in regard to this matter cannot be challenged in second appeal. It was not as if there was no evidence to support his conclusion. On the other hand, the material in support of it is ample. Prima facie, the orders of the Collector and the Deputy Inspector of Municipal Councils should have been accepted by the municipality and the District Judge rightly held that the action of the municipality in disregard of those orders was something capricious and arbitrary. The provision of the Act cannot in terms of the proviso to section 354 be accordingly held to have been complied with by the municipality in substance or in effect.

There being no bar of suit under the terms of section 354 of the Act, the question is whether de hors the section there is any such bar. I am not satisfied that there is any. The mere fact of the existence of a right of appeal under the provisions of the Act against the assessment by the municipality does not, in my opinion, necessarily oust the jurisdiction of the Civil Court to entertain a suit in challenge thereof. Reliance is placed by Mr. Kuttikrishna Menon appearing for the Municipality in support of his contention on a recent decision of a single judge of this Court (Viswanatha Sastri, J.) reported in *Udipi Municipal Council v. Vasudevacharya*¹. There it was held in respect of the property in question that the assessment under section 81 (3) of the Act was rightly made and that, in any event, where the Municipal Council determined the question of fact (whether the site assessed was or was not used exclusively for agricultural purposes) on the evidence and materials available, the civil court cannot assume the powers of the assessing authority and investigate the facts afresh to find out whether its conclusion on the facts is correct. The passage in the judgment in that case on which stress has been laid by the learned advocate for the appellant is to be found at page 631 as follows :—

“ If the land was used exclusively for agricultural purposes, the assessing authority had to proceed under section 81 (4) and if not, under section 81 (3). It had power to determine and determined the question of fact on the evidence and materials available and its conclusion was that the land in question was not used exclusively for agricultural purposes. It may be that a different view on the facts is possible. All that can be said for the respondents is that the executive authority of the Municipal Council came to a wrong conclusion on a matter of fact which it was within its competence to decide. If so, their remedy was by way of an appeal to the Municipal Council. The Civil Court cannot assume the powers of the assessing authority and investigate the facts afresh to find out whether its conclusion on the facts is correct. If on the facts found, assumed or admitted by the assessing authority, the assessment is found to have proceeded on an erroneous basis, the Civil Courts can step in and declare the invalidity of the assessment on the ground that the provisions of the Act have not been in substance and effect complied with. No statutory body can give itself power to impose a tax on citizens by an erroneous interpretation of the taxing provisions in the statute and if it does so, the aggrieved taxpayer has a right to get redress in the ordinary Courts. In the present case, however, I am of the opinion that the assessment cannot be assailed on this ground. The error, if any, related to the appreciation of the materials available for arriving at a conclusion on a question of fact which the assessing authority had to determine in the course of making an assessment.”

The distinction drawn in this passage between cases of an erroneous basis adopted by the municipality and cases of an erroneous conclusion reached in regard to the existence of the right statutory basis on the facts found, assumed or admitted by the assessing authority is certainly prima facie in favour of the appellant's contention, and the respondent on the basis of this passage read literally is confined only to the remedy of an appeal to the Municipal Council under the Act and debarred of a suit in the ordinary courts. I am, however, with respect not prepared to accept this decision as correct if it should be taken as meaning that however arbitrary, capricious or perverse the assessment of the Municipality on the statutory basis may be, the assessee must content himself with an appeal under the Act and cannot resort to a suit for relief. Section 9 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that

“ The Court shall (subject to the provisions herein contained) have jurisdiction to try all suits of a civil nature excepting suits of which their cognizance is either expressly or impliedly barred.” The question is whether in respect of a suit of the kind with which we are concerned in the present case there is any provision of law anywhere which operates as a bar thereto either expressly or impliedly. No bar derived from any other enactment has been suggested, and the only bar in the Act is what is gatherable from section 354 itself, which comes into being only where the provisions of the Act relating to assessment have been, in substance and effect, complied with. The maintainability of such a suit where there has been no such compliance with the provisions of the Act which is the necessary implication of the section cannot be treated as whittled down or eviscerated by the mere existence of a right of appeal provision in Schedule IV of the Act. While there is on the one hand, the rule in the schedule which confers on the assessee the right of appeal, we have on the other the plain language of section 354 in the body of the Act itself which leaves no doubt but that where the provisions of the Act have not been in substance and effect complied with an assessment can well be challenged by reason of a mistake in respect of the amount assessed and that a suit can well be brought to recover any money collected on the basis of such assessment.

Reference is next made by the learned counsel for the appellant to a decision in the *Commissioner, Municipal Council, Vizagapatam v. Siddeswara Devi*¹, also of a single Judge. The facts there were that up to 1940 a house and site of about 4 acres had been assessed as if the whole of the 4 acres was adjacent and appurtenant to the house, that in 1940 however on the report of a special officer some 3 acres out of the 4 were excluded from the site held to be appurtenant to the house and were separately taxed, and that when a suit to recover the tax in respect of this land was brought by the municipality the defendants maintained that they were not liable to pay the tax as the site was appurtenant to the house. It was held by the learned Judge (Happell, J.) that where there was a mistake of fact on the part of the municipi-pality the remedy was by way of an appeal to the Municipal Council and that the civil court had no jurisdiction, provided the provisions of the Act had been in substance and effect complied with. It will be seen that so far the ruling does not carry the learned counsel the whole length required, because it lays down that the civil court has no jurisdiction on the facts, provided the provisions of the Act have been in substance and effect complied with. That is as much as to suggest that where they have not been in substance and effect complied with, the civil court may well have jurisdiction. The ruling of the learned Judge proceeds further, to the effect that even if the site in question should have been held to be appurtenant to the house, that is merely an error of fact in making the assessment which the municipality had the power to make. But then again the learned Judge proceeds to hedge in his decision in the winding up of the discussion by the remark,

" . . . and it seems to me clear that there has been no contravention of any express provisions of the Act and no mistaken view of the provisions of the Act. In this view it was not open to the lower Courts to go into the question whether the assessment was correct or not."

If one is to regard the ruling—as I am not prepared to do—as going the whole length of laying down that in view of the existence of a right of appeal under the Schedule to the Act the remedy of a suit in cases of non-compliance by the municipality with the provisions of the Act in substance and in effect stands excluded, I must say that I consider this ruling to be erroneous like the ruling in *Udipi Municipal Council v. Vasudevacharya*¹.

Stress has also been laid by the learned advocate for the appellant upon a case in *Pattarani Purnachandra Mala Jamna Devi v. The President, Taluk Board, Chicacole*², referred to by Happell, J., in *The Commissioner, Municipal Council, Vizagapatam v. Siddeswara Devi*³. In that case a suit was brought to recover the amount collected on the ground that the person practised a profession within the limits of the Taluk Board whereas in fact she had not done so. It was held that the Civil Court had no jurisdiction. That again is a decision of a single Judge (Jackson, J.) which, as the head-note bears, lays down that under section 228 (2) of the Madras Local Boards Act, where the provisions requisite for the collection of the tax have been followed, and there is merely a mistake of fact committed bona fide by the assessing authority, the remedy of the aggrieved party is that provided by and confined to the statute, namely, an appeal to the Local Board itself. In his judgment the learned Judge, it may be noticed points out :

" If the Local Board substantially comply with these provisions no suit will lie and whether it has complied is a question of fact. This is clearly laid down in the leading Madras case, *Municipal Council, Cocanada v. Standard Life Assurance Co.*⁴ In the *Municipal Council, Mangalore v. Codial Bail Press*⁵, it was held that a Civil Court can intervene when the Municipality has deliberately acted upon a wrong basis in contravention of the clear provision of the Act. In that case it was not an isolated mistake but a fundamental departure from the meaning of the statute."

I consider that the test laid down by this decision for the civil court's interference—namely, a fundamental departure from the meaning of the statute—stands fulfilled in the present case.

The true test that must be applied to cases of this description is in my opinion what the Privy Council have laid down in *Secretary of State for India in Council v. Mask & Co.*⁶ Lord Thankerton in delivering the judgment of the Board of the Judicial Committee in that case observes at page 614 :

" It is settled law that the exclusion of the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts is not to be readily inferred, but that such exclusion must either be explicitly expressed or clearly implied. It is also well-settled that even if jurisdiction is so excluded, the civil Courts have jurisdiction to examine into cases where the provisions of the Act have not been complied with, or the statutory tribunal has not acted in conformity with the fundamental principles of judicial procedure."

That case no doubt related to an altogether different enactment, namely, the Sea Customs Act (VIII of 1878) and in particular to the provisions of sections 188 and 191 thereof. Whether in regard to cases under that Act where the right of appeal provided for by the Act had been actually exercised by the party aggrieved he would still be entitled to have recourse to a suit is a question on which their Lordships do not express any final opinion. The circumstance that in the case before me the right of appeal provided for by the Schedule IV to the Act was exercised is immaterial in view of my interpretation of section 354 of the Act as yielding the plain result on its language that quite apart from the right of appeal a suit does lie where in fact the provisions of the Act have not been in substance and effect complied with. The principle laid down by Lord Thankerton in *Secretary of State for India v. Mask & Co.*¹, which I have referred to above is in my opinion a principle of general application which must be held to govern the present case. Then, it is pointed out by the learned Lord at page 616 of the report, referring to a decision of Willes, J., in *Wolverhampton New Waterworks Company v. Hawkesford*², that the question in such class of cases is whether the case falls under the third class stated by Willes, J., namely :

“Where the statute creates a liability not existing at common law, and gives also a particular remedy for enforcing it With respect to that class it has always been held that the party must adopt the form of remedy given by the statute.”

That makes no difference to the view I am taking, as it is perfectly clear to my mind on a scrutiny of section 354 of the Act that in addition to the right of appeal provided for by and in Schedule IV of the Act the right of suit stands saved in all cases in which the provisions of the Act have not in substance and effect been complied with. After all, in the language of Varadachariar, J., in *Kamaraja Pandiya Naicker v. The Secretary of State in Council*³, the appeal in such a case is only to a body acting as part of the Executive machinery and not to an independent body acting as a special tribunal for settling a dispute between the taxpayer and the taxing authority. For this reason, the Full Bench ruling of this Court in *Secretary of State for India in Council v. Allu Jagannadhan*⁴ too can be of no assistance to the appellant.

I am accordingly of opinion that the suit in this case was competent, and that this second appeal must fail with the costs of the respondent right through.

Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908), Order 47, rule 1—Amendment of plaint and decree—Order disallowing—Later order allowing amendment disregarding rule of res judicata—Aggrieved party's remedy—Review or appeal.

A plaint and decree contained an erroneous description of the subject-matter of the dispute in that for a fresh or new survey number an old survey number was put in and the petitioner herein was one of the respondents in an application by the decree-holder to amend the plaint and decree. One application to amend was dismissed and another later one was allowed. On the application by the present petitioner (respondent) for review of the order of amendment on the ground of an error of law in that the principle of res judicata had not been applied by the lower Court to the application for amendment.

Held, that the proper procedure would be by way of an appeal and not by an application for review. The decision ignoring the application of principle of res judicata was not such an apparent error of law for the lower Court to have been asked to review its own order.

JUDGMENT.—R.I.A. No. 3041 of 1947 was an application made by one of the parties in O.S. No. 789 of 1944 on the file of the Court of the District Munsif of Kuthuparamba for amendment of the plaint as well as the decree by scoring out the name of the desom and the old survey number and substituting in their place another desom and a fresh survey number. That application was based on the allegation that there was a mistake made by the parties in the plaint. For some reason or other R.I.A. No. 3041 of 1947 was dismissed without the amendment being allowed. Later on an application R.I.A. No. 645 of 1949 was made to amend the decree and plaint practically for the same reasons as had been alleged in the earlier petition. The District Munsif, on this application, allowed the amendment. The third defendant who was aggrieved by that amendment, instead of filing an appeal against that portion of the amended decree, applied to the lower Court by R.I.A. No. 1091 of 1949 for a review of the order in R.I.A. No. 645 of 1949 on the ground that at the time when the order in R.I.A. No. 645 of 1949 was passed the learned District Munsif committed an error which was apparent on the face of the record because he should have taken into consideration the fact that since an earlier application for the same relief had been dismissed another petition was not sustainable. The lower Court has now held that the provision of Order 47, rule 1, Civil Procedure Code, have not been complied with in this application for the reason that there is no error apparent on the face of the record and that the proper course which the third defendant should have taken was to have filed an appeal against the amended decree.

Mr. Achuthan Nambiar for the petitioner contends on the authority of *Venkatarayulu v. Rattamma*¹ that where a Court overlooks a provision of law and passes an order, an application for review of that order would lie, even if the ground for review may not be strictly one that is apparent on the face of the record, but is only an error of law. I do not think that decision can be applied to the facts of the present case. When the District Munsif passed the order in R.I.A. No. 645 of 1949, he was cognisant of the fact that already an application for amendment of the decree and plaint had been rejected by him. It may be that he should not have passed the order reviewing the order in R.I.A. No. 645 of 1949 following the principle of res judicata. But if a Court ignores or does not decide a case on the principle of res judicata, it cannot be stated that such an error is one apparent on the face of the record. The proper procedure which the petitioner here should have had recourse to was to have filed an appeal against the order in R.I.A. No. 645 of 1949 and contended in that appeal that the Court had no jurisdiction to amend the decree.

I, therefore, dismiss the Civil Revision Petition but in the circumstances, without costs.

Execution—Setting aside Court sale—Application under section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure by the legal representatives of the judgment-debtor—Plea of constructive res judicata—When, not available—Sale partially set aside—Claim by the auction purchaser for refund of proportionate share of purchase money negatived.

The plea of constructive res judicata is not available against the legal representatives of the judgment-debtor in the absence of any notice by reason of any of the processual formalities laid down in the Code of Civil Procedure that a particular item of the property constituting the subject-matter of dispute was being sold as entirely being liable in execution of the decree.

In Court sales there is no guarantee of title and the buyer must be aware. The right of the auction purchaser to claim for recovery of the purchase money is confined only to cases where there has been a total failure of consideration and not where there is a partial failure of consideration. The auction purchaser cannot tack on himself to the judgment-debtors in an application under section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure filed by them and he must file his own separate proceedings in the shape of a suit or other proceeding to agitate his claims for the refund of the purchase money.

JUDGMENT.—Two points are taken in the C.M.S.A., viz., that the lower Court should have held that the plea of the respondents was barred by the principle of constructive res judicata and secondly, that in any event the appellant before me should be refunded the proportionate share of the purchase money (i.e., three-fourths).

In my opinion, both the points taken are bound to fail. Turning to the first point, what is the constructive res judicata pleaded? The argument runs that since the petitioners in the lower Court did not object at the settlement of the proclamation of sale to the sale of this property as property liable to be sold in execution of the decree against the late Viswanatha Ayyar or advance the claim that no sale could be validly held as far as their shares or interests (viz., three-fourths) were concerned, they are barred from agitating the matter any further under the rule of constructive res judicata. In advancing this argument, it was overlooked that the petitioners in the lower Court had not any notice by reason of any of the processual formalities laid down in the Code of Civil Procedure that this particular item of property constituting the subject-matter of the dispute was being sold in execution of the decree as entirely liable in execution of the decree against the late Viswanatha Ayyar. No draft, as pointed out by the learned District Judge and Subordinate Judge of the proposed terms was served upon the petitioners, nor did the notice contain any schedule describing the properties to be sold. Therefore, it is idle to contend that if they had any such information at their disposal they should have put forward the objections which have been advanced now by them after being in possession of all the information. In other words, what happened in this case, was, as has been set out in *Chidambaram Chetti v. Theivanai Ammal*¹, viz., that these respondents were told that a certain date had been fixed for settling the terms and nothing more and therefore, it would be a very remarkable thing, if on receipt of such notice, it were to follow that if they did not attend on that occasion, they must be taken to have attended and raised the question whether or not the property was the property of the judgment-debtor. So, by no stretch of imagination, can it be said that these respondents are barred by the principle of constructive res judicata.

In regard to the second point, both on procedure and on the state of the law, the appellant is not entitled to a refund of three-fourths of the purchase price. First of all, this is a petition by the judgment-debtors under section 47, Civil Procedure Code and if the appellant wants a refund of his purchase price, he must file his own separate proceedings in the shape of a suit or other proceeding to agitate the relief he wants. He cannot tack on himself to the judgment-debtors in this petition and ask for a refund of the three-fourths of the purchase money which is outside the scope of this petition. Secondly, I am afraid even if he is likely to agitate for it, he is not likely to get the remedy he wants because it has always been repeatedly pointed out that in Court sales there is no guarantee of title and that the buyer must be aware. It follows therefore that there may be "lucky" purchasers as well as "unlucky" purchasers and to which latter category the petitioner appears to belong. In *Narasingi Vannachand Firm, Guntur v. Narasayya*¹, it was held by a Bench of this Court that the decision of the Full Bench in *Macha Koundan v. Kottara Koundan*², recognising the right of the auction-purchaser to sue for recovery of the purchase money is confined to cases where there has been a total failure of consideration, that is, where the judgment-debtor's interest in the property sold turned out to be nothing and that it does not enable the auction-purchaser to file a suit for recovery of the purchase money where there is only a partial failure of consideration, as where the judgment-debtor is found to be entitled only to a portion of the property sold. So, this is precisely a case of this description because it has turned out that the judgment-debtor's good title is only one-fourth and that in regard to the three-fourths, the judgment-debtor had no title to the property for the satisfaction of this debt.

In the result, this C.M.S.A. is bound to fail and is hereby dismissed with costs of the Government Pleader (4th respondent).

Court-fee—Appeal against an ascertained sum under a final decree in a suit for administration—Article 17-B, Schedule II of Article 1 of Schedule I of Court-Fees Act (VII of 1870)—Applicability.

The clause "in every suit where it is not possible to estimate at a money value of the subject-matter in dispute" in Article 17-B of Schedule II of Court-Fees Act, governs both the words "suit and memorandum of appeal" preceding it. If a suit is to be valued for purposes of court-fees under Article 17-B, Schedule II, the appeal arising out of it is also governed by the same provision of the Court-Fees Act, although the subject-matter of the memorandum of appeal is capable of valuation and the appeal is preferred against an ascertained sum under a final decree. Article 1 of Schedule I of the Court-Fees Act is not applicable in such a case.

T. S. Kuppuswami Aiyar for Petitioner.

D. L. Narasimharaju for the Government Pleader (P. Satyanarayana Raju) on notice from Court.

The Court made the following

ORDER.—This is a reference under section 5 of Court-Fees Act. The facts leading up to this reference may be briefly stated. The plaintiff brought an administration suit against her mother and her three sisters for partition of the plaint schedule property into four shares and for delivery of separate possession of her share and for rendition of accounts of other assets and income from the family property. For purpose of jurisdiction, the suit was valued at Rs. 10,000 and a fixed court-fee of Rs. 100 was paid under Article 17-B of Second Schedule of the Court-Fees Act. A preliminary decree was passed, and there was a direction for an enquiry into other assets and income from the family. A Commissioner was appointed for the purpose and on looking into the accounts, he found that the 2nd defendant who was virtually in management of the estate was liable to pay the plaintiff a sum of Rs. 3,152-8-9. Basing on the Commissioner's report, the District Judge gave a decree inter alia for that sum against the 2nd defendant. The 2nd defendant filed an appeal against that judgment valuing it under Article 1, Schedule I and paying an ad valorem court-fee on the sum of Rs. 3,152-8-9. Realising that she made a mistake in thinking that the matter is governed by Article 1, Schedule I of the Court-Fees Act and in paying a higher court-fee, the appellant has claimed a refund of the excess court-fee.

2. According to the appellant, the appeal would fall for purposes of court-fee under Article 17-B of 2nd Schedule and not under Article 1 of Schedule I of the Court-Fees Act and as she made a bona fide mistake in paying a higher court-fee, the excess should be refunded to her. This petition for refund is opposed by the Government Pleader who contends that the original court-fee paid is correct and that the matter cannot be brought under Article 17-B of Schedule II. Therefore the point for determination is, which of the two provisions of the Court-Fees Act, whether Article 1 of Schedule I or Article 17-B of Schedule II applies to this case.

3. Before I proceed to examine the cases cited on either side, I will refer to the relevant provisions of the Court-Fees Act. Article 1, Schedule I, provides that in respect of the plaint or memorandum of appeal (not otherwise provided for in this Act) an ad valorem court-fee mentioned in column 3 should be paid. First column of Article 17-B of 2nd Schedule runs thus :

"Plaint or memorandum of appeal in every suit where it is not possible to estimate at a money value the subject-matter in dispute and which is not otherwise provided for by this Act."

4. The first question to be answered is what is the provision of the Court-Fees Act that is applicable to an administration suit. In *Khaja Moideen v. Abdul Gaffoor*¹, it was laid down that an administration suit for partition of the assets amongst the heirs of a deceased person and for accounts should be valued under Article 17-B of 2nd Schedule of the Court-Fees Act. That was a suit for the administration of the estate of a deceased Mahomedan woman, for division of the assets amongst the heirs and for accounts. One of the points for decision was whether an administration suit should be treated as a suit for accounts within the meaning of section 7 (iv) (b) of the Court-Fees Act or as one coming under Article 17-B. The learned Judge decided that the appropriate provision of the Court-Fees Act was Article 17-B and not section 7 (iv) (b) as, in his opinion, an administration suit is not a suit for accounts. He agreed with the opinion expressed by Wadsworth, J., in Civil Miscellaneous Appeal No. 235 of 1938.

5. I express my respectful accord with the view taken by Horwill, J., in *Khaja Moideen v. Abdul Gaffoor*¹ and Wadsworth, J., in C.M.A. No. 235 of 1938. As pointed out by Wadsworth, J., an administration suit by an heir is not merely a suit for accounts. The main relief in such a suit is one of division of the assets of the deceased (both movable and immovable) amongst the heirs. Such being the case, the proper provision for purposes of court-fee is Article 17-B as the subject-matter of the suit is incapable of valuation.

6. The next point for consideration is whether the fact that the subject-matter of the appeal is an ascertained sum of money payable by the appellants makes any difference so far as the applicability of the Article 17-B is concerned. It is argued by Mr. Kuppuswami Iyer for the appellant-petitioner that only a fixed court-fee is payable under Article 17-B although what is attacked in the appeal is the direction to pay a fixed amount to the plaintiff. On the other hand the stand taken by the Government Pleader is that Article 17-B ceases to apply to an appeal the subject-matter of which is capable of valuation. According to him the subject-matter in dispute in appeal is not co-extensive with that involved in the suit and hence, the appellant petitioner cannot invoke the provisions of Article 17-B.

7. In support of the contention that an ad valorem court-fee has to be paid and not a fixed court-fee under Article 17-B of the Second Schedule he placed reliance on a Full Bench decision of this Court in *In re : Dhanukodi Nayakar and others*¹. That was a suit for accounts and a preliminary decree was passed for ascertaining accounts. In the final decree, the defendants were held liable to pay a certain amount to the plaintiff. In the appeal by the defendant against that judgment, he sought to value the relief claimed by him arbitrarily. It was held by the Full Bench that he could not do it because, section 7 (iv) (f) of the Court-Fees Act referred to the plaintiff who could put his own value, and had no application to the defendant. I do not think that his case has any bearing on the question for decision before me. If it is conceded, that the present case falls within the purview of section 7 (iv) (f), then the decision cited will be applicable.

8. Another ruling cited by the Government Pleader is that of Mack, J., in *Kadiyala Peravadhannulu v. Kadiyala Peravadhannulu*². The learned Judge expressed the opinion, following *In re : Dhanukodi Nayakar and others*¹ that in an appeal against a decree passed in a partition suit for payment of a specific sum, ad valorem court-fee has to be paid under Article 1, Schedule I of the Court-fees Act on the subject-matter of the appeal. The learned Judge remarked that

“for fiscal purposes the liability of a manager of Hindu Joint family business to account to other members of the joint family cannot be differentiated from an ordinary suit for account as between partners.”

9. The exact nature of the reliefs asked for is not clear from the report. So it is difficult to see how far the principle underlying it is applicable to these cases on hand and whether it contains a correct statement of law. If, however, what is meant by the observations extracted above is that there is no difference for fiscal purposes between an ordinary suit for accounts and a suit for partition and for an account of outstandings due to the joint family, having family business, I have to express my respectful dissent from it. The right of a coparcener to demand an account, when it existed is an incident to the right of partition of the family properties. The principle is the same even with regard to the joint family business.

10. In this context the observations of Jwala Prasad, J., in *Jyotibati Chaudhurai v. Lakshmeshwar Prasad Chaudhuri*³ are apposite.

“Ordinarily, therefore, there can be no suit for accounts against a karta. He can be asked not to render an account as an agent on behalf of the other members, but only to disclose the properties including cash in his hands and that might necessitate looking into the accounts. A disclosure of property is not rendition of account, the word “account” in a suit for partition and accounts against a karta being used for convenience sake, and not in the legal sense to bring it within the expression used in section 7 (iv) (f) of the Court-Fees Act. Section 7 (iv) (f) applies to a suit for account. The test is : “Can a junior member without claiming partition, bring a suit for accounts against a karta? If he cannot, then the relief as to accounts becomes subsidiary to the principal relief of partition. Therefore it will not be correct to say that wherever there is a relief asking for accounts in the sense of disclosure as to the existing state of the family finances, the suit embraces two subject-matters namely, a partition and an account. A suit for accounts implies a liability to account.”

11. The other cases relied on by the Government Pleader as supporting his plea are *Bala Venkatarama Chettiar v. Maruthamuthu Chetti*¹ and *In re : Porkodi Achi*².

12. In *Bala Venkatarama Chettiar v. Maruthamuthu Chetti*¹ a suit was filed on a promissory note executed by certain persons as trustees, a decree was passed against them personally and the aggrieved trustees filed an appeal against it. They wanted to value the appeal under Article 17-B on the ground that they did not question the decree but were only seeking to avoid a personal liability. It was laid down by Venkataramana Rao, J., that Article 17-B was not applicable as the amount for which they were made liable, was ascertained. I do not think this case has any bearing on the point for determination before me because the suit being for the recovery of a definite sum, it could not be said that it was not possible to estimate the subject-matter in dispute. Such a case cannot attract the provisions of Article 17-B. Therefore the contention that Article 17-B was applicable was rightly rejected in that case, if I may say so with respect, by the learned Judge.

13. *In re : Porkodi Achi*², a sale by the mother was set aside, in a suit by her daughter as an heir to the estate of her father, subject to her paying certain amount to the vendee which was found to have been incurred by the mother for a binding purpose. In the appeal, the plaintiff wanted to get rid of the direction for the payment of the money to the defendant and the appeal was valued under Article 17-B of the Court-Fees Act. The appellant sought to pay a fixed court-fee of Rs. 10 on the ground that the condition imposed was incapable of being estimated in money value. The learned judge observed that the valuation of the condition was clearly determined by the amount payable and no other valuation was possible. That case cannot give any assistance in the determination of the question before me because that was not a suit attracting the provisions of Article 17-B of the Second Schedule of the Court-Fees Act.

14. I will now refer to the decisions cited by Mr. Kuppuswami Iyer for the position that an appeal arising out of a suit falling under Article 17-B is governed by the same provision, although the subject-matter in dispute in the appeal is a definite sum.

15. In *Veluchami Pillai v. Sankaralingam Pillai*³, one of the parties in a partition suit was directed to pay a certain amount to the plaintiff towards equalisation of the shares in a final decree proceedings. The question arose whether the appeal against that decree was to be valued under Article 17-B of Second Schedule or under Article 1 of Schedule I of the Court-Fees Act. The learned Judge relying upon the ruling of the Calcutta High Court in *Jyoti Prasad Singha Deo v. Jogendra Ram Ray*⁴ and a decision of the Patna High Court in *Jyotibati Chaudhurai v. Lakshmeshwar Prasad Chaudhuri*⁵, to which I have already alluded, decided that the matter should be treated as wholly incapable of valuation and therefore coming within the meaning of Article 17-B of Second Schedule of the Court-Fees Act.

16. In *Jyoti Prasad Singha Deo v. Jogendra Ram Ray*⁴, in the original final decree granted by the Court, there was a direction for payment of costs aggregating to Rs. 1,573 to the successful party. Subsequently, this direction was deleted. The plaintiff preferred an appeal claiming the sum which was originally granted to him by way of costs. The question was whether the ad valorem court-fee was required to be paid under Article 1 of Schedule I or whether it was sufficient to pay a fixed court-fee under Article 17-B of the Second Schedule. In dealing with that question, the learned Judge observed that "It does not matter whether the ground of attack is with reference to the allotment of specific portion of immovable or movable property or the ground of attack is the question of costs."

He also proceeded on the assumption that when owelty was directed to be paid to one of the parties the party aggrieved was entitled to prefer an appeal valuing it as in a partition suit and that there was no difference in principle between that and a case where the appeal was directed against the order on the question of costs.

1. (1940) 2 M.L.J. 946.

2. (1921) 41 M.L.J. 587; I.L.R. 45 Mad. 246.

3. (1949) 2 M.L.J. 782.

5. (1929) I.L.R. 8 Pat. 818.

17. In *Jyotibati Chaudhurain v. Lakshmeshwar Prasad Chaudhuri*¹, there was a suit for partition, which resulted in a decree inter alia for a specific sum of Rs. 60,426 in favour of the plaintiff against the manager of the joint family. The aggrieved manager preferred an appeal against that decree. The point having arisen as to the correct provision of the Court-Fees Act applicable, it was decided, that the court-fee was payable under Article 17-B. In my opinion, the principle adumbrated in these cases is a sound one and I express my respectful agreement with it.

18. Although in all these three cases, the decrees which were attacked in the appeals were passed in partition actions, the principle is the same and applies to an administrative suit like the present one. In my opinion if a suit is to be valued for purposes of court-fees under Article 17-B, the appeal arising out of it is also governed by the same provision of the Court-Fees Act.

19. In this context, the expressions used in Article 17-B should be borne in mind, namely,

"Plaint or memorandum of appeal in every suit where it is not possible to estimate at a money value the subject-matter in dispute."

The construction to be placed on this clause depends on the question whether the expression

"In every suit, where it is not possible to estimate at a money value," governs only the plaint, or the memorandum of appeal as well. If it governs memorandum of appeal also, then although the subject-matter of the memorandum of appeal is capable of valuation, still it falls within the purview of that article, because the memorandum of appeal is in the suit in which it is not possible to estimate at a money value the subject-matter in dispute. A plain reading of the clause inclines me to the view that the clause governs both the words "suits" "and memorandum of appeal" preceding it.

20. What emerges from the above discussion is that an administration suit for division of the assets of a deceased person amongst his heirs should be valued under Article 17-B of Second Schedule of the Court-Fees Act and in an appeal arising out of such a suit, court-fee need not be computed on an ad valorem basis under Article 1 of Schedule I of the Court-Fees Act as it is also governed by Article 17-B of Second Schedule.

21. It follows that it was not necessary to pay the ad valorem court-fee on the sum aggregating to Rs. 3,152-8-9 and a fixed court-fee under Article 17-B would have been sufficient. The appellant is therefore entitled to a refund of the excess amount of court-fee paid by her.

22. Consequently the office is directed to issue the necessary certificate. The reference is answered accordingly.

23. As an indulgence is granted to the petitioner in directing the refund of the court-fees, she will pay the costs of the Government Pleader which I fix at Rs. 30.

PRESENT :—MR. JUSTICE SOMASUNDARAM.

Baggiam alias Chintamani

Petitioner.*

Madras District Police Act (XXIV of 1859), section 47—Applicability to the City of Madras—"Charge"—Meaning.

Since 1st September, 1867, when Madras Act VIII of 1867 came into force, the District Police Act XXIV of 1859 is in force in the City of Madras. Section 47 of that Act is applicable to the City. Section 16 of the City Police Act does not take away the right under the Madras District Police Act. Section 47 of the District Police Act creates an offence in respect of not only allegations made against the public officer, but also for assaulting or resisting any police officer in the execution of his duty and for aiding or inciting any other person so as to assault or resist any police officer.

There is no identity of meaning between section 47 of the Madras District Police Act and section 211 of the Indian Penal Code, with regard to the word "charge" in the two sections. It need not be of an offence as under the Penal Code. False and frivolous allegations against a constable will amount to "charges" under section 47 of the District Police Act and a person making such "charges" is liable to be convicted even if it is in the City of Madras.

Petition under sections 435 and 439, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, praying that the High Court will be pleased to revise the order of the Court of the 4th Presidency Magistrate, G.T., Madras, dated 27th November, 1951, in C.C. No. 4722 of 1951.

A. A. S. Mustapa for Petitioner.

The State Prosecutor (S. Govind Swaminathan) for the State.

The Court made the following

ORDER.—The petitioner in this case has been convicted by the Fourth Presidency Magistrate for an offence under section 47 of the Madras District Police Act (XXIV of 1859) and sentenced to a fine of Rs. 30 in default to three weeks' rigorous imprisonment.

The facts of the case may be briefly stated as follows: The petitioner sent a petition, Exhibit P-1, dated 28th May, 1951 to the Inspector-General of Police alleging therein that P.C. 2144 of B-2 station was troubling her daily asking for a mamool of Rs. 10 that he was inducing her to run a brothel and that he was taking bribes. The petition was forwarded to the Sub-Inspector of B-2 station for enquiry. P.W. 2, the Sub-Inspector of B-2 station inquired into the matter and sent a report that the allegations are false and that they were made with a view to remove the police surveillance on her. Thereupon this complaint was laid in Court against the accused for an offence under section 47 of the Madras District Police Act. Both in the enquiry by the Sub-Inspector and before the court beyond her statement no other evidence was let in in support of her allegations in the petition. In the enquiry before the Sub-Inspector a witness was cited, who did not speak to anything more than that the police constable concerned used to come often to the house of the petitioner and question her in an authoritative manner. In the court the witnesses cited by her spoke to the fact that they saw the constable one day coming and talking to the accused. The prosecution examined P.C. 2144 in support of its case that the allegations made against him are false. He stated in his evidence that he had taken action against the petitioner under section 4 (1) of the Madras Prohibition Act and her brother Mari was also charged by him under section 75 of the City Police Act and that he had also taken action against the accused under section 75 of the City Police Act in respect of girls kept by her in her house, whom he arrested. He also stated that on account of his taking action against her, her brother and the girls kept by her, she has sent this petition against him. The Sub-Inspector who made the enquiry was also examined by the prosecution and he filed a report which was submitted to the Commissioner of Police. The Magistrate believed the evidence of the constable, P.W. 2 and as the allegations in the petition, Ex. P-1 were not substantiated by the accused the Magistrate came to the conclusion very rightly in my opinion that the allegations contained in Ex. P-1 are false and that they were maliciously made by the accused. The petitioner was therefore convicted under the aforesaid section.

In revision two points of law were canvassed before me: (1) Sec. 47 is a provision in the Madras District Police Act and it is not applicable to the City as a separate City Police Act governs the conduct of the police officers in the City, and therefore section 47 cannot be invoked in respect of the allegations made against the City constable; and (2) As under section 16 of the Police (Madras City) Act any police officer appointed under the provisions of Act XXIV of 1859 (Madras District Police Act), if employed in the City, shall have the same duties, powers and privileges as police officers under the Police (Madras City) Act, and as section 47 confers a privilege only on a constable employed in the district and that this privilege is not conferred on a city constable by the Police (Madras City) Act, this section 47, cannot apply in respect of a city Constable in the absence of a similar provision in the Police (Madras City) Act. So far as the first point is concerned, it must not be forgotten that the Madras District Police Act is a Central Act passed in 1859 for the better regulation of the police within the territories subject to the presidency of the Fort. St. George. Under section 55 of the Act, it can be made applicable to any or every district by a notification of the Provincial Government published in the official Gazette. By section 2 of the Madras Act VIII of 1867, the provisions of Act XXIV of 1859 (Madras District Police Act) have been made applicable to the persons, who at that time belonged to or would thereafter belong to the town police. By virtue of this provision, since 1st September, 1867, when the Madras Act VIII of 1867 came into force, the District Police Act (Act XXIV of 1859) is in force in the City of Madras. This is further clear from another Act of the Central Legislature, viz., Act XV of 1874. That is an act for declaring the local extent of certain enactments and for other purposes. Section 4 of the above Act is as follows :

"The enactments mentioned in the Second Schedule hereto annexed are now in force throughout the whole of the territories now subject to the Government of Fort. St. George in Council, except the scheduled district subject to such Government."

Act XXIV of 1859 is one of the Acts referred to in the Second Schedule (vide page 257 of Vol. II, of the Unrepealed Central Act, 2nd Edn.) Apart from the Madras Act VIII of 1867, the Central Act XV of 1874 makes it clear that this Madras District Police Act is applicable to the police in the City of Madras. This covers practically the second point also, though I will deal with it separately.

As regards the second point about section 16 of the City Police Act, I do not see how it takes away the right under the Madras District Police Act, which as stated already is applicable to the police in the City of Madras. Section 47 creates an offence in respect of not only allegations made against the police officer, but also for assaulting or resisting any police officer in the execution of his duty and for aiding or inciting any other person so to assault or resist any police officer. This has nothing to do with the privileges of a constable in the City. Even if it is considered as a privilege, I do not see how it can make any difference as the Madras District Police Act applies to the City also. There is therefore no substance in either of the two points raised by the learned advocate for the petitioner.

The only other question is whether the petitioner can be said to have preferred a false or frivolous charge against P.C. 2414. I have already held that the learned Magistrate was justified in coming to the conclusion that the allegations made are false and were maliciously made. The question is whether it is a charge against a police officer.

The word "charge" is not defined either in the Act or in the Code of Criminal Procedure. The ordinary meaning given to it in Wharton's Law Lexicon is "to prefer an accusation against any one." What exactly is meant by "charge" has been considered by two decisions of this Court in connection with its meaning in section 211, Indian Penal Code. The two decisions are *Rayan Kutti v. Emperor*¹, and *The Sessions Judge, Tinnevely Division v. Sivan Chetti*². It has also been considered by the Calcutta High Court in *Abdul Hakim Khan Choudhuri v. Emperor*³. Both *Rayan Kutti v. Emperor*¹, and *Abdul Hakim Khan Choudhuri v. Emperor*³ have been considered by King, J., in *Kotha Achayya Setti v. Emperor*⁴. As already stated the three decisions in *Rayan Kutti v. Emperor*¹, *Sessions Judge, Tinnevely Division v. Sivan Chetti*² and *Abdul Hakim Khan Choudhuri v. Emperor*³ referred to by me deal only with the meaning of the word in section 211, Indian Penal Code. But *Kotha Achayya Setti v. Emperor*⁴, deals with the meaning of the word in section 47 of the Madras District Police Act. I must say that in section 211, Indian Penal Code, the charge must be one against any person with having committed an offence. The sense

2. (1909) I.L.R. 32 Mad. 258.

3. (1931) I.L.R. 59 Cal. 334.

4. (1937) 2 M.L.J. 435.

therefore in which the word is used in section 211, Indian Penal Code, is different from that in which it is used in section 47, Madras District Police Act. I entirely agree with King, J., that there is no identity of meaning between section 47 of the Madras District Police Act and section 211, Indian Penal Code, with regard to the word "charge" in the two sections. The rulings therefore in *Rayan Kutti v. Emperor*¹, *Sessions Judge, Tinnevely Division v. Sivan Chetti*² and *Abdul Hakim Khan Chowdhuri v. Emperor*³ will not apply to a case under section 47 of the Madras District Police Act. I would therefore hold that the allegations by the petitioner against P.C. 2144 amount to a false and frivolous charge against him and that they were made maliciously. The lower Court is justified in convicting the petitioner for an offence under section 47 of the Madras District Police Act and the sentence is not excessive. This petition is therefore dismissed.

PRESENT :—MR. JUSTICE GOVINDA MENON AND MR. JUSTICE BASHEER AHMED SAYEED.

Muthuraman Chettiar and another

.. Appellants in A. A. O. of 1952

(sought to be preferred to the High Court).*

Arbitration Act (X of 1940), section 39 (1)—Order of single Judge of High Court superseding a reference to arbitration and directing the suit to be tried—If open to appeal.

Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908), section 115—Order of single Judge of High Court under—Not appealable to a bench.

The Judge sitting for hearing revision petitions is not a different Court from a Division Bench hearing appeals. All the Judges constitute members of the same Court and both are parts of the same institution. Section 39 (1) of the Arbitration Act contemplates two different Courts, viz., a Court which supersedes the arbitration and a different Court which is authorised by law to hear appeals from the original decrees of the Court passing the order. As the Courts are the same no appeal lies as the requirements of section 39 (1) have not been satisfied. Clause 15 of the Letters Patent definitely says that an order passed under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code by a single Judge of the High Court is not appealable to a Bench.

Accordingly, no appeal lies against an order passed by a single Judge of the High Court under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code whereby a reference to an arbitration has been superseded and the suit is directed to be tried.

S. R. 38068 of 1952 sought to be preferred to the High Court against the order of the Honourable Mr. Justice Raghava Rao dated 29th July, 1952, and made in C. R. P. No. 2037 of 1951, preferred against the order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Pudukottai, dated 19th November, 1951, and made in I. A. No. 1298 of 1951, in O. S. No. 113 of 1949.

R. Viswanathan and S. Gopalaratnam for proposed appellants.

The Government Pleader (P. Satyanarayana Raju) on notice from Court.

The Order of the Court was made by Govinda Menon, J.—A question has been referred to us as to whether an appeal lies against an order passed by a single Judge of this Court under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code whereby a reference to an arbitration has been superseded and the suit is directed to be tried. Since the respondent was unrepresented at this stage, we gave notice to the learned Government pleader who has been heard on the question of maintainability.

There was a suit for partition in which a reference to arbitration was made. There were three arbitrators, one of whom was nominated by the plaintiff and another by the defendant. After some time when the proceedings were stagnating, the defendant filed an application that since the arbitrator nominated by the plaintiff was not functioning and was non-co-operating with the other arbitrators,

1. (1903) I.L.R. 26 Mad. 640.

2. (1909) I.L.R. 32 Mad. 258.

3. (1931) I.L.R. 59 Cal. 334.

the Court may be pleased to remove him and appoint another in his stead. The plaintiff also filed an application, but the prayer was that the arbitration should be superseded and the suit should be tried on the merits. The learned Subordinate Judge dismissed the plaintiff's application for superseding the arbitration and allowed the defendant's application for the nomination of a new arbitrator. Two revisions were filed to this Court under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code by the plaintiff, one against the order dismissing his application and the other against the order nominating a new arbitrator. Both of them were heard together by our learned brother Raghava Rao, J., who by a common order allowed the revision against the order dismissing the application to supersede the arbitration and also allowed the revision against the order by which a new arbitrator was to be nominated. The result of the allowance of these two revision petitions was that the arbitration was superseded and the suit was directed to be tried on the merits. The present attempt is by the defendant to file an appeal against the order of Raghava Rao, J. The office has taken the objection that an appeal is not maintainable and the matter has come before us for arguments.

Mr. R. Viswanathan for the proposed appellant relies upon section 39 (1) (i) of the Indian Arbitration Act and contends that since the arbitration has been superseded for the first time by this Court, an appeal will lie under that clause. He invited our attention to a decision in *Munisami Mudaliar v. Rajaratnam Pillai*¹, in which a Full Bench of this Court held that an order of sanction to prosecute a party for giving false evidence passed by a Judge sitting on the Original side of this High Court is appealable to a Division Bench under the provisions of section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The unamended section 195 (6) was to the following effect :

"Any sanction given or refused under this section may be revoked or granted by any authority to which the authority giving or refusing it is subordinate."

Then, sub-section (7) stated as follows :—

"For the purposes of this section every Court shall be deemed subordinate only to the Court to which appeals from the former court ordinarily lie."

On a construction of these two sub-sections, the Full Bench held that an appeal lay to the Division Bench hearing appeals from a single Judge on the Original side of the High Court, from an order granting sanction. On the analogy of this decision, the learned counsel contends that a Division Bench on the Appellate side is a Court authorised by law to hear appeals from original decrees of the Court passing the order. What is urged is that supposing on the original side of this Court an order superseding arbitration is passed, then under section 39 (1) an appeal will lie to this Court itself which will be heard on the Appellate Side by a Division Bench.

The difficulty in accepting this contention is that when the learned Judge heard the two revisions before him he was exercising a power conferred upon him under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code as is made clear by section 41 (a) of the Arbitration Act which is to the effect that :

"the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, shall apply to all proceedings before the Court, and to all appeals under this Act."

In *Gauri Shankar Bhargava v. Jagat Narain Shahgal*², a single Judge in considering the nature of the powers exercised in revision expressed the view that as a 'decree' as defined in section 2 of the Civil Procedure Code means the formal expression of an adjudication which, so far as regards the Court expressing it, conclusively determines the rights of the parties with regard to all or any of the matters in controversy in the suit an order passed in revision undoubtedly comes within this definition. It is not necessary for us to rely on this decision for the proposition that the powers of revision are those exercised in the Appellate Jurisdiction. Section 115 makes it clear that a power of revision can only be exercised by the High Court when no appeal is provided to it, in its Appellate Jurisdiction. We, therefore, are of opinion that when Raghava Rao, J., superseded the arbitration, he was functioning as an appellate Court and when he functions as an appellate Court there is a prohibition that no second appeal shall lie from an order passed by him under section 39 (2) of the Arbitration Act. This is concluded so far as this Court is concerned by the decision in Radhakrishnamurthy v. Ethirajulu Chetty and Co.,¹ which view has found acceptance in *Madhavadas v. Vithaldas*², and *R. Wright and Partner, Ltd. v. Governor-General in Council*³. If in an appeal an order is passed superseding an arbitration and no second appeal can lie from such an order, we fail to see how there can be an appeal against an order passed in revision. Clause 15 of the Letters Patent definitely says that an order passed under section 115 by a single Judge of the High Court is not appealable to a Bench.

Even on the wording of section 39 (1), in our opinion, there can be no appeal. The Judge sitting for hearing revision petitions is not a different Court from a Division Bench hearing appeals. All the Judges constitute members of the same Court and both are parts of one and the same institution. It cannot be said that a Judge sitting on the appellate side singly is a Court different from a Division Bench. Section 39 (1) contemplates two different Courts, viz., a Court which supersedes the arbitration and a different Court which is authorised by law to hear appeals from the original decrees of the Court passing the order. Since there is no duality of Courts in this case, we cannot say that there can be any application of section 39 (1) on the facts of the present case. Mr. Viswanathan was asked the question as to what would be the result if a Division Bench for the first time hears a revision under section 115 and supersedes an arbitration in which case would it be that an appeal can lie from a Division Bench to a Full Bench under section 39 (1)? The learned Counsel is compelled to answer that since there is no other Court, an appeal would not lie except to the Supreme Court. In the view which we take, that the Courts are one and the same, no appeal lies. The requirements of section 39 (1) have not been satisfied and the papers will be returned to the proposed appellant.

Penal Code (XLV of 1860), section 292—"Obscene"—Test—Prosecution under section 292—If evasion of Press (Objectionable Matters) Act (LVI of 1951).

It is a question of fact in each case whether a particular book falls within the meaning of the word "obscene" in section 292 of the Indian Penal Code. "Obscene" means "offensive to chastity or modesty"; expressing or presenting to the mind or view something that delicacy, purity, and decency forbid to be expressed; impure "expressing or suggesting unchaste and lustful ideas, impure, indecent, lewd."

A prosecution under section 292 of the Indian Penal Code does not in any way amount to an evasion of the provisions of the Press (Objectionable Matters) Act (LVI of 1951).

The object of Act LVI of 1951 is only to provide against printing and publication of objectionable matter and not to punish where there has been publication or printing. That Act does not in any way repeal any provision of the Penal Code and is no bar to the prosecution for an offence under section 292, Indian Penal Code. The printer cannot be convicted in the absence of proof that the book was printed by him. When a prosecution does not make out a case against an accused, no question shall be put to the accused under section 342, Criminal Procedure Code; and any answer that he might give cannot be used to fill up the gaps in the prosecution case.

V. S. Chandrasekharan for 2nd Accused.

A. C. Muthanna for the State Prosecutor for the State.

The Court delivered the following :

JUDGMENT.—The two appellants were tried and convicted by the Chief Presidency Magistrate for an offence under section 292, Indian Penal Code and sentenced each to three months' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 1,000.

The second accused in the case is the keeper of a Press called "Sri Andal Press." This is situated in 175, Lloyds Road, Royapettah. The first accused is the printer and publisher of a book called "Kama Leelai." The book contains pictures of various postures of sexual intercourse with an explanatory note on the opposite page. It is clear from Ex. P-5 filed in the case that the first accused printed as many as 700 copies of the book. The two ledgers Exs. P-2 and P-3 seized by the police show the number of books sold by the first accused. It is clear therefore from these two documents that the first accused has printed and published these books for the purpose of sale. In fact, this is not seriously disputed, though it is stated that the sale was intended only for adults. Even so these books were undoubtedly printed and published for sale.

The prosecution case is that these are obscene books and therefore fall within the mischief of section 292, Indian Penal Code. The learned Chief Presidency Magistrate after referring to the various decisions cited before him has in a well-considered judgment held that they are obscene. The main question therefore in the appeal is whether these books are obscene within the meaning of the term in section 292, Indian Penal Code.

The word "obscene" is not defined in the Code. The natural and ordinary meaning of the term as given by the dictionaries is this :

Webster's New International Dictionary :

"Obscene : Offensive to chastity or modesty ; expressing or presenting to the mind or view something that delicacy, purity and decency forbid to be expressed ; impure, as obscene language, obscene pictures."

Oxford New English Dictionary :

"Obscene : Offensive to modesty or decency ; expressing or suggesting unchaste and lustful ideas ; impure, indecent, lewd."

It is therefore a question of fact in each case whether a particular book falls within the meaning of this word. In this case a perusal of the book will convince anyone that it falls within the meaning given above. The book therefore is obscene and the offence is clearly made out.

It is contended by the learned counsel for the appellant that this is a matter which falls more within the scope of Act LVI of 1951 (The Press Objectionable Matter Act, 1951), and a proceeding against the appellant for an offence under section 292, Indian Penal Code, really amounts to an evasion of the provisions of that Act. The provisions in the above Act regarding the publication of books which contains any objectionable matter and which as per section 3 (6) of the Act include publications which are grossly indecent or obscene are contained in section 11 and it only deals with the forfeiture of those books to the Government. There is nowhere in that Act anything to indicate that section 292, Indian Penal Code, is either abrogated or superseded. In my view the prosecution of the appellants for an offence under section 292, Indian Penal Code, does not in any way amount to evading the provisions of Act LVI of 1951.

It is next contended that there are several such books which are published and which are under circulation and those publishers have not been prosecuted. In support of that, certain exhibits have been filed by the defence advocate. The fact that other publishers of similar publications have not been prosecuted does not mean that the book in question does not fall within the scope of section 292, Indian Penal Code. We are concerned here only with the question whether this book is an obscene publication within the meaning of the term under section 292, Indian Penal Code. The argument of the learned counsel in my opinion is without force.

It is further contended that by this prosecution the accused must have been deprived of their rights to have the matter decided by a jury in accordance with the provisions of Act LVI of 1951. That Act is intended mainly to provide against the printing and publication of objectionable matter. Its object is to prevent and not to punish. As already stated that Act does not in any way repeal any of the provisions in the Indian Penal Code. Act LVI of 1951 is no bar to the prosecution for an offence under section 292, Indian Penal Code. The contentions in my opinion of the learned counsel fail.

But so far as the second accused is concerned, there is no proof that these books were printed in his press except what is printed on the books as to where they are printed. The presumption which applies under section 7 of Act XXV of 1867 to the printer and publisher does not apply to the keeper of a press. Apart from Ex. P-5, the presumption under section 7 of the Act XXV of 1867 makes it clear that the first accused is the printer and publisher of these books. There is no such presumption against the keeper of a press. No evidence has been let in that this was printed in this press. It is true that the second accused admits in his statement that he was the keeper of the press and that at the time when the copies of the book in question were printed, he was out of Madras. He also admits that they were printed in his press for sale. It is a well-recognised principle that when the prosecution does not make out a case against an accused, no question shall be put to the accused under section 342, Criminal Procedure Code and any answer that he might give cannot be used to fill up the gaps in the prosecution case. The case therefore against the second accused that he was the keeper of the press in which this book was printed has not been proved and the conviction and sentence of the second accused are set aside and he is acquitted. The fine if paid will be refunded.

So far as the first accused is concerned, I have already pointed out that there is a presumption under section 7 of Act XXV of 1867, and there is also Ex. P-5, which clearly shows that he was the printer and publisher. I have already held that the book is an obscene one within the meaning of the term in section 292, Indian Penal Code. His guilt is therefore established beyond all doubt. I therefor confirm his conviction. As regards the sentence, the learned Chief Presidency Magistrate observes :

"The accused show no signs of repentance and are bent upon printing and selling pornographic publication."

Even so in view of the undertaking given by the learned advocate for the accused that he shall not print any more copies extra I think that the ends of justice will be met by sentencing him to the period undergone and a fine of Rs. 500, in default 2 weeks' rigorous imprisonment.

With these modifications the appeal of the first accused is dismissed, while the appeal of the second accused is allowed.

Court-Fees Act (VII of 1870), section 7 (xi) (cc)—Suit for arrears of rent and recovery of possession—Section 7 (d), ad valorem court-fee when payable.

The question of title cannot be gone into in a suit for rent brought under section 7 (xi) (cc) of the Court-Fees Act.

Court-fee has to be determined in the first instance on the plaint averments. Even enhanced court-fee can be paid on a plaint originally filed on the footing of landlord and tenant if one of the defendants puts up a defence of adverse possession and challenges the plaintiff's position as landlord. In such a case the plaintiff can amend his plaint and pay the necessary additional court-fee under section 7 (v) (d) of the Court-Fees Act for recovery of possession.

Balasidhantam v. Perumal Chetti, (1914) 27 M.L.J. 475, followed. Shanmuga Nadar v. Kandaswami Nadar, (1936) 71 M.L.J. 842 and Hiralal Banerjee v. Surendranath Sarbanga, A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 504, referred to.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—A simple point of court-fee is raised in this Civil Revision Petition. The petitioner is the plaintiff who sued the two defendants for arrears of rent amounting to Rs. 126-0-3 and recovery of possession of the land on the basis of the relationship of landlord and tenant valuing the suit for purposes of court-fee under section 7, clause (xi) (cc) of the Court-Fees Act. The District Munsiff upheld the objection taken by the court-fee examiner that ad valorem court-fee should be paid under section 7, clause (v) (d) of the Court-Fees Act.

Court-fee has to be determined in the first instance on the plaint averments. According to the plaint the original owner of the land was the first defendant who executed an usufructuary mortgage on it in favour of the plaintiff. A year later the plaintiff leased it back to the first defendant for one year. The plaint alleged that the first defendant continued therefore in possession as a tenant holding over, and further more that the second defendant had purchased the land from the first defendant subject to the usufructuary mortgage. These averments, reasonably and liberally construed simply mean that the first defendant had conveyed his rights in the land which were only that of a tenant holding over to the second defendant. This appears to be a fair reading of the plaint which in the circumstances would not justify an inference that the plaintiff was seeking to recover possession from a trespasser who was putting up an adverse title. Even enhanced court-fee can be paid on a plaint originally filed on the footing of landlord and tenant if one of the defendants puts up a defence of adverse title and challenges the plaintiff's position as landlord. In such a case the plaintiff can amend his plaint and pay the necessary additional court-fee under section 7, clause (v) (d) of the Court-Fees Act for recovery of possession. Even according to the written statements filed, there is nothing to indicate that either the first defendant or the second defendant in any way challenged the position of the plaintiff as the usufructuary mortgagee entitled to possession. The second defendant in his written statement pleaded that he purchased the land by a registered sale deed from the first defendant who undertook to discharge the mortgage in question. He at the same time pleaded that the first defendant had not put him into possession at all. There is a curious allegation in paragraph 10 of the written statement to the effect that the suit was brought by the plaintiff against the second defendant maliciously at the instigation of and in collusion with the first defendant. One of the decisions relied on by the court-fee examiner is *Hiralal Banerjee v. Surendranath Sarbanga*¹, decided by Chakravarthi, J., where the plaintiff asked for a declaration of title and also for relief against one of the defendants on the footing that he was a trespasser. It was held that the suit did not come within the scope of section 7 (1) of the Court-Fees Act. In the present case the second defendant was certainly not impleaded as a trespasser but more in the capacity of a sub-tenant from the original tenant who was holding over. There is some support for this view in *Shanmugha Nadar v. Kandaswami Nadar*². Mr. Narasimharaju for the Government Pleader has referred me to *Balasidhantam v. Perumal Chetti*³, which lays down that the question of title cannot be gone into in a suit for rent brought under section 7 (xi) (cc) of the Court-Fees Act. As I read the plaint I find that no question of title is raised. If it arises at the trial it will not be gone into by the trial Court. This petition is allowed and the lower Court's order set aside without any order as to costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Order 21, rule 90—Application to set aside sale—Dismissal for default—Application for restoration—Maintainability under Order 9 and section 151, Civil Procedure Code—Sufficient grounds for non-appearance—What are.—Sale confirmed under Order 21, rule 92, during pendency of such application—Application for restoration allowed subsequently on appeal—Effect of—Earlier order confirming sale—If becomes automatically vacated—Principle of subordinate or dependent order—Applicability and scope—Pendency of an application under Order 21, rule 89, 90 or 91—If a bar to confirmation of sale under Order 21, rule 92.

During the minority of V a judgment-debtor a petition was filed by his guardian-ad-litem under Order 21, rule 90, Civil Procedure Code, to set aside a sale held in execution of a mortgage decree and V ratified and elected to proceed with the same after attaining majority and furnished sufficient security in respect of the same. V who was a college student had to be away on the day on which the petition came up for hearing as his college had then re-opened. The petition was called and dismissed for default as the Advocate reported no instructions and two days later the sale was confirmed under Order 21, rule 92. Subsequently an application under Order 9 and section 151, Civil Procedure Code, was made to set aside the dismissal for default. It was in evidence that V left the case in charge of his erstwhile guardian and took every step, including the securing of attendance of witnesses. (On appeal) Held that (i) in the circumstances, the application to restore the petition dismissed for default could in no view be held a frivolous or vexatious one and there was sufficient cause for non-appearance of the petitioner V, and V's petition to set aside the sale must be restored.

(ii) The effect of restoring the application under Order 21, rule 90, automatically operates to vacate or render ineffective the earlier order confirming the sale under Order 21, rule 92.

Orders under Order 21, rule 92, Civil Procedure Code, are in the nature of contingent or dependent orders and depend upon orders that may be passed on an application under Order 21, rule 89, 90 or 91. Hence when an application to set aside the sale is entertained or allowed the earlier order confirming the sale becomes automatically vacated or may even be considered to be null and void.

Pendency of an application under Order 21, rule 90, Civil Procedure Code, is a bar to an order of confirmation of sale under Order 21, rule 92, being made or remaining effective. By reason of the restoration of the application under Order 21, rule 90, which was dismissed for default, the position is that the application under Order 21, rule 90, must be deemed to be pending and not disposed of. The confirmation of the sale could only be after the disallowance of that application and not any time during its pendency. The effect of entertainment of an application to set aside a sale after orders of confirmation must, having regard to the intention of the Legislature as disclosed in this rule, quite apart from the general theory in such cases, be to render the order ineffective so as to make the sale absolute. The power to confirm the sale is dependent upon the existence and pendency of an application under rule 90 and when such an application has been filed the confirmation made earlier becomes ineffective the reason being that the pendency of an application is a bar to the confirmation being made or remaining effective. Even if the principle of dependent orders and decrees cannot be held to be completely applicable to cases arising under Order 21, rule 92, Civil Procedure Code, the order of confirmation is a dependent order and the restoration of a petition under Order 21, rule 90, makes the confirmation already made ineffective.

Appeal against the orders of the District Court of South Arcot, dated 25th February, 1947, and made in M. P. Nos. 302 of 1944 and 187 of 1946, respectively in O. S. No. 20 of 1937, etc.

S. Jagathisa Aiyar for Appellant.

R. Gopalaswami Aiyangar for Respondent.

Krishnaswami Nayudu, J.—In O. S. No. 20 of 1937 on the file of the District Court of South Arcot a mortgage decree was passed on 6th January, 1939, for a sum of Rs. 3,540-15-4, the mortgagors being the 1st defendant and the 2nd defendant being his minor son represented by the father 1st defendant as guardian-ad-litem. One Muthu Venkatapathi Reddiar as the assignee-decree-holder brought the mortgaged property to sale, the sales having been held on the 11th and 12th September, 1944, and three persons Mahadeva Goundan, Natesa Goundan and Swami Kannu Goundan and the decree-holder purchased the property at the auction. M. P. No. 302 of 1944 was filed on behalf of the minor second defendant for setting aside the sale under Order 21, rule 90 and section 47, Civil Procedure Code, mainly on the ground that there was no proper advertisement and publication of the sale and that the property which was of the value of about Rs. 16,000 fetched a low price of about Rs. 6,442. Sufficient security in immovable properties was furnished on behalf of the 2nd defendant-petitioner and during the pendency of the petition the 2nd defendant having become a major he was declared a major and he elected to proceed with the petition executed a fresh security bond and registered it and the petition was posted for enquiry to the 10th April, 1945. The Court having been engaged in sessions work on that day the petition was adjourned to 10th July, 1945. The petitioner was called on 10th July, 1945, and found absent and his vakil reported no instruction with the result the petition was dismissed. From the endorsement on the petition it is seen that the Advocate asked for adjournment, the adjournment was refused and the petition was dismissed. On 12th July, 1945, the Court passed an order confirming the sale. The petitioner filed a petition under Order 9, and section 151, Civil Procedure Code, for setting aside the order of dismissal but the same was dismissed on the ground that such an application does not lie. Then he appealed to the High Court against the order of dismissal of M. P. No. 302 of 1944 in C. M. A. No. 447 of 1945 and by order of the High Court dated 28th March, 1946, the District Judge of South Arcot was directed to restore the petition (M.P. No. 302 of 1944) on the petitioner paying to the respondents a sum of Rs. 500 as and towards their costs up to that date within one week of the re-opening of the District Court. There is a further direction that the District Judge shall dispose of the petition on the merits in the light of the observations contained in the judgment. In the judgment, the learned Judge observed that the petitioner was a college student and his antecedent conduct with reference to the petition did not justify the view that he was really unmindful of the petition and did not care as to what happened to it and that he should be given an opportunity to satisfy the District Judge that he had good grounds for non-appearance on the date of the hearing and that his petition was not a frivolous or vexatious one. The learned Judge's order proceeds as follows:—

"If the appellant pays within one week of the re-opening of the District Court, Cuddalore, to the respondents a sum of Rs. 500 as and towards their costs of the proceedings held so far, to be retained by them in any event and irrespective of the result of the petition, the order of the lower Court will stand set aside and the petition will be restored to file and disposed of according to law. The District Judge will first go into the question, whether the appellant had satisfactory grounds for being absent on the 10th July, which is the subject-matter of the miscellaneous petition filed by the appellant for the restoration of the petition under Order 21, rule 90, Civil Procedure Code which was dismissed for default. If he is satisfied that the appellant had good grounds for non-appearance, the petition will be dealt with on its merits."

The petitioner complied with the order for costs and it is found from the endorsement on the petition, that M. P. No. 302 of 1944 was restored to file on 27th June, 1946. On 13th August, 1946, the petitioner paid into Court the amount due under the decree and on 27th August, 1946, he filed M. P. No. 187 of 1946 for vacating the order of confirmation of sale made on 12th July, 1945. On 31st August, 1946, the petitioner filed another petition M. P. No. 213 of 1946 under Order 34, rule 5, Civil Procedure Code and asked for setting aside the sales. All these petitions were heard and orders were passed on 25th February, 1947, dismissing them. C. M. A. No. 117 of 1947 is against the order dismissing M. P. No. 302 of 1944, which was restored to file and which was for setting aside the sale under Order 21, rule 90, Civil Procedure Code. C. M. A. No. 355 of 1947 is against the order dismissing M. P. No. 187 of 1946, filed for vacating the order of confirmation and C. R. P. No. 390 of 1947 is against the order dismissing M. P. No. 213 of 1946 filed under Order 34, rule 5, Civil Procedure Code.

It is contended on behalf of the 2nd defendant-appellant that the learned District Judge erred in dismissing the petitions both on grounds of fact and of law. It is urged that M. P. No. 302 of 1944 having been directed to be restored to file by the High Court in its order in C. M. A. No. 447 of 1945, and accordingly restored by the District Court by its order, dated 27th June, 1946 the confirmation of sale made on 12th July, 1945, after the disposal by the District Court on 10th July, 1945, of M. P. No. 302 of 1944 would stand automatically vacated and that, in any event, the learned District Judge erred in not vacating the order of confirmation even on the application M. P. No. 187 of 1946 filed by the appellant. Further, it is urged that the learned District Judge erred in dismissing M. P. No. 302 of 1944 and that the evidence adduced did not justify the conclusion arrived at, namely, that the appellant had not sufficient cause for his failure to appear on 10th July, 1945.

It may be convenient to consider the order of dismissal on the merits before dealing with the other question raised. The direction of the High Court to the District Judge is, that he should go into the question whether the appellant had satisfactory grounds for being absent on the 10th July and if the District Judge was satisfied that the appellant had good grounds for non-appearance, he could proceed to deal with the application on its merits. From the conduct of this petition prior to the date of dismissal it will be seen that security was furnished while he was a minor and after he became a major he himself elected to proceed with the petition and further filed a security bond by himself. For the first time the petition was posted and came up for hearing on 10th April, 1945 and on the ground that the Court was engaged with Sessions work it was adjourned to 10th July, 1945. In fact that was really the first day of the hearing.

The appellant was a student in the Honours class in the Annamalai University and the college re-opened on 3rd July, 1945 and therefore he had to go away to the college. He says he informed his erstwhile guardian Natesa Goundan that he would go to the college and his guardian told him that he would take the witnesses on the date of the hearing. He says that he trusted him and went to the college, but later he found that Natesa Goundan committed fraud in collusion with the purchaser and while he took the witnesses to the Court, he did not take them to the house of the vakil and made them return on the representation that the case was adjourned. P.Ws. 2 and 3 are the witnesses who say that they attended the Court on 10th July, 1945, and that Natesa Goundan did not take them to the Advocate but left them in the Court compound under a banyan tree and after some time came and represented that the petition stood adjourned to 13th July, 1945, and thereafter they returned. Excepting a minor discrepancy in the evidence of these witnesses as to whether they returned by bus or by walk, substantially the evidence of these witnesses supports the case of the appellant that in so far as these witnesses were concerned, they were present in Court and the hearing of the petition could have been proceeded with even in the absence of the appellant and since the appellant was a minor at the time of the sale he could not have been of much help in adding to the evidence of these witnesses. Respondent 3 examined himself as R. W. 1 and from the printed copy of his evidence it is found that he stated that he had come to Court with his witnesses on the hearing date (10th July, 1945) and that both Natesa Goundan and P.Ws. 1, 2 and 3 came. But the learned District Judge in his judgment while referring to the evidence of R. W. 1 mentions R.W. 1 as having stated that on that day, neither the guardian of the petitioner, Natesa Goundan, nor P.Ws. 1, 2 and 3 came to Court. There is this discrepancy in the evidence as recorded and the evidence as understood by the learned Judge. If the witnesses were present as stated by R. W. 1, then there could be no ground for holding that the appellant was not ready to go on with the enquiry. But, whatever may be the evidence of R. W. 1, we find it difficult to reject the evidence of P.Ws. 2 and 3, against whom nothing is alleged as being in any way interested in the appellant and both of them have sworn that they came to Court but were made to wait in the compound and had to return on the false representation of the erstwhile guardian of the appellant that the case had been adjourned. The learned Judge does not disbelieve the evidence of the appellant as P.W. 1. It appears to us that the appellant had made arrangements for the conduct of the enquiry, and relied upon Natesa Goundan to take the witnesses and, in our opinion, it would be sufficient to hold that he was diligent and by reason of the opening of the College he had sufficient cause to be away. It is unlikely from the way in which the petition was conducted that having furnished security and after taking every step including securing the attendance of the witnesses, the appellant is likely to have allowed the petition to go by default. Further, the direction of the High Court is that the District Judge should give an opportunity to the appellant to show that he had good grounds for non-appearance on the date of the hearing and that his petition was not a frivolous or vexatious one. We are of opinion that there was sufficient cause for his non-appearance and that in no view could it be held that the petition was a frivolous or vexatious one. The learned District Judge should not have dismissed the petition, without further considering the question whether it was a frivolous or vexatious one. The order dismissing M. P. No. 302 of 1944 is therefore liable to be set aside.

In view of the restoration of M. P. No. 302 of 1944, the petition under Order 21, rule 90, Civil Procedure Code, by the order of the District Judge endorsed on the petition itself, dated 27th June, 1946, in pursuance of the order of High Court and in view of our order setting aside the order of dismissal of M. P. No. 302 of 1944 it is necessary to consider whether the confirmation of sale made on 12th July, 1945, continues to be effective or, as it is urged on behalf of the appellant, became automatically vacated.

Order 21, rule 92, provides that where no application is made under rule 90, or where such application is made and disallowed, the Court shall make an order confirming the sale, and thereupon the sale shall become absolute, and where such application is made and allowed, the Court shall make an order setting aside the sale. By reason of the restoration of M. P. No. 302 of 1944, the position is that the application under Order 21, rule 90, must be deemed to be pending and not disposed of. The confirmation of the sale could only be after the disallowances of that application and not at any time during its pendency. The confirmation in the present case was made on 12th July, 1945, after the dismissal by the District Judge on 10th July, 1945, of the petition for setting aside the sale. The confirmation was then perfectly in order. Could that order of confirmation though validly made be said to have its effect even after the restoration of the petition? The decision of a Bench. of this Court in *Venkata Narasimham v. Nagoji Rao*¹ is directly in point. In that case, there was an application for setting aside the sale on the grounds of certain irregularities in the conduct of the sale. A compromise petition was filed by which parties agreed to the petition being allowed on part of the decree amount being paid. The judgment-debtor deposited the sum and applied for setting aside the sale under Order 34, rule 5. When the petition under Order 34, rule 5, came up for hearing the judgment-debtor petitioner was absent and it was dismissed for default and the sale was confirmed. Two applications were filed by the judgment-debtor for setting aside the orders dismissing the application for default and the orders of dismissal were set aside in those applications. The judgment-debtor also by way of abundant caution, as in the present case, filed another application for setting aside the confirmation of sales. The learned Judges held that the effect of setting aside the orders of dismissal for default operates automatically to set aside the orders of confirmation of the sales.

In *Charitter Shukul v. Lal Behari Singh*¹, an application was filed on behalf of a minor judgment-debtor for setting aside the sale and a compromise was effected on his behalf whereby the application was withdrawn and the sale was confirmed. In a suit subsequently filed on behalf of the minor the compromise itself was questioned and set aside. By reason of setting aside the compromise it was held, that the declaratory decree holding the compromise to be not binding on the minor, all that follows therefrom including the order confirming the sale must also be null and void.

To a similar effect are the observations of Abdul Rahim, Offg. Chief Justice in *Muthu Korakkai Chetty v. Mahomed Madar Ammal*². The question that arose in that case was as to the time from which the period of three years had to be computed under Article 180 of the Indian Limitation Act and therefore it was necessary to find when the sale became absolute. At page 197, the learned Officiating Chief Justice observes :

"Even without the help of the Privy Council rulings which I shall presently notice I should answer, that in the given circumstances, the sale did not become absolute until the petition made to set it aside had been disallowed. Rule 92 has primarily in contemplation cases where the application to set aside the sale is made within the limit of thirty days allowed by the law so that any order confirming the sale would be ordinarily made after the disposal of such applications. But if the Court in this case was justified and I take it that it was in entertaining the application to set aside the sale after it had made the order confirming the same, can it be said that, whatever be the result of the application, the order confirming the sale remained effective so as to make the sale absolute from the date on which it was drawn up? To my mind, obviously not. The effect of entertainment of the application to set aside the sale after the order of confirmation must, having regard to the intention of the Legislature as disclosed in this rule and quite apart from any general theory in such connections be to render the order ineffective so as to make the sale absolute."

It is clear from the language of Order 21, rule 92, that the Court can confirm the sale only if there has been no application under rule 89, rule 90 or rule 91 filed within the period of 30 days from the date of the sale and if within the period of 30 days, there is such an application and such application is disallowed the Court shall then confirm the sale. But at any time within 30 days after the sale or during the pendency of an application under Order 21, rule 89, rule 90, or rule 91, the Court has no power to confirm the sale and such confirmation could not be valid. That the power of the Court to confirm is dependent upon the existence and pendency of an application under rule 89, rule 90, or rule 91 or the disallowances of such application receive further support from the observation of Abdur Rahim, Offg. Chief Justice, in the case referred to that the Court allows the judgment-debtor to file an application after the expiry of the period of 30 days after the confirmation of sale, still when such an application has been filed the confirmation made earlier becomes ineffective, the reason being that the pendency of an application is a bar to the confirmation being made or remaining effective.

It is urged by Mr. Gopalaswami Iyengar that on the language of Order 21, rule 92, it cannot be held that there could be any automatic vacation of the confirmation once made, since on the failure to make an application or disallowances of such an application the sale does not become automatically confirmed, but the Court shall make an order confirming the sale and if the Court makes an order confirming the sale it could not stand automatically vacated, but the Court should again pass an order vacating the confirmation. The principle under which it could be said that by reason of the restoration of a petition for setting aside the sale, the confirmation made earlier would stand automatically vacated is that laid down in Privy Council decision in *Shama Purshad Roy Chowdery v. Hurro Purshad Roy Chowdery*¹, where it was held that certain orders and decrees which are subordinate and dependent upon earlier orders and decrees could only remain in force so long as the order or decree on which they were dependent are not reversed or superseded. They are dependent decrees and orders and when the decrees or judgment on which they depend are reversed they could not continue to remain in force. It is urged that this principle cannot be made applicable since even the absence of an application for setting aside the sale within the period prescribed by law, would require the Court to make an order for confirmation. If only an application to set aside the sale is filed and such an application is disallowed that order might be held to enable the Court to confirm the sale and when that order disallowing the sale is subsequently reversed in appeal, the confirmation which is dependent on the original order might be considered to have been superseded. But the same argument would not be available where there was no application at all. It is true that Order 21, rule 92 contemplates two contingencies: (1) the absence of any application and (2) an application and disallowance thereof and it is only in the latter case; the order of confirmation may be considered to be dependent on an order of Court. But it cannot be ignored that under Order 21, rule 92 the order of confirmation is a dependent order depending not only on an earlier order of Court but also on certain circumstances existing or not existing, namely, there being an application for setting aside the sale or not. The principle in *Shama Purshad Roy Chowdery's case*¹ has direct application in other cases for instance in the case of a preliminary and final decree where the final decree is passed and subsequently the preliminary decree is set aside in appeal, the result of which would be the final decree becomes superseded. Also in suits filed under the summary procedure, when an application for leave to defend is rejected and a decree is passed, subsequently when leave to defend is granted, the decree passed would become vacated. Similarly in cases of an ex parte decree and the result of an allowance of an appeal against it. Even if that principle of dependent orders and decree laid down in *Shama Purshad Roy Chowdery's case*¹ cannot be held to be completely applicable to cases arising under Order 21, rule 92, we have no doubt that the order of confirmation is a dependent order and the restoration therefore of a petition under Order 21, rule 90 would make the confirmation already made ineffective. Such an order of confirmation may be treated as ineffective or automatically vacated as observed by the learned Judges in *Venkata Narasimhan v. Nagojirao*² or even may be considered to be null and void as held by the Allahabad High Court in *Charitter Shukul v. Lal Behari*³, the net result being that such order continues to have no legal effect or force.

It is further urged by Mr. Gopalaswami Ayyangar that the order of confirmation made on 12th July, 1945, has not been set aside in appeal and that the High Court in allowing the appeal filed against the order in M.P. No. 302 of 1944 dated 10th July, 1945, should also have made an order setting aside the confirmation. But this argument ignores that an order of confirmation is not one of the orders enumerated under Order 43, Civil Procedure Code, where there is a right of appeal. Further, the order of confirmation is subsequently made on 12th July, 1945 and not part of the order dated 10th July, 1945, dismissing the petition and as such the appellant could not have raised an objection to the order even under section 105, Civil Procedure Code. In the view we have taken, it is unnecessary for the Court in such circumstances to pass even a formal order setting aside the confirmation, since the confirmation would cease to have any legal effect. In any event, the appellant had applied in M.P. No. 187 of 1946 for vacating the order of confirmation and that application being stated to have been filed out of abundant caution should have been ordered.

In the result C.M.A. Nos. 117 of 1947 and 355 of 1947 are allowed. C.R.P. No. 390 of 1947 is against the order dismissing the appellant's application under Order 34, rule 5, Civil Procedure Code, which was dismissed for the reason that M.P. Nos. 302 of 1944 and 187 of 1947 have been dismissed. By reason of the setting aside of those orders, this petition is allowed. The appellant will have his costs in C.M.A. No. 117 of 1947 from the respondent purchasers. M.P. No. 302 of 1944 and M.P. No. 213 of 1946 are remanded to the lower Court for disposal according to law.

v.

Pidugu Rama Rao and another

Respondents.

Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908), section 9—Mere right of holding a lighted torch inside the chariot during a car festival of a temple—Not a right of a civil nature.

The mere right of holding a lighted torch inside the chariot during a car festival in a temple is not a right of a civil nature as there is no corresponding compellable duty. Such a right related only to a religious honour or dignity and not an office and therefore a suit to establish such a right is not cognisable by a civil Court.

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Tenali in A.S. No. 119 of 1947 preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsiff of Tenali in O.S. No. 50 of 1946.

N. V. B. Sankara Rao for Appellants.

R. Venkatasubba Rao and A. Ranganayakulu for Respondents.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—The respondent herein filed a suit in the Court of the District Munsiff of Tenali for a declaration that they have exclusive right to hold the lighted torch, Sannidhikola, inside the chariot during the Radhotsavam of Sri Agasthiswaraswami at Nandivelugu and for a permanent injunction restraining the defendants from interfering with their right. The basis of the suit was that, ever since the inauguration of the car festival, the ancestors of the plaintiffs and the plaintiffs have been exercising exclusive right of holding the lighted torch inside the chariot and that this right was being exercised till they were obstructed by the defendants in the year of 1945.

The suit was resisted by the defendants, who are the trustees of the temple mainly on two grounds. The exclusive right of the plaintiffs to hold the Sannidhikola was denied and it was also pleaded that the suit was not cognisable by a civil Court as the right claimed related only to a religious honour or dignity.

The trial Court, while holding that the plaintiffs have proved their exclusive right to hold the lighted torch, though for a few years before the institution of the suit they did not exercise this right, dismissed the suit on the ground that the right claimed by them was a mere religious honour and, as such, could not be enforced in a civil Court. On appeal, the Subordinate Judge, while confirming the judgment of the Court of the first instance with regard to the right of the plaintiff to hold the lighted torch, reversed it on the point whether the right claimed was not cognisable by a civil Court. In the opinion of the lower appellate Court, the right to hold the lighted torch can be deemed to be attached to a service or an office and that it was, in any event, a mode of worship, which could be enforced through a Court of law. In the result, he decreed the suit.

The defendants, who are dissatisfied with this judgment of the Subordinate Judge, have preferred this second appeal. In this appeal, the conclusion of the learned Subordinate Judge is challenged by Mr. Sankar Rao for the appellants as being erroneous. He urges that the view of the lower appellate Court that the right to hold the lighted torch inside the chariot is one that is attached to a service or an office is not correct and secondly that the lower appellate Court erred in holding that it was a mode of worship when the plaintiffs did not seek to enforce the right as a mode of worship.

The sole question for determination in the second appeal is whether the right claimed is one that could be agitated in a civil Court. To appreciate this question, it is necessary to refer to the terms of section 9, Civil Procedure Code. Section 9 of the Code of Civil Procedure lays down that "the courts shall (subject to the provisions herein contained) have jurisdiction to try all suits of a civil nature excepting suits of which their cognizance is either expressly or impliedly barred.

Explanation : A suit in which the right to property or to an office is contested is a suit of a civil nature notwithstanding that such right may depend entirely on the decision of questions as to religious rites or ceremonies."

I have, therefore, to see whether the present suit is a suit of a civil nature within the meaning of section 9 of the Code of Civil Procedure. As I have already stated, the lower appellate Court rests its decision on two grounds (i) that it is a right attached to a service or office and (ii) that it is a mode of worship. First I will dispose of the second ground of decision as it does not present any difficulty. It must be observed that the plaintiffs did not claim the right as a mode of worship. They stated categorically that it was an office to which they have been entitled from time immemorial. This question was not raised in the pleadings nor was an issue raised about it. So, the lower appellate Court could not base its judgment on a ground, which was not raised in the pleadings. It is, therefore, unnecessary for me to consider whether the right to hold the lighted torch inside the chariot is a mode of worship.

Turning now to the question whether the right amounts to an office within the meaning of the explanation to section 9 of the Code of Civil Procedure, I will first consider whether there is any support for the view of the learned Judge, in the two decisions cited by him. In *Srinivasa v. Tiruvengada*¹, the suit was for an injunction to prevent the trustees of a temple from interfering with the right to distribute sacred water and serving satakopam, i.e., gold crown to Adyapakas during a particular festival. A Bench of this Court consisting of Collins, C.J. and Justice Parker held that the right claimed by the plaintiffs was cognisable by a civil Court. The learned Judges propounded the following test for deciding whether the suit is of a civil nature or not.

"The ordinary test is whether there is any specific pecuniary benefit attached to the office claimable in the nature of wages however small that benefit may be. If there be, the right to such benefit is a question which the Courts are bound to entertain."

*Thirumalai Alwar Aiyengar v. Lakshmi Sadagopa Aiyengar*² is an instance of a right to conduct worship in a particular mode claimed by the Mandapamdars and upheld by a Court of law. Justice Spencer and Justice Krishnan held that such a right comes within the ambit of section 9 of the Civil Procedure Code as, in their opinion, it was an act of worship in a particular mode and with particular incidents attached to it. The learned Judges classified cases relating to religious services into four kinds, which come within the purview of section 9 of the Code of Civil Procedure. In the language of the learned Judges :

"One class of cases comprises those in which a plaintiff sues to establish his individual right of public worship from which he has been wrongfully excluded With these are closely associated cases in which a right of access to religious objects is sought to be established as these generally involve questions of caste status and as that is a matter of civil right In a different category fall suits brought by worshippers under Act XX of 1863 to compel the performance of acts of worship in which there has been neglect of duty on the part of a trustee or manager of a temple or other religious institution. . . . The next class includes suits to establish a claim to an office with emoluments. It has always been held that such suits will lie because the right to emoluments is a civil right connected with property, although the determination of it may involve the decision of questions of religion. . . . An extension of this principle appears in certain cases when what is claimed is not emoluments of any pecuniary value but honours attached to an office in lieu of emoluments."

The reason why according to the learned Judges civil Courts will not take cognizance of suits in which the claim relates merely to receive religious honours and emoluments unconnected with any office is

"The duty of individuals to submit to and perform certain religious observance in accordance with the ritual or conventional practice of their race or sect is, in the absence of express legal recognition and provision, an imperfect obligation of a moral and not a civil nature."

Applying the test propounded by the learned Judges in that case, I am afraid the right claimed by the plaintiffs should be held to be outside the scope of section 9 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It is thus seen that the two decisions relied on by the learned Judge, far from lending any support to the conclusion, go to show that such a right as claimed, in the present case, is not a right attached either to an office or a mode of worship.

The case very much in point is *Ramaswami Goundan v. Lakshmana Reddi*¹. There a person claimed the right to lead a horse on a particular festival day in a temple whenever that festival was performed, the festival being performed only whenever the funds of the temple permitted it. It was found that the plaintiff could not be compelled either to bring the horse or to lead it if he did not choose to do so. It was decided by Leach, C.J. and Somayya, J., that the right claimed was not an office within the meaning of section 9, Civil Procedure Code, as it was a mere honour. The ratio decidendi was that the right claimed would not amount to an office as there was no corresponding obligation to perform duties. The learned Judges quoted with approval a passage from *Srinivasa Thathachariar v. Srinivasa Iyengar*²:

"The term, office, in the sense with which we are concerned, implies, of course, a duty in the office-holder to be discharged by him as such—see if authority were necessary, Kent's Commentaries—where it is pointed out, offices consist in a right and correspondent duty, to execute a public or private trust and to take the emoluments belonging to it."

With respect I am in entire agreement with the principle laid down by the learned Judges in this case.

To the same effect are the observations of Madhavan Nair, J., in *Chitti Babu Mudaliar v. Venkatasubba Mudaliar*³:

"To constitute an office, I think it will be essential to have some duties attached to it which the office-holder will be under a legal obligation to perform, the non-performance of which will be visited with penalties."

Applying the principles enunciated in the case above I must hold that the right claimed in this case is not an office, which could be enforced in a Court of law as there is no corresponding compellable duty. On their own showing, the plaintiffs cannot be compelled to hold the torch. It was argued by the learned counsel for the respondent that the trustees were at liberty to have the Sannidhikola carried by some one else whenever the plaintiffs or any member of their family was unwilling to do it and thus indirectly compel them to perform the duty. I do not think that this can in any way amounts to a compellable duty. The plaintiffs' witnesses admitted that the plaintiffs could not be compelled to hold the lighted torch if they are not willing to do so. In view of the several admissions by the plaintiffs' witnesses, I do not think that the holding of the torch can be held to be a compellable duty. In my opinion, the right such as the one claimed in this case is a religious honour or dignity, which is excluded from the purview of the civil Courts and not an office within the meaning of section 9 of the Code of Civil Procedure. This is a case in which no emoluments are attached to the office or at least any honours in lieu of the emoluments, however trifling they might be. As such, I fail to see how such a right can relate to an office or to a service. It follows that the decision of the lower appellate Court is wrong and ought to be set aside and the judgment and decree of the trial Court restored.

In the result the appeal is allowed and the suit is dismissed. I direct each party to bear their own costs throughout. (No leave.)

PRESENT :—MR. JUSTICE RAMASWAMI.

v.

K. C. Ayyappan Pillai and others

.. Respondents.

Madras General Sales Tax Act (IX of 1939), section 15 (b)—Offence before amendment—Sentence passed after amendment—Magistrate's duty to provide in the order for the recovery of the tax as fine—Article 20 of the Constitution of India, 1950.

The Sales Tax Act originally provided that if any person wilfully acted in contravention of any of the provisions of the Act he shall on conviction be liable to pay a fine of Rs. 1,000 and where the breach was a continuing one to a further fine which may extend up to Rs. 50 for every day of the breach. This was omitted in the amended section which provided that if there is a failure to pay within the time allowed any tax assessed on the assessee under the Act and he is prosecuted for an offence under section 15, that assessee on conviction is liable to pay a fine and in case of a conviction under section 15 (b), the Magistrate shall specify in the order the tax which the person convicted has failed to pay and the tax so specified shall be recoverable as if it were a fine. The recovery of the tax as if it were a fine does not impose a greater penalty than the other mode of recovery as if it were an arrear of land revenue, for it is open to the Court in deserving cases not to prescribe default sentences and realise the fine otherwise—a mode which is far less onerous than the corresponding provisions under the Revenue Recovery Act. It merely alters the procedure which does not make what was not an offence, an offence or imposes a greater penalty than before.

So, where the offences were committed under the unamended provisions of the Act and the amended provisions came into force on the date of imposing sentences, the Magistrate was under a duty to specify in the order the defaulted tax and make it recoverable as if it were a fine and the Magistrate cannot split up the tax and give relief in regard to a portion of the year.

Petitions under sections 435 and 439, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, praying that the High Court will be pleased to revise the order of the Court of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Fort, Cochin, dated 24th October, 1951 in C.C. No. 122 of 1951, etc.

18.	108/52	127/51	5,653 2 6	"	Rs. 600 fine on admission.

There is no dispute in all these 18 cases about the correct calculation of the turnover adopted by the Deputy Commercial Tax Officer or the assessment or the service of the demand notices or the non-payment of the taxes within the time fixed. The learned Public Prosecutor has preferred these criminal revision cases on the ground that the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate in 14 of these cases has not provided in the order for the payment of the sales tax in respect of which the particular respondent was found guilty and convicted under section 15 (b) of the Madras General Sales Tax Act and that in three cases he has made the respondent liable to pay the tax only for the second half of 1947-48 in C.C. No. 72 of 1951 and for the last three months of 1947-48 in C.C. No. 153 of 1951 and for the last three months of 1947-48 in C.C. No. 157 of 1951 and that this direction for payment of the tax for the last quarter only is not in conformity with law and that the lower Court ought to have directed in the order the payment of the entire tax in respect of which default was committed and for which the respective respondent was found guilty and sentenced under section 15 (b) of the Madras General Sales Tax Act.

There can be no doubt that under section 10 of the said Act the tax assessed has got to be paid in such manner and in such instalments, if any, and within such time as may be specified in the notice of assessment and that if there is failure to pay within the time allowed any tax assessed on the assessee under the Act and he is prosecuted for an offence under section 15, that assessee on conviction is liable to pay a fine and in case of a conviction under clause (b) of section 15 the Magistrate shall specify in the order the tax which the person convicted has failed to pay and the tax so specified shall be recoverable as if it were a fine. Therefore, the contentions of the learned Public Prosecutor that in all these cases the defaulted tax should be specified in the order of the Magistrate and made recoverable as if it were a fine and that the Magistrate cannot split up this tax and give relief in regard to a portion of the year, are correct.

The learned advocates for respondents contend that the Magistrate was justified in the course which he has adopted, because under the law as it stood when these offences were committed the present provision that in cases of convictions under section 15 (b) the Magistrate having to specify in the order the tax which the person convicted has failed to pay and the tax so specified being made recoverable as if it were a fine did not exist, and that to pass such an order would offend Articles 20 and 265 of the Constitution of India.

I have carefully considered the application of both these Articles and find that there is no substance in this contention.

So far as Article 20 is concerned which prohibits retro-active criminal laws or ex post facto laws, the scope of that Article is nothing more than that no person shall be convicted of any offence under any law not in force at the time of the commission of the offence and secondly, that no person shall be subject to a penalty greater than that which might have been inflicted under the law in force at the time of the commission of the offence. The Sales Tax Act existed at the time of the commission of the offence and also at the time of the conviction for the offence. Then turning to the second contention, it is stated that when the tax is made recoverable as a fine it imposes a penalty greater than that which might have been inflicted before the Act was amended. In advancing this argument it is overlooked that any change in the mode of execution is not bad for its being ex post facto : see *Holden v. Minnesota*¹ and *Rooney v. North Dakota*². A statute merely regulating procedure and leaving untouched all the substantial protection with which existing law surrounds a person accused of crime is not within the constitutional inhibition of ex post facto laws. *Thompson v. Utah*³ and *Winston v. State*⁴. Even a statute which changes the punishment that may be imposed for a crime theretofore committed would be ex post facto only if it prescribes or permits the imposition of a greater sentence, which is not the case here, and not when it reduces the punishment, as is the case here. *People Ex Rel Pincus v. Adams*⁵ and *Sakt v. Justices Court*⁶. It will be noticed that before the amendment any person who wilfully acted in contravention of any of the provisions of this Act shall on conviction be liable to a fine of Rs. 1,000 and where the breach is a continuing breach, to a further fine which may extend to Rs. 50 for every day after the first, during which the breach continues. This has been omitted in the amended section. Therefore, this new provision amounts to nothing more than an alteration of procedure which does not make the Act which was not an offence to be an offence or imposes a greater penalty than what was the case before. Before the Act was amended, under section 10 when the tax assessed was not paid and there was default the amount could be recovered as if it were an arrear of land revenue just as now it has been made as if it were a fine. The recovery by the procedure prescribed in the Madras Revenue Recovery Act is one of the modes of realising the tax.

But this is not the only mode. The Crown can even sue as on a debt within a period of six years (Article 120 of the Limitation Act), see *Inderchand v. Secretary of State*⁷, get a decree and realise the debt by attachment of property as an ordinary debt. Suit for taxes is governed by Article 120 of the Limitation Act. See *Larkana Municipality v. Kaloomal Ponomal*⁸; *Masand Motiram v. Shekarput Municipality*⁹; *Mathura Prasad v. Special Officer, Gaya Municipality*¹⁰; *Dipnarain v. A. D. M.*¹¹; *President of Guntur Municipal Commission v. Padmaraju*¹²; *Rajah of Vizianagaram v. Tammanna*¹³; *Attakoya v. Kunhikoya*¹⁴; *Ut Badrunissa v. Municipal Board, Agra*¹⁵.

Thirdly, the tax can after 1st January, 1948, be recovered also as fine by a Magistrate on conviction under section 15 (b) or 15 (d) of the Act. The recovery of the tax as if it were a fine does not impose a greater penalty than the other two modes. Even though tax collectable as arrear of land revenue may not be a first charge, the general principle of law preferring the Crown's debt to that of the subject when both stand on the same footing, nevertheless applies : *People's Bank v. Secretary of State*¹⁶. Thus, the Crown has priority over other unsecured creditors and when the property of an assesseé is attached in execution of a simple money decree and money is deposited in Court, since the attachment by a decree-holder creates no right in property, the Crown can step in and recover any tax due to the Government without suit or attachment : See *Secretary of State v. Ma Mayein Me*¹⁷.

*Varadachari v. Secretary of State*¹ and *Manickam Chettiar v. Income-tax Officer, Madura*². In the case of the collection of the tax as land revenue, the mode is indicated in the Madras Revenue Recovery Act II of 1864. Under section 5 of the Madras Revenue Recovery Act the arrear of revenue with interest and costs can be recovered by the sale of the defaulter's moveable or immoveable property or by execution against the person of the defaulter. The procedure regarding moveable property is governed by distraint as set out in sections 8 to 21 and sale of immoveable property, by sections 25 to 35 regulating attachment, and by sections 36 to 47 regulating sale; and in regard to the procedure for arrest this is governed by sections 48 and 49. I do not see how the recovery of the tax as if it were a fine would be a greater penalty, because it is open to the Court in deserving cases not to prescribe default sentences and the realisation of the fine otherwise than by default sentence of imprisonment is regulated by rule 290-A of the Criminal Rules of Practice, which is certainly far less onerous than the corresponding provisions under the Madras Revenue Recovery Act. In such cases if steps taken in regard to the sale of moveables fail, the fine can even be written off. Therefore, Article 20 does not apply to this case; and on this footing the application of Article 265 does not arise.

On this conclusion the contentions of the Public Prosecutor are found to be correct and the orders of the lower Court as they stand cannot be allowed to stand. The orders of the lower Court are modified to the extent that in addition to the fines imposed in all these cases the taxes due by the respective respondent and for which these prosecutions had been launched will stand added and they are made recoverable as if they were fines. Criminal Procedure Code (V of 1898), sections 133 to 143 and 147—Obstruction to public way and causing nuisance—Disputes as to title—Jurisdiction of Magistrate to go into—Scope of Chapter X of Criminal Procedure Code.

The powers embodied in sections 133 to 137, Criminal Procedure Code, with regard to the obstruction of public way are not intended to be exercised where there is a bona fide dispute as to existence of public right. It is quite true that when it is found that this claim of title is advanced in good faith and is supported by prima facie evidence the Magistrate cannot proceed further, and decide whether the title set up does or does not exist but must leave the matter to be decided by the civil Court. But the mere assertion of a claim of title made without reasonable ground or honest belief in it or honest intention to support it will not oust a criminal Court of its jurisdiction under sections 133 to 137, Criminal Procedure Code.

Where on proceedings by petition under section 147, Criminal Procedure Code, but which were proceeded with under sections 133 to 143, Criminal Procedure Code (Chapter X) and the Magistrate found that the land was a Government poramboke and was a public place and was also used as a public way, any private erection of a wall so as to obstruct and cause nuisance not only to private parties but to the unascertained public, it would be a case within the scope of Chapter X of the Criminal Procedure Code.

Petition under sections 435 and 439, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, praying that the High Court will be pleased to revise the order of the Court of the Sub-Divisional 1st Class Magistrate, Villupuram, dated 17th December, 1951, in M.C. No. 126 of 1951.

The Public Prosecutor (V. T. Rangaswami Aiyangar) for the State.

The Court made the following

ORDER.—This is a Criminal Revision Case which has been filed against an order made under section 143, Criminal Procedure Code.

The facts are : On proceedings which were initiated by petitioners under section 147, Criminal Procedure Code, but which were taken on file and proceeded with under sections 133 to 143, Criminal Procedure Code, Chapter X (Public Nuisances) this order under section 143 came to be made in regard to the putting up of a wall in front of certain shops in Avalurpet village. In the village of Avalurpet there is a grama natham of the extent of 7 cents adjoining the village and comprised in R.S. No. 150/1-A. On the eastern side of this grama natham and inside that grama natham there are a number of shops belonging to Abdul Sathar Sahib. This village of Avalurpet consists of an overwhelming majority of Hindus and a small minority of Muslims. These Muslims among themselves are divided. The owners of these shops and other shops and supporting this Abdul Sathar Sahib are Muslim householders consisting of ten in number. There can be no dispute that in 1950 feelings between these ten Muslim householders and the Hindu inhabitants had become strained. Therefore what the Hindu respondents did was that they put up a wall practically adjoining the front of these shops and purported to enclose the rest of the grama natham and made it into Gandhi Park. On a portion of this grama natham a masonry platform has been put up on which a statue of Mahatma Gandhi has been installed and another cement platform has been put up but without anything being erected thereon. The learned Magistrate who enquired into this matter and who inspected this area found that this alleged conversion of the site into a park was nothing more than a mere pretence. He found there no shrubs or flower plants excepting two old rain trees. The only substantial structure was the cement granite wall six feet high put up in front of these shops and practically adjoining it and with a small opening at the place DE shown in the plan filed in this case. This opening itself was secured by doors and it was locked and the key was with the second respondent. In other words, by constructing this wall the respondents effectively walled in the shops and cut off all access thereto by the villagers. The result was that the shops remained closed for three months. Only after the Sub-Collector of Tindivanam came to the spot, he opened the door at DE and the shops became accessible through that opening. The narrow passage left between the front of the shops and the wall and the narrow opening let into the wall made the shops, according to the learned Magistrate who inspected the place, to look like cells in a prison enclosed by high prison walls and within the enclosure with very little elbow room. Therefore Abdul Samad Sahib, one of the shopkeepers therein, filed an application under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code against Annamalai Reddi and two others in the Court of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Tindivanam, on 31st January, 1950. Another application under sections 144, 147 and 148 was filed by Abdul Sathar Sahib, the undivided brother of that Abdul Samad Sahib, against the same respondents in respect of some other shop there on 3rd February, 1950. The former application was referred to the Circle Inspector of Police, Gingee, for report. The Circle Inspector who has inspected the place and who has been examined as a prosecution witness testified that he visited the place on 6th February, 1950 and submitted his report Exhibit P-2 and warned the Hindus not to persist in this course of conduct and that they did not heed his words and that he then visited the spot on 8th March, 1950, along with the District Superintendent of Police and they found the state of things unaltered and these Muslim shopkeepers put to trouble. Then these proceedings were proceeded with under section 133 and which it was perfectly competent for the Magistrate to do though the proceedings were presented under Chapters XI and XII, Criminal Procedure Code. There is no dispute that the correct procedure prescribed under sections 133 and 143 had been followed in this case. The learned Magistrate came to the conclusion that the place on which this wall had been constructed is a public place and a public way and that it constitutes an obstruction and a nuisance and that the public right set up by the respondents is bogus and passed an order for demolition of the same and it is against this order that the present Criminal Revision Case has been filed.

In this case we have to consider four points : viz., (i) whether the wall which has been ordered to be demolished has been put up in a public way or a public place ; (ii) whether it constitutes an obstruction and a nuisance ; (iii) whether the public right set up by the respondents (in the lower court) is bogus or bona fide, and (iv) whether in a petition under section 147 the Magistrate can proceed under Chapter X, sections 133-143, Criminal Procedure Code.

On all these points I have come to the same conclusion as the learned Magistrate and here are my reasons :

Point 1.—That the place on which this wall has been constructed is a public place and a public way cannot be seriously disputed. The place itself is registered as grama natham bearing R. S. No. 150/1-A. It is in evidence that the public are using it not for the celebration of Muthalamman and Mariamman festivals as was sought to be set up but for display of fireworks on festive occasions. The celebration of festivals was set up in order to make out that the Hindus were in exclusive possession and had the exclusive user of the property. The respondents when examined by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Tindivanam on 1st March, 1950, took up this position. Then when examined by the Executive First Class Magistrate, Tindivanam, on 13th August, 1951, after the case was remanded they stated that the land in dispute was in their possession and the petitioners had no right to possession. The third respondent however admitted that the said place belongs to the public and in joint written statement filed on 13th August, 1951, before the same Magistrate they admitted that the concerned land is vacant site comprised in R. S. No. 150/1-A with the extent of 12 cents being grama natham intended for the use of the villagers. Exhibits D-1 and D-2 also did not lend any support to the contention of the respondents. It is clear that the land is Government poramboke and is a public place. The learned Magistrate who inspected the place found that it was also being used as a public way. This land lies between the Avalurpet-Chetput road and the private property of petitioners and others. Near the point F in the plan filed in this case the Avalurpet-Chetput road and the Bazar street meet and the former is bus route. This plot now enclosed by the compound wall is necessary for the convenient use of both the roads both for vehicular as well as passenger traffic. In short it falls within the definition of a public road within the meaning of section 3 (18) of the Madras Local Boards Act, 1920, where a public road is defined as meaning and including the drains attached to any such road, public bridge or causeway and the land which whether entered or not by any pavement, verandah or other structure, lies on either side of the road way up to the boundaries of the adjacent property, whether that property is private property or property belonging to Government. This public place and public way have not become the property of the villagers and the Panchayat Board which hastily passed a resolution, and which resolution is not being produced, had no authority to deal with this land. R.W. 1 admitted that the land is not vested in the Panchayat Board and for erecting a permanent structure or wall the orders of the Government are necessary. He also admitted that no such order has been passed either by the Revenue department or by the Government. Therefore, point 1 has to be decided in the affirmative.

Point 2.—I have already indicated sufficiently to show that this wall constructed on a public place and a public way constitutes an obstruction and nuisance. It was sought to be suggested that this will only hit the shop keepers and not the public. The evidence in this case shows that this obstruction would also affect the unascertained members of the public whose ordinary avocations may take them to the neighbourhood of such shops, apart from the customers and that therefore this would constitute both obstruction as well as public nuisance. Public nuisance is nuisance caused not only to the persons as in this case living in the shops but also to, as I have just now pointed out, unascertained members of the public whose ordinary avocation may take them to neighbourhood. *Queen-Empress v. Jasodanand*¹ and *Begg v. Lamessor*². In other words this is not merely a case of infringement of a private right or a private dispute which is outside the scope of Chapter X of the Criminal Procedure Code.

Point 3: The powers embodied in sections 133 to 137 with regard to the obstruction of public ways, are not intended to be exercised where there is a bona fide dispute as to the existence of the public right; see *In re Narayan Jivan Mestri*³. Where there is such a dispute, the Court should pass no order under those sections until the public right has been established by proper legal proceedings, civil or criminal. See *Basaruddin Bhuiah v. Bahar Ali*⁴, *In re Venkanna*⁵, *Budhainath v. Nil Mahanth*⁶, *Asker Mia v. Sabdar Mia*⁷, *Lalmian v. Nazir Kalashi*⁸ and *Queen-Empress v. Bissessur Sahib*⁹. But the mere assertion of a claim of title made without reasonable ground, or honest belief in it, or honest intention to support it will not oust a criminal Court of its jurisdiction under sections 133 to 137 of the Code; *Luckhee Narain Banerjee v. Ram Kumer Mukharjee*¹⁰, *Queen-Empress v. Bissessur Sahib*⁹, *Nasaruddi v. Akiluddi*¹¹, *Mukundalal Dey v. Haribole Saha*¹², *Upendranath Bhuttacharjee v. Krishnachandra Bhuttacharjee*¹³, *Queen-Empress v. Kedarnath*¹⁴, *Belat Ali v. Abdur Rahim*¹⁵, *In re Maharana Shri Jaswat Sangji*¹⁶. It is not open to any person illegally causing obstruction to public property to set up a bogus question of title for the purpose of ousting the jurisdiction of the Magistrate and notwithstanding the raising of such a question the Magistrate is entitled to hear a case sufficiently to enable him to make up his mind whether or not bona fide question of title is raised. It is quite true that when it is found that this claim of title is advanced in good faith and is supported by prima facie respectable evidence the Magistrate cannot proceed further and decide whether the title so set up does or does not exist but must leave the matter to be decided by the civil Court: *Emperor v. Dost Muhammad*¹⁷, *Matuk Dhari Tewari v. Hari Madhab Das*¹⁸, *Preonath Dey v. Gaburdhonemalo*¹⁹, *Rakhal Chandra Saha v. Kailash Chandra Sarkar*²⁰. In this case the Magistrate has followed the correct procedure and has only come to the conclusion that the respondents' claim was not a bona fide question of title but only an attempt to cause annoyance and inconvenience to the persons with whom they were at enmity and their act amounted to obstruction and a public nuisance and made the order absolute under section 137, Criminal Procedure Code. *Nundo Gopala Chatterjee v. Kusumi Kumar Banerjee*²¹.

Point 4: Section 133 does not oust the jurisdiction of a Magistrate to proceed under section 147 and vice versa. The contrary view held in *In re Lindsay*²² and a similar obiter dictum in *In re Latchmiah Maistry*²³, was not followed in *Karuppanna Goundan v. Kandaswami Goundan*²⁴. The only restriction naturally is that when proceedings are instituted and action taken under section 133, Criminal Procedure Code, orders under section 147 cannot be passed since the two sets of proceedings are under entirely different chapters, governed by different procedure in detail, and orders are made for entirely different purposes; *Abdul Rahman Mia v. Safar Ali*²⁵. The instant case is not one such instance.

There are no grounds to interfere with the correct order made by the learned Magistrate and it will be sufficient only to indicate to him that in regard to the

v.

Sri Rajeswaraswami temple, situate at Ponnekallu, Guntur Taluk, by its trustees Guduru Sitaramayya and others

Respondents.

Inam—Grant to deity—Archakas in possession of the lands as de facto trustees found to have been performing the worship properly—If entitled to be allotted any definite share of the properties for carrying on the worship.

Where it is found that an original grant was made to the deity, though the archakas had been in possession of the property they have no title to the same and the de jure trustees are entitled to possession of the properties. The question whether the archakas who have been doing the worship properly are to be allowed to continue in possession of any definite portion of the properties in lieu of their remuneration must depend on the facts and circumstances of each case. There is no invariable rule that the archakas should be allotted two-thirds of the properties in lieu of their remuneration. The allotment of a particular share to the archakas would depend upon the total income of the lands, the value of the articles required for worships, the amount of reasonable remuneration intended to be provided and other similar circumstances. Though in law the title to the properties will be in the deity and the archakas are not in law entitled to insist that they should be put in possession of a portion of the lands of the deity, it is proper that the temple authorities may in consultation with the Commissioner of Hindu Religious Endowments put the archakas in possession of a reasonable portion of the lands, having regard to the circumstances of the particular case. The archakas are not precluded from accepting a salary instead.

Decisions of Satyanarayana Rao and Chandra Reddy, JJ., in A.S. No. 218 of 1946; of the Chief Justice and Panchapakesa Ayyar, J., in A.S. No. 287 of 1945 and of Govinda Menon and Basheer Ahmed Sayeed, JJ., in C.M.A. No. 8 of 1949, considered.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Subba Rao, J.—This appeal arises out of O. S. No. 178 of 1949, a suit filed by the plaintiff—first respondent, for recovery of possession of the plaint schedule property and for mesne profits. The plaintiff, 27th defendant and one Nagayya are the trustees of the temple of Sri Rajeswaraswami of Ponnekallu. Defendants 1 to 7 are the archakas of the suit temple and defendants 8 to 26 are the lessees under defendants 1 to 7. The plaintiff alleging that the plaint schedule properties are the properties of the deity filed the aforesaid suit for recovery of possession. Defendants 1 to 7 denied that the properties are the properties of the deity and claimed that the suit lands were granted to the archakas burdened with service to the deity. They also claimed that they acquired a right by adverse possession. As many as seven issues were framed in the suit and they reflect the contentions of the parties. They are:

1. Whether the plaintiff has title to the suit lands?
2. Whether the defendants acquired title by adverse possession?
3. Whether the suit lands are 'service inams' and whether the defendants are entitled to be in possession of the same?
4. To what mesne profits if any is the plaintiff entitled?
5. To what relief?
6. Whether plaintiff is legally constituted trustee?
7. Whether plaintiff's suit is not maintainable on account of O. S. No. 103 of 1934, District Munsiff's Court, Guntur?

The learned Subordinate Judge held that the deity is the owner of the plaint schedule properties and gave a decree for possession.

The first question that arises in the appeal is whether the deity has title to the plaint schedule items or whether they were granted to the archakas subject to the service to the deity. The Inam register is almost conclusive on this question. Col. 11 gives the name of the grantor. It shows that the lands were granted by Vasireddi Venkatadri Naidu. Col. 13 shows the name of the grantee. The name of the grantee is given as Sri Rajeswaraswami. Under Col. 8 the following recital is found :

"For the worship of the Idol in Pagoda of Ponnekallu. Worship is performed."

Under Cols. 16 and 17 giving particulars regarding the present owner, the name of the deity Sri Rajeswaraswami is given though under the name of the deity the worshipper's name is also given. Cols. 20 and 21 show that the Inam Commissioner confirmed the grant so long as the service is performed. It has been held that in the absence of the original grant, the recitals in the Inam register are of great evidentiary value. The recitals indicate beyond any reasonable doubt that the grantee is the deity and the object of the grant is the worship of the deity. The learned counsel relied upon the mention of the name of the worshipper in Col. 16 in support of the contention that the grant should have been made only to the archaka burdened with service. If that was the fact, under Col. 13 the name of the archaka would have been given and under cols. 16 and 17 the name of the deity would have been omitted. The name of the worshipper obviously was given in Col. 16 as there was no separate trustee at the time and the worshipper filed a statement before the Inam Commissioner giving the details of the inam. If there is any doubt, that is dispelled by the recitals in the Inam statement, Ex. A-2 filed by the archakas themselves. In Col. 1 under the heading "name of the Inamdar" the deity's name—Sri Rajeswaraswami is given. The "present enjoyer" is also described as the same. In Col. 4 under the heading "name of the original grantee and the relationship existing between him and the present enjoyers" Sri Swamivaru's Devastanam is mentioned. If really the archakas were the grantees their names would have been mentioned and their relationship would also have been given. Under Col. 5, particulars of the family of the present enjoyers, again the Devastanam is mentioned. These recitals are consistent with that found in the Inam register. We therefore have no hesitation to agree with the finding of the Court below that the original grant was made to the deity.

If so, it follows that the plaintiff would be entitled to a decree for possession and the learned Subordinate Judge rightly gave a decree for possession. But the learned counsel for the appellants contended that in view of some unreported judgments of this Court they are entitled to continue to be in possession, at any rate, of two-thirds of the plaint schedule properties, even though the Subordinate Court and this Court have held that they have no title to the properties. In A. S. No. 218 of 1946, Satyanarayana Rao and Chandra Reddi, JJ., held that having regard to the circumstances of that case the archakas would be entitled to be put in possession of two-thirds of the temple properties in lieu of remuneration. Satyanarayana Rao, J., rightly observed in the judgment as follows :

"No doubt on our findings it would follow that the plaintiffs would have no right to retain possession of the lands."

But the learned Judges proceeded to make an allotment between the temple and the archakas and directed two-thirds of the lands to be put in possession of the archakas in lieu of remuneration. From the observations extracted above, it would appear that the learned Judges would have decreed possession of the plaint schedule properties; but obviously as the other side did not object, they made an equitable distribution of the properties having regard to the circumstances of that case. A copy of the judgment of the Chief Justice and Panchapakasa Aiyar, J., in A. S. No. 286 of 1945, has not been placed before us. We presume that in that case also the allotment was made as the parties agreed to that course. In C. M. A. No. 8 of 1949, Govinda Menon and Basheer Ahmed Sayeed, JJ., observed as follows :

"According to the decisions of this Court, if the archakas have been properly performing the nitya naivedya aradhana and other religious ceremonies in the temple, they are entitled to an allotment of nearly 2/3rd of the net income for performing these ceremonies and also for present services. If the Court, after evidence, is satisfied that since the filing of the suit, the defendant archakas have properly performed the ceremonies in the temple and have not committed any default, in this behalf, then the lower Court will direct that they be paid 2/3rd of the net income remaining in Court, after defraying all the expenses. . . . As regards the future, we direct that if and when the lower Court is satisfied that ceremonies are being properly conducted, the 2/3rd of the net income will be paid over to the archakas. If any default is committed in the performance of the ceremonies the lower Court will withhold payment to the archakas."

The learned Judges were dealing with an appeal filed against an order appointing a receiver to take possession and manage the properties pending the suit. The order made by the learned Judges was obviously intended to be an interim order and was presumably made without prejudice to the rights of the parties in the suit. We do not think that the learned Judges meant to lay down as a proposition of law that irrespective of the circumstances in a particular case, the archaka should be allotted two-thirds of the properties of the temple. If that is so, it may lead to the following anomaly among others. Suppose the archakas have been in possession of the temple properties which at present are fetching an income of Rs. 10,000. Though a few hundreds would quite suffice for the remuneration and padithram and other expenses, the trustee would be bound to put the archakas in possession of properties fetching an income of about Rs. 7,000. The learned Judges in the aforesaid three decisions we are sure never intended to lay down a proposition which would lead to this startling result. The allotment of a particular share would depend upon the total income of the lands, the value of the articles required for worships, the amount of reasonable remuneration intended to be provided and other similar circumstances.

At the same time we may observe that the archakas have been in uninterrupted possession of the plaint schedule properties for over a long period of time. It is also likely that they will continue to be in the village and function properly if they are given properties sufficient for the expenditure of nitya naivedya deeparadhana and remuneration. Though in law they are not entitled to insist that they should be put in possession of a portion of the lands of the deity, it appears to us proper, as it appeared to other Judges of this Court, that the temple authorities may in consultation with the Commissioner put the archakas in possession of a reasonable proportion of the lands, having regard to the circumstances of this particular case. Those observations are not intended to preclude archakas from accepting a salary. In the result the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Kanyadhara Challaiya and others

Respondents.

Hindu Law—Widow—Surrender of estate—Tests of validity and bona fides—Subsequent adoption by widow—Effect.

The motives of a widow in renouncing and transferring her husband's estate in favour of the nearest reversioner, whatever they may be, should not be taken into account in determining the validity of the surrender. What has to be looked into is only her capacity to renounce and a complete effacement of her interest in favour of the nearest reversioner. If the transaction of surrender is a relinquishment of her entire interest in her husband's property and if such relinquishment is in favour of the nearest reversioner and so long as it is not in any way indicated that the arrangement evidenced by the surrender between the widow and the reversioners allows a benefit to accrue to the widow excepting a provision for maintenance, it must be held that that should be sufficient to stand the test of a valid surrender. It is difficult to say what generally influences or impels a widow to relinquish her property in favour of her husband's next of kin, that is the nearest reversioners.

The fact that she not only desires to provide for a relation of hers for whom she might have some affection, and where the reversioner who will be entitled to the estate accedes to her request in deference to her wishes to make such a provision, cannot characterise the surrender as not a bona fide one.

Krishnamurthi v. Seshayya, (1944) 1 M.L.J. 443 and Akkanna v. Brahmada, (1950) 1 M.L.J. 750, considered and explained.

Even from the point of view of the texts and as explained by the commentators, a surrender by the widow of her entire interest in her husband's property in favour of the nearest reversioners does not become invalid by reason of the reversioners making a provision at the time of the surrender or subsequently of a portion of the property to the kindred of the widow's father and mother to satisfy her wishes.

Authorities reviewed.

A subsequent adoption by the widow will not divest the properties held by the reversioners under such surrender.

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Tenali, dated 6th December, 1947, in O.S. No. 52 of 1946.

K. Krishnaswami Ayyangar and N. C. Ragavachari for Appellant.

K. Kotayya and T. G. Krishnamurthy for Respondents.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENTS, Krishnaswami Nayudu, J.—The plaintiff, who is the appellant, sued in forma pauperis to recover the suit properties, which consisted of 23 items of lands and two houses belonging to one Chukkapalli Pichayya as his adopted son having been adopted by his widow the 20th defendant (Achamma). Chukkapalli Pichayya died about 60 years prior to the suit leaving the 20th defendant a childless widow. Defendants 1 and 2 are the sister's sons of Pichayya. The widow, 20th defendant, purported to adopt P.W. 5, but that adoption was subsequently set aside by Court. On 25th February, 1940, she obtained an authorisation from two of the reversioners to adopt a son to her husband. But before any actual adoption took place, the widow surrendered her husband's estate in favour of defendants 1 and 2, the nearest reversioners. On 28th February, 1940, under Exhibit A-2 the widow and Pichamma, the sister of the deceased Pichayya and mother of defendants 1 and 2 jointly executed a deed of surrender in favour of defendants 1 and 2 conveying all the properties of Pichayya and the document mentions a payment of Rs. 2,000 to the widow for her maintenance for her lifetime and for spiritual benefit to her husband and for offering Gaya Pindams, etc. Prior to this document it may be stated that by a deed of gift (Exhibit B-1) dated 26th February, 1940, she had already made a gift of 2 acres of land to a temple. Immediately after the execution of Exhibit A-2, the surrender deed, the 1st and 2nd defendants and the other reversioners entered into a deed of settlement, Exhibit A-3, whereunder the properties of Chukkapalli Pichayya which were surrendered by the widow were divided as between defendants

1 and 2 and the other reversioners in certain proportions, the plaintiff's grandfather, who was one of the reversioners, also getting a share. It is found that there was a sale deed by the 1st and 2nd defendants on the same date, namely, 2nd March, 1940, Exhibit B-2, of the 3 acres and 6 cents of land to D.W. 1 for a sum of Rs. 3,000 out of which Rs. 2,000 is mentioned as having been received by the 1st and 2nd defendants to enable them to pay the widow the maintenance as provided under Exhibit A-2, the balance being the amount due under a prior transaction between the 1st and 2nd defendants and D.W. 1. More than three years thereafter on 30th September, 1943, by Exhibit B-20; D.W. 1 sold the 3 acres and 6 cents of land, which he purchased under Exhibit B-2, to the 15th defendant for the same price of Rs. 3,000. The 15th defendant is the brother's son of the widow. From a reading of Exhibit B-20, it is seen that the sum of Rs. 2,000, which was paid by D.W. 1, as part of the sale consideration of Exhibit B-2 for payment of the sum provided under Exhibit A-2 to the widow, was in fact borrowed by D.W. 1 from the 15th defendant even on the date of Exhibit B-2 and that there was an arrangement between D.W. 1 and the 15th defendant that if the amount is not repaid he should execute a conveyance of the property which he purchased under Exhibit B-2 to the 15th defendant. The recitals in Exhibit B-20 show that the 15th defendant was the person who in fact paid the sum of Rs. 2,000 which enabled defendants 1 and 2 to pay the widow as and for her maintenance.

It may also be mentioned that the properties were subject to an usufructuary mortgage in favour of P.W. 5, and defendants 1 and 2 and others instituted O.S. No. 292 of 1941 on the file of the District Munsif's Court of Tenali, for redemption and P.W. 5 in turn instituted O.S. No. 32 of 1942 on the file of the Subordinate Judge's Court of Tenali for a declaration that the surrender deed and the settlement were fictitious transactions not binding on him. There was a compromise, which was recorded in O.S. No. 292 of 1941, Exhibit B-7, on 2nd August, 1943, whereby the mortgagee was given about 3 acres in satisfaction of his mortgage. The widow was a party to the compromise and all the parties including the widow, Achamma, declared under the compromise that the surrender deed and the settlement deed were true and valid. Achamma was nearly 75 years at the time of the deed of surrender, and 5 years thereafter on 17th February, 1945, she executed a deed of adoption, Exhibit A-1 in favour of the plaintiff evidencing the adoption of the plaintiff.

The plaintiff instituted the suit claiming to be entitled to the suit properties and alleging that the surrender deed executed by the widow in favour of defendants 1 and 2 was not valid. It is also alleged that it was the result of a conspiracy between the widow, defendants 1 and 2 the sister's sons and the nearest reversioners, and the other reversioners, that the surrender, settlement and the sale deeds, Exhibits A-2, A-3, B-2 and B-20, though of different dates were the result of an arrangement between the parties to benefit the 13th defendant, who is the brother's son of the widow, with a portion of the property and also to benefit the other reversioners, though none of them were the nearest reversioners; and that being the result of such an arrangement, the surrender was not valid nor bona fide.

The factum of the adoption was not disputed; but it was contended that the adoption was not valid as the widow had no authority from the husband and she had not even the consent of the nearest sapindas, and further that in any event the widow having surrendered her interest in her husband's estate in favour of the 1st and 2nd defendants, the plaintiff, even though validly adopted, was not entitled to recover the suit properties. The trial Court held against the plaintiff on both these questions, found that the adoption was not valid and upheld the surrender.

The two questions that arise therefore for determination in this appeal are (1) whether the surrender is invalid for the reasons stated by the plaintiff and (2) whether the adoption is true and valid. Learned counsel addressed arguments on the first of these questions, since if the finding of the lower Court is upheld by us, it would be unnecessary to decide as to the validity of the adoption since the suit being one for possession has to fail. Though there are certain features that can be gathered from the documentary and the oral evidence which would throw suspicion as to whether the transactions were not the result of an arrangement between the widow and the reversioners as to the best way of disposing of the properties, we feel unable to agree with the appellant's contention that Exhibits B-2 and B-20 are fictitious transactions brought into existence with a view to benefit the 15th defendant by the widow setting apart a portion of her husband's property in favour of her brother's son. The reference in Exhibit B-20 to an agreement between the 15th defendant and D.W. 1 the vendee under Exhibit B-2 as to the conveyance of this property in his favour, the circumstance that Exhibit B-20 was executed after the compromise in O.S. No. 292 of 1941 and the relationship of the parties are certain of the circumstances which are urged in support of the plaintiff's contention. But since a sum of Rs. 2,000 had to be paid to the widow under the surrender deed and the major portion of the consideration of Exhibit B-2 being the said sum of Rs. 2,000 was borrowed for the purpose and the person from whom it was borrowed now transpiring to be the 15th defendant and not D.W. 1, neither Exhibit B-2 nor Exhibit B-20 can be held to be not supported by consideration. It is not suggested that defendants 1 and 2 secured the sum from other sources and paid the widow. We are unable therefore to hold that Exhibits B-2 and B-20 are nominal transactions intended to benefit the 15th defendant. If the surrender is otherwise valid, the fact of the surrenderees disposing of the properties obtained by them under the deed of surrender in favour of third parties would not affect in any manner the validity of the surrender.

It is, however, further urged that the settlement deed between the 1st and 2nd defendants, who are the nearest reversioners, and the other reversioners was the result of an arrangement entered into between them to which the widow was a party, which settlement was contemplated prior to the execution of the surrender deed. No doubt mention is made in Exhibit A-3, the settlement deed, as to the gift of 2 acres of wet land to the temple two days earlier than the date of the surrender deed and to an objection having been raised by the other reversioners as to the validity of the surrender. It is stated that as it was intended by the widow to adopt the 13th defendant in pursuance of a deed of consent obtained by her on 25th February, 1940, to make an adoption and as there were these disputes, there was a mediation and the mediators settled, that the surrender deed was executed bona fide and as per the advice of the mediators defendants 1 and 2 and the other reversioners divided the property. It is therefore urged that the surrender is not bona fide being the result of an arrangement whereby the property was divided as between the nearest reversioners and the other prospective reversioners as also the 15th defendant, the brother's son of the widow.

The Privy Council held in *Rangaswami Goundan v. Nachiappa Goundan*¹, that an alienation by a widow of her deceased husband's estate held by her may be validated if it can be shown to be a surrender of her whole interest in the whole estate in favour of the nearest reversioner or reversioners at the time of the alienation and that in such circumstances the question of necessity does not fall to be considered, but the surrender must be a bona fide surrender and not a device to divide the estate with the reversioner. Excepting getting a sum of Rs. 2,000 for maintenance no portion of the property of her husband had been retained by her and it has been consistently held that a reasonable provision by way of maintenance reserved to the widow does not affect the validity of the surrender, if it is in other respects unobjectionable. The fact therefore of a payment of Rs. 2,000 from and out of the estate would not affect its validity in this case. The surrender should not be a device to divide the estate with the reversioner. The division that is prohibited is a division of the estate between the widow and the surrenderee, not any division of the property surrendered as between the surrenderee and others. It may be said in this case in view of the proximity of time between the surrender and the settlement, the settlement and the sale, namely, Exhibits A-2, A-3 and B-2, that in fact there has been a division of the estate between the nearest reversioners and the prospective reversioners. In the view we have taken of the effect of Exhibits

B-2 and B-20, we cannot say that it amounts to a division of the estate with the 15th defendant also. Such a division of the estate between the nearest and the prospective reversioners of the husband is not what is contemplated by Lord Dunedin, who delivered the judgment of the Board, in *Rangaswami Goundan v. Nachiappa Goundan*¹. This is made clear by the same Law Lord in a later decision of the Judicial Committee in *Chowdhury Sureshwar Misser v. Mst. Maheshrani Misra*², where the dictum in *Rangaswami Goundan v. Nachiappa Goundan*¹ is repeated, namely, that the surrender must be a bona fide surrender not a device to divide the estate with the reversioners and it was held that a bona fide arrangement whereby a Hindu widow surrendered all right of succession to the immoveable property in favour of the nearest reversioner who in turn made over half the property to daughters cannot be stigmatised as a device to divide the estate between the surrendering lady and the nearest reversioner and cannot be taken exception to. The surrender would cease to be bona fide if such a device is adopted whereby the widow would secure a division of the property for her individual benefit.

It is not suggested in the present case that by the transfer of 3 acres and 6 cents of lands by defendants 1 and 2 in favour of the widow's brother's son the widow was personally benefited or she intended to retain any benefit in the sense that the sale of lands was a benami or colourable transaction brought about for the ultimate benefit of the widow, the 15th defendant being only a benamidar. It is therefore a case where there has been a transfer of the widow's whole interest in her husband's estate in favour of the nearest reversioners, the widow retaining nothing out of it. If that be the case could it be said that there has not been such self-effacement or renunciation by the widow as to constitute the giving up of her entire interest in her husband's properties? There can be no doubt that there has been such a renunciation. Could an arrangement entered into between the nearest reversioners and other reversioners and even a relation of the widow whereby the properties are divided among them to which the widow might be a consenting party invalidate the surrender where the widow herself does not retain any interest? That a surrender should be not only of her whole interest in favour of the nearest reversioner or reversioners but must also be bona fide it appears to us, was for the first time laid down by Lord Dunedin in *Rangaswami Goundan v. Nachiappa Goundan*¹. By "bona fide" it must be understood that the transaction is a real transaction, not a colourable one, whereby there is not a complete renunciation, or the relinquishment of the widow's interest. What impels a widow to surrender is not of any consequence.

In *Challa Subbiah Sastri v. Palury Pattabhiramayya*³, it was held that where a widow conveys the whole of her limited estate to the next reversioner in consideration of an undertaking by such reversioner that he would reconvey a portion of such property to a person named by the widow, the conveyance is valid and is not vitiated by such agreement and the title of such reversioner and that of the person to whom the property is reconveyed in pursuance of such agreement cannot be impeached by other reversioners. Sankaran Nair, J., observed

"It is difficult to see how the validity of a surrender by a widow which stands on a higher footing can therefore be affected by her motives or by any such conditions that may be imposed by her as referred to above. Further, there is nothing in the reason of the law to support this contention. Supposing this succession is accelerated by the widow becoming a sanyasi or remarrying, can it be contended that the actual reversioner at the time of her death is entitled to claim the property on the ground that her renunciation of the world or remarriage was made in order to vest the property in a favourite presumptive reversioner, or that it was made under an arrangement by which he was to convey a portion of the property to another? On her renunciation of the world, or remarriage, the Hindu Law vests the property in the reversioners and it is not the less his property because he has promised the widow to give a portion of that property to some stranger who himself could not enforce that agreement."

The motive of a widow in renouncing and transferring her husband's estate in favour of the nearest reversioner, whatever they may be, should not be taken into account in determining the validity of the surrender. What has to be looked into is only her capacity to renounce and a complete effacement of her interest in favour of the nearest reversioner.

This principle as to motive being immaterial in judging whether a transaction of surrender is valid or not is still good law. In *Subbalakshmiammal v. Narayana Aiyar*¹, Venkatasubba Rao, J., expresses his agreement with the dictum of Sankaran Nair, J., in the above referred case that the validity of a surrender does not depend upon the motive of the widow, though the learned Judge is of the opinion that the actual point decided upon in that case must be treated to have been overruled in view of the subsequent Privy Council decision in *Rangaswami Goundan v. Nachiappa Goundan*². In the course of the judgment while referring to that decision the learned Judge observes as follows :

"Their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in *Rangaswami Goundan v. Nachiappa Goundan*³ and *Chowdhury Sureshwar Misser v. Mst. Maheshram Misra*⁴, explain clearly what is meant by the expression 'bona fide' used in this connection. The transaction must be bona fide in the sense that the widow retains no benefit either directly or indirectly, i.e., there must be a complete relinquishment; if in the guise of a surrender, the widow enlarges her own estate in regard to a part, the so-called surrender will not be upheld. I do not think there is any warrant for importing a third and further condition namely, that the motives operating on the mind of the widow must be of a religious or spiritual character. In regard to adoptions by widows according to the Bombay courts, the motive is irrelevant, but the law, as administered in this presidency, makes the motive material. There being no authority declaring that the motive of the surrendering widow has any bearing, I should, for my part, be disinclined to introduce an uncertain and puzzling element, making it incumbent upon the Courts to embark upon an enquiry, often difficult and fruitless, as regards the motive for the transaction."

What is therefore understood by "bona fide" is that the surrender must not be a ruse to secure for the widow an interest in her husband's property which she is not entitled in law, that is, retaining any benefit under it after purporting to renounce it in favour of the nearest reversioner. The surrender must be complete and effective and not colourable and nominal. If the transaction of surrender is a relinquishment of her entire interest in her husband's property and if such relinquishment is in favour of the nearest reversioner and so long as it is not in any way indicated that the arrangement evidenced by the surrender between the widow and the reversioners allows a benefit to accrue to the widow excepting a provision for maintenance, it must be held that that should be sufficient to stand the test of a valid surrender. It is difficult to say what generally influences or impels a widow to relinquish her property in favour of her husband's next of kin, that is, the nearest reversioners. It is in exceptional cases that such a renouncement arises out of a conviction on the part of the widow to renounce not only her husband's estate but also the world and become a sanyasin. But apart from it cases have occurred where Hindu widows have relinquished their interests for various reasons; mainly if the widow is of a retiring disposition, being a woman she would like to be relieved of the management of the estate and to hand over the estate to the nearest reversioner being content with a suitable provision for maintenance. There are cases where along with a suitable provision for maintenance she may desire that a near relation of hers may also be provided for. These are considerations which generally weigh with a Hindu widow to renounce her estate. The fact that not only she desires to be free from the trouble of administering the estate but also desires to provide for a relation for whom she might have some affection, and where the reversioner who will be entitled to the estate accedes to her request in deference to her wishes to make such a provision, cannot characterise the surrender as not a bona fide one.

Learned counsel referred to the decision of Lakshmana Rao and Happell, JJ., in *Krishnamurthi v. Seshayya*⁴, cited with approval by Raghava Rao, J., in *Chundru Akkamma v. Chundru Brahmada*⁵, in support of his contention. In *Krishnamurthi v. Seshayya*⁶, it was held that the surrender deed, the retention of some of the properties covered by it by the surrenderee and the alienation of the rest by him benami for the brother's son of the widow, all formed part of the same transaction; that in the circumstances, the surrender was not a bona fide transaction and the whole arrangement was only a device to divide the estate so as to give a part of the estate to the widow's brother's son in order that the sister's son might get the remainder in praesenti and that accordingly the surrender was not binding on the reversion. The finding in those decisions is that the transactions which they were considering were benami transactions in the sense that the transfer by the reversioners in favour of a near relation of the widow was really for her benefit and the effect of it was a retention of a portion of the property in the widow by adopting the transfer in favour of the relation as a device to divide the estate. Those decisions might be supported on the particular facts of those cases. But it is necessary to point out that Raghava Rao, J., observed that the dictum in *Chella Subbiah Sastri v. Palu Pattabhiramayya*¹ was accepted in Mayne as good law, namely, that the widow's motive in making a surrender is immaterial and that therefore a surrender by her cannot be called in question on the ground of improper motive.

The doctrine of surrender has been understood in some decisions to have been evolved out of judicial decisions and to have no foundation in the original texts. That was the view taken by Kumaraswami Sastriar, J., in *Vaidyanatha Sastri v. Savitri Ammal*², where the learned Judge observed that "the whole doctrine of surrender and consequent acceleration of the estate of the reversioner has no basis in Hindu Smritis, but has been evolved by Courts of Justice on general principles of jurisprudence."

With respect to the learned Judge that statement cannot be said to be quite accurate. Though the surrender by a widow in favour of the nearest reversioners is not specifically mentioned in the texts, such of the Hindu law texts that pertain to the widow's right of inheritance to her husband's property and the extent and scope of such rights are certainly derived from the texts and the right of the widow to surrender is one of the incidents of the right to succeed to her husband's property and to enjoy it. This was pointed out by Mitter, J., in *Ramakrishna v. Sm. Kousalya Mani*³. In *Arunachala Moopanar v. Arumugha Moopanar*⁴, a decision of Govinda Menon, J., and myself, our attention was drawn to the view of Kumaraswami Sastriar, J. In that case the question arose as to the right of the reversioner-surrenderee to recover possession and dispossess the alienee from the widow before the lifetime of the widow as a logical consequence of the surrender. We, however, did not think it then necessary to examine the original texts and preferred to follow the rulings on the subject. But now it appears to me it may be necessary in view of the textual law on the subject to reconsider the rulings on which we relied in coming to a decision in that case.

Mookerjee, J., in *Debi Prosad Chowdhury v. Golap Bhagat*⁵, has referred to some of these texts. The main text is that of Katyayana as explained by Jimutavahana in the Dayabhaga, Chapter XI, section. 1, para. 55, which says:

"Let the childless widow, preserving unsullied the bed of her lord, and abiding with her venerable protector, enjoy with moderation, the property until her death. After her let the heirs take it."

In paragraph 64 he refers to the text of Narada which says:

"When the husband is deceased, his kin are the guardians of his childless widow. In the disposal of the property, and care of herself, as well as in her maintenance, they have full power. But, if the husband's family be extinct or contain no male, or be helpless, the kin of her own father are the guardians of the widow, if there be no relations of her husband within the degree of a sapinda."

With reference to this text of Narada, his commentary is that "in the disposal of property by gift or otherwise, she is subject to the control of her husband's family, after his decease, and in default of sons," and with their consent she may bestow gifts on the kindred of her own father and mother. Dayakrama-Sangraha, a commentary on the Dayabhaga of Sri Krishna

Tarkalankara. Chapter I, section 2, refers to Katyayana and Narada's texts and commenting upon them states in para. 7:

" On these (Sapindas, daughter's sons, sister's sons, maternal uncles of her husband) and on the others should she bestow presents, and not on the members of the family of her own father, while these persons are living, for then the specification of 'paternal uncles' and the rest would be superfluous. With their consent, however, she may make gifts to the kindred of her own father and mother, as declared by Narada In the disposal of property that is by gift, etc., the wife is liable to the control of the family of her husband, after the death of her husband and on failure of sons; so it is declared in the Dayabhaga."

Emphasis is laid in the texts on the parental position occupied by the nearest reversioners, who are considered to be the guardians of the widow and are expected to protect her interests and guide and direct her in dealing with the properties of her husband.

The rights of the widow to inheritance of her husband's estate and power to dispose of her husband's property owe their origin to the Dayabhaga and the commentaries thereon; and that the principles as derived from the texts are applicable to the Madras Presidency do not admit of any doubt, since the Bengal rulings based on the Dayabhaga on these matters have been applied and followed in the decisions of our Court. Subramania Aiyar, J., in *Marudamuthu Nadan v. Srinivasa Pillai*¹ observed:

"I think it unnecessary to go into the question, whether the Hindu law according to the texts or the commentaries lends support to the doctrine that a female holding a qualified estate can validly surrender such an estate, so as to entitle the then immediate reversioner to enter upon the inheritance and to hold it absolutely as if the succession had opened by the natural or civil death of the qualified owner. Though there has been no course of decisions on the point in this Presidency as in Bengal, yet instances have occurred which show that parties have acted upon the view that such surrenders are valid in these parts as well. This appears even from some of the cases which have come before the Courts. Since, there is nothing in the doctrine itself which makes it less suited to the community in this Presidency than to the community in Bengal, it is not surprising that the Calcutta rulings have in practice been followed in this Presidency also."

So long as the widow does nothing to contravene the injunctions of the nearest reversioners such acts of the widow could be said to be permitted. This is also evident from the commentary of Dayabhaga in Dazakrama-Sangraha that in the disposal of property the wife is liable to the control of the family of her husband, after the death of her husband and on failure of sons, and with their consent, she may make gifts to the kindred of her own father and mother. The reason behind the principle laid down in the texts is that the husband's relations, that is, the nearest reversioners being the persons that are ultimately interested in the properties are themselves persuaded to part with a portion of the properties at the request of the widow, they must be deemed to have done for proper and justifiable reasons since they are the guardians and advisers of the widow. When the widow expresses a desire to surrender her interest and also wishes that a gift of a portion of the property may be made to the kindred of her own father and mother, the reversioners are entitled to give effect to it and nothing prevents them from doing so. The nearest reversioners are not bound to secure the property without any dismemberment or disposal for the benefit of any other kin or reversioner, since the reversioners, even the presumptive much less the prospective reversioner have no vested right in the widow's husband's property. Such disposal of property at the time of the surrender would not be against the injunctions laid down in the texts. The principle of relinquishment or surrender as observed by Mookerjee, J., in *Debi Prasad Choudhury v. Golap Bhagat*², is contemplated in the texts. The learned Judge states at page 771 as follows:

"As a matter of fact, the theory of relinquishment is foreshadowed in the Dayabhaga, Chapter XI, section 1, para. 59, where Jimutavahana lays down that the persons who would be the next heirs on failure of prior claimants, succeed to the residue of the estate remaining after her use of it, upon the demise of the widow in whom the succession had vested, in the same manner as they would have succeeded if the widow's right had never been taken effect. The words used by Jimutavahana

"जाताधिकारायाः पत्या अधिकार प्रध्वंसोप भोगवशिष्ठं धनं गृह्णीयुः"

1. (1897) 8 M.L.J. 69; I.L.R. 21 Mad. 128 at 133 (F.B.).

2. (1913) I.L.R. 40 Cal. 721 (F.B.).

("if her right ceases or never takes effect") are comprehensive enough to include not merely the case of the death of the widow, but all cases where her right ceases; in other words, the reversioners take the estate not merely when the widow dies, but also when her title is extinguished, for instance by renunciation, remarriage or the like."

Though the term surrender is not expressly mentioned in the texts, the circumstances and conditions under which a widow could dispose of her husband's property as laid down in the texts will with equal force apply to the case of a disposal by the widow as and by way of surrender in favour of the nearest reversioners and thus accelerate the reversion. Even from the point of view taken in the texts and as explained by the commentators, we are of the opinion that a surrender by the widow of her entire interest in her husband's property in favour of the nearest reversioners does not become invalid by reason of the reversioners making a provision at the time of the surrender or subsequently of a portion of the property to the kindred of the widow's father and mother to satisfy her wishes. Reservation of a small portion of the property as provision for maintenance out of the estate is a fortiori permissible and has been so held in a number of decisions of the several High Courts. We are therefore of the view that even if the transfer of 3 acres and 6 cents in favour of the 15th defendant, who is a kindred of the widow's parents, being her brother's son, out of an extent of 25 acres and other properties is a gift, it is a permissible disposal of the property which does not vitiate the validity of the surrender. We, however, hold in this case that it is not a gift, but a transfer for consideration to D.W. 1, who in turn sold it to the 15th defendant. In view of our holding that the surrender is valid, it is unnecessary to examine the finding of the lower Court that the adoption is invalid, since the adoption would not divest the properties from the possession of defendants 1 and 2, who hold the same under a valid surrender.

In the result, the appeal is dismissed with costs of the contesting respondents. Appellant will pay the court-fee payable to Government.

Mack, J.—I have perused with great interest and advantage the judgment of my learned brother, with which I am in complete agreement. I am greatly indebted to him for his research into ancient Hindu texts, which appear to me to set at rest all doubts attaching to the surrender of a widow's life-estate. It is, indeed, refreshing, nor is it in any way surprising, to find that the ancient texts give direct support to a common sense and reasonable position that a childless widow can, with the consent of her husband's kins, make a valid surrender to the nearest reversioners after making gifts with their consent to any of her own relations. It is also settled law, so far as case-law on any subject in the domain of Hindu law can be regarded as settled, as both the learned counsel agree and as my learned brother has pointed out, that a Hindu widow can, with the consent of the reversioners, make a valid surrender at the same time reserving for herself a portion of property for her maintenance over which she will have absolute powers of alienation.

The ancient texts themselves, as analysed by my learned brother, throw considerable light on the obscurity of a series of decisions, some progressive and some, which with great respect may be called reactionary, the general effect of which have imposed on the conveyancer of the necessary documents in connection with a widow's surrender and gift with the consent of the reversioners or sapindas an extremely difficult problem. Some decisions have treated the widow's power of acceleration and the reversioner's power of validation as distinct and independent powers. Wallis, J., in *Rangappa Naick v. Kamti Naik*¹ observed that the Bombay High Court had consistently refused to treat the reversioner's power to validate as derived from the widow's power to accelerate, as, though the former had the authority of the Hindu texts, the latter was regarded as being based upon the application of the English doctrine of merger. The widow herself has no power of acceleration as such without the consent of the reversioners, except in the very rare case of a widow making a complete renunciation of her whole husband's estate without reserve to the reversioners leaving to herself absolutely nothing at all. In all other cases of surrender, the widow's power of acceleration and the reversioners' power of consent or validation are mutually inter-dependent and one cannot operate without the other.

I have never been able to appreciate the many legal impediments, which have been sought to be placed in the way of a childless widow with the consent and approval of the reversioners' disposing of the estate in order to free herself from the botheration of its management. The widow of course has an unfettered right to the enjoyment of the income of the entire estate till her death if she so desires. Similarly, the reversioners are entitled to refuse to agree to any surrender by the widow, which involves the retention of any portion of the corpus by the widow even for her maintenance. I have never been able to see what spiritual benefit any one dead or living can derive from obstacles various decisions have placed in the way of a childless widow in the domain of surrender. The limited estate provided by Hindu law for a childless widow is something peculiar to Hindu law, and any endeavour to apply the principles attaching to other forms of limited interest to this kind of estate can only be fraught with much involved complication. The one condition necessary for a surrender by a childless widow to be valid is, as my learned brother has pointed out, that it should be bona fide. It must not be a division of the estate between the widow and a reversioner in order that each should have premature and absolute powers of alienation over a portion. To cite an extreme case, if a young widow and an elderly reversioner without children should agree between themselves to divide the estate and this agreement is embodied in the form of a surrender deed with reservation for maintenance, it would clearly be a mala fide transaction with the object of defeating the other reversioners. I am unable to see any impediment in the early Hindu texts referred to by my learned brother in the way of the widow executing a valid surrender in favour of reversioners and with their consent making contemporaneously small gifts to her own relations and also reserving a portion of the property to be enjoyed by her absolutely for her maintenance.

It is becoming increasingly necessary that the law on these difficult branches of Hindu law, which have been made extremely complicated by much developed case-law in the past should be expressed in as clear and simple terms as possible for the guidance of those on whom the heavy burden of conveyancing rests. In this case we have perused with much appreciation, the ability, care and thoroughness with which the widow's surrender deed Ex. A-2, a contemporaneous gift deed Ex. B-1 gifting some land to a temple and other related documents have been prepared by unrecognised, unlicensed and unqualified de facto solicitors, who appear to have the carriage of all litigation in areas from which the suit arises. In striking contrast with these documents prepared in 1940 with a sense of responsibility we have no hesitation in describing as a thoroughly irresponsible document, the adoption deed Ex. A, by which this widow adopts this plaintiff on 17th February, 1945, without any reference whatsoever to the surrender to the reversioners she had previously made in 1940. It is on the basis of this document that a first-class pauper litigation has been evolved in which no less than 23 defendants have been impleaded. The fact that the plaintiff's grandfather was admittedly a consenting reversioner to the widow's surrender and received a share of land is in itself sufficient ground for dismissing the suit. His grandson has been put forward as a pauper plaintiff in another wholly untenable legal capacity, in the circumstances, as a son adopted by the widow after this perfectly valid surrender.

Madras Prohibition Act (X of 1937), section 4 (1) (a)—“Possession”—Proof of.

In the case of a family living jointly in the same house, the head of the family will be presumed to be in possession of an illicit article found in the house; but this presumption is rebuttable and the weight to be attached to it must vary according to the circumstances. The strength of the presumption also varies according to the improbabilities that the article owing to its size, etc., shall have escaped the notice of the head of the family or it was unlikely that such incriminating article would have been found by chance or that any of the sons could have taken possession of the article and hidden it in the house without informing the father or that such article could have escaped notice or could remain in the house without his knowledge. Possession in order to justify a conviction need not necessarily be the exclusive possession. The only point that must be proved in all the cases is that accused or all the accused persons were aware of the presence of the illicit article and had control over the same.

* Crl. R. C. No. 189 of 1952.

* 9th September, 1952.

Where the evidence is that the accused is the head of the family who rented the house in a room of which brandy was found in bottles, who is occupying a fairly important position, whose health was such that brandy might have been recommended as palliative, who did not offer an explanation at the earliest opportunity of the finding of the brandy bottles even though opportunity was twice given,

Held, the finding by the lower Court that the accused was in possession of the illicit articles is justified and the accused is guilty of an offence under section 4 (1) (a) of the Act.

Petition under sections 435 and 439, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, praying that the High Court will be pleased to revise the order of the Court of the District Magistrate, Vizagapatam, dated 16th November, 1951, in Crl. Appeal No. 30 of 1951 (C. C. No. 1046 of 1950, Sub-Magistrate's Court, Vizagapatam).

L. S. Veeraraghava Aiyar for Petitioner.

The Public Prosecutor (V. T. Rangaswami Aiyangar) for the State.

ORDER.—This is a criminal revision case which has been filed against the conviction and sentence of the learned District Magistrate, Visakhapatnam, in C. A. No. 30 of 1951, confirming the conviction and modifying the sentence in C. C. No. 1046 of 1950, Sub-Magistrate, Visakhapatnam.

2. The facts are : The petitioner-accused before us was the Head Establishment Clerk, D.T.O.'s office, Bengal-Nagpur Railway. He is an elderly man who is suffering from heart trouble and is also said to be otherwise sickly. This accused has got a grown up son who has been examined as D.W. 4 in this case and that son's wife is one Jayalakshmi, who has not been examined. The accused and his son and daughter-in-law all lived in the same house and the evidence is that they are undivided and the accused is the tenant of that house. It is in these circumstances that the following incident took place.

3. P.W. 1, Sri G. N. Brahma, who is the Inspector of the Special Police Establishment of the Government of India with headquarters at Puri on information received in regard to certain other matters, with which we are not concerned here and which might well be guessed, obtained a search warrant from the District Magistrate, Visakhapatnam, on 4th December, 1949, and searched the house of the accused.

4. In the course of the search on 5th December, 1949, in the presence of the then Stationary Sub-Magistrate, who has been examined as P. W. 5, Mr. S. N. Singh, Section Controller of B. N. Railway, Waltair, who was residing close to the house of the accused and who has been examined as P. W. 3, the local Sub-Inspector Mr. C. V. Naidu and the Railway Sectional Officer, Mr. S. J. Naidu, attached to the Special Police Establishment with headquarters at Puri and who has been examined as P.W. 2. 2½ bottles of Haywoods Fine Brandy V.A.F. No. 4, were found in the house of the accused. The half bottle, M. O. 1, was found in the bottom drawer of the mirror almirah in the southernmost room of the house of the accused. The full bottles with the original company seals were found in the iron safe in the same room. They were seized along with other articles concerned in the other case for which the search was made in the first instance and a search list Ex. P-1 was prepared. These bottles of brandy were handed over along with a report the same day by the Special Establishment Police Inspector, P.W. 1 to the local Prohibition Sub-Inspector Mohamad Lal Sheriff, examined as P.W. 4. This Prohibition Sub-Inspector came to the spot took up the investigation and prepared another Panchayatnama and which has also been signed by the aforesaid persons

It is not disputed that before the search the person of the searching officers was searched by the Magistrate as well as by the outside witness Mr. S. N. Singh. The accused was present at the time of the search. On 5th December, 1949, the Prohibition Sub-Inspector enquired the accused in regard to the recovery of these bottles of brandy and possession of the same by him. The accused in Ex. P-4 stated that he was suffering from fever and that he was unable to give any statement. The accused was again called upon to appear and give a statement on 7th December, 1949, and in regard to which also he sent a report Ex. P-5, that he was still sick and was unable to give a statement.

5. On the accused being charge-sheeted for an offence under section 4 (i) (a) of the Madras Prohibition Act that he was found to have been in possession of two full bottles of brandy in his iron safe and a half bottle in a mirror almirah in his house without being covered by permit, he came forward with the version that these bottles were found in the southern room of the house and that his only son, who is D. W. 4, and his wife Jayalakshmi are living separately in that house in that separate room and that the keys for these receptacles were in the possession of Jayalakshmi and that the accused had nothing to do with that southern room or the receptacles and that he should not be construed to have been in possession of these brandy bottles within the meaning of the Madras Prohibition Act rendering him liable to be convicted under section 4 (i) (a).

6. Therefore the short point for determination in all the courts is whether the prosecution has brought home possession of these brandy bottles to this accused.

7. The word "possession" as can be summarised from Chapters 13 and 14 (pages 236-267) of Sir John Salmond's Jurisprudence, Chapter XI (pages 162-174) of Holland's Jurisprudence and Markby's "Elements of Law," Chapter IX (pages 177-203) implies a physical capacity to deal with the thing as we like to the exclusion of every one and a determination to exercise that physical power on one's own behalf. These two elements, physical and mental, are described by Roman Jurists as corpus and animus respectively.

8. But as the Authors of the Indian Penal Code point out in their note appended to their draft of the Indian Penal Code :

"We believe it to be impossible to mark with precision by any words the circumstances which constitute possession. It is easy to put cases about which no doubt whatever exists and in which the language of lawyers and of the multitude would be the same. It will hardly be doubted for example that a gentleman's watch lying on the table in his room is in his possession, though it is not in his hand and though he may not know whether it is on his writing table or on his dressing table; as little it will be doubted that a watch which a gentleman lost a year ago on a journey and which he has never heard of since is not in his possession. It will not be doubted that when a person gives a dinner his silver forks while in the hands of guests are still in his possession; and it will be as little doubted that the silver forks are not in his possession when he has deposited them with a pawn-broker as a pledge. But between these extreme cases there will be many cases in which it will be difficult to pronounce with confidence whether the property is or that it is not in a person's possession."

9. A person may have possession of a thing through his representative provided (i) the representative has physical control over the thing; (ii) the physical control is exercised on behalf of the principal; and (iii) the principal agrees to such exercise.

10. It is not necessary, however, as shown in the above illustration that this physical power of dealing with the thing should be retained at every moment of time. It would be enough for the purpose of retaining possession if that physical power can be produced at any moment the possessor wishes it. Possession is lost with the loss of physical control. Similarly, it is not necessary that the intention to possess should be constantly in the mind of the person exercising possession. It is enough if the determination to keep is not lost. As soon as that mental element ceases to exist the possession is lost.

11. The case-law on the subject to which we have got to resort to because the Indian Penal Code does not define the word "possession" though section 27 says that when property is in the possession of a person's wife, clerk or servant on account of that person, it is in that person's possession—is not always clear. But if these cases are rightly studied the principle to be deduced therefrom regarding possession is that a man has not the possession of that the existence of which he is unaware of.

Possession implies dominion and consciousness in the mind of the person having dominion over an object that he has it and that he can exercise it. Possession must be conscious and intelligent possession and not merely the physical presence of the accused in proximity or even in close proximity to the object : *Shive Kyo v. King-Emperor*¹, *Dula Singh v. Emperor*², *Ramcharan v. Emperor*³, *Kuldipchand v. Emperor*⁴, *Lakhan Singh v. Emperor*⁵, *Cyril G. Baker v. Emperor*⁶, *Jayaramulu Naidu v. Emperor*⁷, *Emperor v. Abdul Ram*⁸, *Sarju Prasad v. Emperor*⁹ and *Sundar Singh v. Emperor*¹⁰.

12. The difficulty under this head arises when prohibited articles are recovered from places under joint family possession. It is now however well settled that in the case of a family living jointly in the same house the head of the family is presumed to be in possession of any illicit article found in the house : *Emperor v. Mir Ahmed*¹¹, *Weston v. Peary Mohan Das*¹², *Emperor v. Mst. Ram*¹³, *Harban Singh v. Emperor*¹⁴. The presumption is rebuttable and the weight attached to it must vary according to circumstances. It can be easily rebutted by showing that the room or receptacle in question was in the particular and exclusive possession of one member of the joint family. Similarly, where two or more persons are charged with joint illegal possession it is incumbent on the State to prove (a) that each of the accused had either physical or constructive possession of the property or (b) that one or more of them had possession thereof either physical or constructive on behalf of themselves and the other accused to the knowledge of the latter : *Narumal Dayaldas v. Emperor*¹⁵, *Maturo v. Emperor*¹⁶ and *Dodo Racho v. Emperor*¹⁷.

13. This is the line of decisions arising under four important heads, viz., (a) section 114, Indian Evidence Act—illustration (a); (b) Arms Act; (c) Abkari Act, and (d) Opium Act. It will be remembered that under section 114, illustration (a), in order to draw the presumption the possession must be exclusive. But where stolen goods were found in a house inhabited by a joint Hindu family composed of a father, his son, and grandson and the circumstances were such that it was very improbable that such property could possibly have been placed where it was found without the connivance of some or all the members of the family, held that under the above circumstances the conviction of the managing member under section 411, Indian Penal Code, was a proper conviction : *Emperor v. Budhlal*¹⁸, *Queen Empress v. Sangamlal*¹⁹, referred to.

In *Algoo Misir v. Rex*²⁰, Saran, J., held that

“to render a person liable to conviction under section 19 (f) of the Arms Act, arms should be recovered from his possession or control. Merely because arms are found in a house belonging to a family, it cannot be said that the head of the family who is in possession of the house must also be in possession of the arms in the rooms in the house and is therefore liable. It has to be proved by evidence that the room in which the arms or the offending articles are found or are recovered were indeed in possession of that person or was under his control. It has to be proved that some particular person or individual was in possession or control of the room or that portion of the house from which the arms were recovered in order to justify a conviction under section 19 (f).”

Possession of the key of a box containing arms in the house of the accused, must be held to be possession of arms for purposes of section 19 (f) of the Arms Act, as the possession of the key of the box by the accused tends to show that the accused must have knowledge of the presence of the arms in the box. 15. Then coming to Bombay Abkari Act, construing section 43 (1) (a) (h) it was held in *Appa Rama Mali v. Emperor*¹, as follows :

"The accused lived jointly with his two brothers in a clump of huts. Of the three huts that were there the middle one was occupied by accused with his family, the two adjoining huts by his two brothers and their families. At the back of the huts there were some fields jointly cultivated by the brothers. In each of three huts were found articles which suggested that the inhabitants were or had been in possession of illicit liquor and in the fields were found some bottles containing liquor and tins of jaggery-wash intended for the preparation of illicit liquor. Held, that the only reasonable inference which could be drawn from the possession of the articles would be that the accused or the accused and his brothers were manufacturing illicit liquor and that the possession of these articles which could not be explained on any other hypothesis was for the purpose required by clause (h) of section 43 of the Bombay Abkari Act. Held also, the fact that the evidence of possession would tell with almost equal force against the brothers of the accused was no ground for holding that possession has not been proved against the accused himself."

If the evidence as to possession is adequate in the case of the accused it does not assist him at all to say that on the same evidence other persons might have been tried and convicted along with him. But when illicit liquor was found in the room occupied for the night by the son and his wife for sleeping, it does not necessarily mean that the son was in the exclusive possession of the room. The legal possession still remains with the father, the house-master, and there is obvious possibility that the liquor was stored there by the father. We must look to attendant circumstances to establish some element of knowledge on the part of the son and if evidence forthcoming is found insufficient, son is not guilty of possession. (*Bholanath Sarma v. Emperor*², and *Wazir v. Emperor*³).

16. Similarly, under the Opium Act, it has been held by Thadani, C.J., and Ram Labhaya, J., in *Bolanath Sarma v. Emperor*⁴, that where substantial amount of opium is found in the bed room of the accused with weighing scales and small weights, knowledge of the presence of the opium in the house can reasonably be attributed to him under section 10, Opium Act. The accused is then required to account satisfactorily for his possession and his failure renders him liable to a conviction under section 9 of the Act. In *Wazir v. Emperor*⁵, it was held that the possession of the husband does not necessarily connote that the wife also was liable under section 9. Where opium is recovered on a search of the house in which the accused lived with his wife, the husband alone is responsible for the opium discovered and it cannot be presumed that the wife was also jointly in possession with him.

17. To sum up, in the case of a family living jointly in the same house the head of the family will be presumed to be in possession of any illicit article found in the house ; but this presumption is rebuttable and the weight to be attached to it must vary according to the circumstances as laid down in *Emperor v. Mir Ahmed*⁶, and *Weston v. Das*⁷. The strength of the presumption also varies according to the improbabilities that the article owing to its size, etc., should have escaped the notice of the head of the family ; *Harban Singh v. Emperor*⁸, or it was unlikely that such incriminating article would have been found by chance or that any of the sons could have taken possession of the article and hidden it in the house without informing the father or that such article could have escaped notice or could remain concealed in the house without his knowledge : *Jwala v. Emperor*⁹, or the nature of the occupation, *Emperor v. Ismail*¹⁰, or the nature of the participation of the other members in the manufacture, storing and disposal of the illicit article : *Emperor v. Parmidi*¹¹ and *Nga Shew Toe v. Emperor*¹². Possession in order to justify a conviction under the Abkari Act need not necessarily be exclusive possession : *Appa Rama Mali v. Emperor*¹, *Harsh Nath Chatterjee v. Emperor*¹¹, and *Parmai v. Emperor*¹². The only point that must be proved in all these cases is that the accused or all the accused persons were aware of the presence of the illicit article and had control of the same.

18. Bearing these principles in mind when we examine the evidence in this case we find that the possession of the brandy bottles has been brought home beyond reasonable doubt to this accused. This accused is the head of the undivided family. It was he who rented the house. He was occupying an important position in life and was suffering from heart trouble and a certain amount of weakness for which a particular type of Doctors recommend brandy in small quantities both for bracing of heart as well as to prevent depression and alleviate pain also. The keys for opening the almirah and iron safe were handed over by this accused. It is quite possible as spoken to by the servant of this accused that the keys were in the actual custody of the daughter-in-law as this elderly man may not like to carry about a bunch of keys with him and might have left to his daughter-in-law the household duties of keeping the keys, etc. This would not make that Jayalakshmi the culprit because the suggestion made that these brandy bottles might have been purchased by her for confinement was found to be wholly untrue and her last child was more than a year old at the time of this offence and there is no suggestion that she was carrying. On the other hand, Jayalakshmi's husband comes forward and says that neither his wife nor himself ever took brandy. Similarly, the fact that the articles of Jayalakshmi and her husband have been kept in the safe and the almirah is neither here nor there. It would not disprove the possession of this accused. One significant circumstance showing that the present suggestions are after-thoughts is the fact that this accused stoutly declined to give an explanation regarding the presence of the brandy bottles either on the 5th or on the 7th on the pretext that he was unwell though one would imagine that the fever from which he is stated to have been suffering could not have prevented him from saying in a few words as to how the brandy bottles came into the almirah and the iron safe. Therefore, putting all these circumstances together both the lower Courts rightly found that the accused was in possession of these illicit articles.

19. The conviction is correct and the sentence of imprisonment till the rising of the Court and a fine of Rs. 200 imposed by the Sub-Magistrate are equally correct. I am unable to understand the setting aside of this imprisonment till the rising of the Court, which had already been undergone by the accused, by the District Magistrate (Judicial) of Visakhapatnam. In fact he need not have gone to the extent of setting aside the imprisonment which he could not set aside because this imprisonment till the rising of the Court would not disentitle the accused from getting any of the benefits of gratuity, etc., if otherwise he is entitled to them.

20. There are no grounds to interfere and this criminal revision case is dismissed.

Penal Code (XLV of 1860), section 300, Explanation 1 and section 304—Beating with shoe—Whether grave and sudden provocation which will convert the offence into culpable homicide not amounting to murder.

In this country if a person were to beat another with a shoe that is considered to be the height of shame and particularly in the midst of number of villagers right in the middle of the street. Where on account of the mothers of the accused and deceased quarrelling with each other the sons joined the fray and when the deceased beat or attempted to beat the accused with a shoe, he retaliated by stabbing the deceased with a pen-knife which he was carrying in his shorts pocket, and where there is no evidence that the accused came on the scene with the object of causing injury to anybody,

Held, the offence is one of culpable homicide not amounting to murder as the accused had grave and sudden provocation.

Trial referred by the Court of Session of the South Arcot Division for confirmation of the sentence of death passed upon the said Prisoner in case No. 36 of the Calendar for 1952 on 8th August, 1952.

K. Narayanaswamy Mudaliar and V. Gopala Goundar for Accused.

The Public Prosecutor (V. T. Rangaswami Aiyangar) on behalf of the State.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by Govinda Menon, J.—This is a case in which there can be no doubt or dispute as to whether the appellant-accused has caused the death of the deceased Kannayiram. But the only point which requires consideration is whether the offence comes within the ambit of section 302, Indian Penal Code or whether it is reduced to one under section 304, Indian Penal Code.

The prosecution case is short and simple. There have been instances of previous ill-feeling between the accused and the deceased. On the 2nd April, 1952, at about 4 P.M., when the deceased his mother P.W. 1 and another person, P.W. 2, were returning from a shandy along the village street, had passed certain houses and approached the house of the accused, the mother of the accused came out and abused the mother of the deceased P.W. 1 in a very vile and foul language. There was exchange of words between the two women. The deceased sat in front of one Arunachala Goundan's house. Thereafter it is stated that the accused's mother advanced with a broomstick and brandished it against the deceased. On hearing this confusion and noise, the accused, who was in his shop, came out and there was exchange of words between the accused and the deceased. Then, P.W. 3 a neighbour, who was there intervened and separated them. At that time the accused is alleged to have taken out a pen-knife from the pocket of his shorts and given a stab to the deceased on the left chest. The injury, according to the doctor, was a very serious one, which resulted in immediate death. The deceased fell down and died instantaneously. P.W. 5, a brother of the deceased, who came on the scene, straightaway went to the Village Munsiff, P.W. 9 and gave him a complaint at 4-30 P.M., which is marked in the case as Ex. P-3. The body of the deceased was taken from the place where he fell down, and put on a cot in the vicinity. The accused is also alleged to have gone straightaway to the Village Munsiff and asked him for protection. The Village Munsiff detained him and sent a report to the Police. The Police Officer P.W. 13, arrived on the scene at about 6 A.M., the next day. The accused was in the Village Munsiff's house and was taken into custody. The Sub-Inspector investigated the matter and a charge-sheet was filed against the accused which resulted in a committal to the Sessions Court and subsequent trial by the Sessions Judge. The Sessions Judge found him guilty of an offence under section 302, Indian Penal Code and imposed the extreme penalty of law. Though, according to P.W. 9, the accused admitted the offence of stabbing the deceased and prostrated before P.W. 9 imploring him to save him, both before the Committing Magistrate and the learned Sessions Judge the accused did not admit having stabbed the deceased. He gave a version, which, on the face of it, cannot be accepted. Before the Sessions Judge, he has stated that he was not having any knife and that he did not know what he did in his anger.

The question, which we have to consider, is whether first of all, it was the accused that stabbed the deceased. On this aspect of the case, we have the evidence of the eye-witnesses, P.Ws. 1 to 4. All these witnesses speak about the quarrel and the accused stabbing the deceased. P.Ws. 1 and 2 say that after the deceased was stabbed he took out a shoe from his foot and tried to beat the accused with it. As against this, we have the evidence of P.W. 13, the Sub-Inspector that at the time of the investigation P.W. 1 told him that the deceased began to beat the accused with a sandal and it was then that the accused took out a knife from his shorts pocket and stabbed the deceased. P.W. 13 also deposed that a shoe was recovered from the scene of occurrence. P.W. 1 in cross-examination had to admit that she told the Police that her son threw a sandal at the accused after he was stabbed. So far as P.W. 2 is concerned he also admits that the deceased went a few steps, threw a sandal against the accused, fell down and died. P.W. 3's evidence is to the effect that there was wordy quarrel between the deceased and the accused and then the accused said that he would beat the deceased with a sandal and that the deceased thereafter took off a shoe and kept in his hands. He further deposed that the deceased attempted to beat the accused with the shoe, but he prevented him from doing so. P.W. 4 in cross-examination had to state that the deceased had a shoe in his hands and went to beat the accused. Though these witnesses now went to say that the incident regarding the attempt to beat with the shoe was after the stab, it seems to us that that portion of the prosecution evidence is not entitled to credence at our hands. It is unlikely that, after the deceased sustained a very serious injury as the one which was inflicted on him, it would have been possible for him to take the shoe from his foot and try to beat the deceased. The Doctor, P.W. 8, says that the injury was an oblique punctured wound 1½ inches by 1 inch on the left side of the chest in the region of the breast, 2 inches internal to the left nipple. According to the doctor the death was due to shock and hæmorrhage due to injury of the heart as is evident from the internal examination. When the Doctor says that a small portion of the left lung was protruding through the wound, that the pectoral muscles were pierced through the costal cartilage of the left 4th rib at the junction of the sternum, which was cut through, and that also the intercostal space obliquely extending from 3 inches costo-condral junction to the junction of costal cartilage of the 4th rib with the sternum, the injuries were very severe which fact cannot be disputed. After having received such serious injuries, where the heart and lungs were affected we do not believe that the deceased would have had the strength to attempt to beat the accused with a shoe. What would have happened is, that on account of the mother of the accused and the deceased quarrelling with each other the sons joined the fray and when the deceased either beat or attempted to beat the accused with a shoe, he retaliated by stabbing the deceased with a pen-knife, which he was carrying in his shorts pocket. It may also be remembered that it was the deceased, according to the evidence, that threw out the first challenge. He should have been considered to be the aggressor. In such circumstances we are of opinion that the accused had not only provocation, but such provocation was grave and sudden. In this country if a person were to beat another with a shoe, that is considered to be the height of shame and particularly in the midst of a number of villagers right in the street. We are inclined to hold that the attempt to beat a man with a shoe would give sufficient provocation to the man intended to be beaten. The accused must therefore be said to have had not only grave provocation but sudden provocation as well. There is no evidence to show that the accused came there with the object of causing anybody any injury. The knife which had been produced and which is found stained with human blood is a small pen-knife which is usually carried by persons. It is not the prosecution case that there was any pre-meditation so far as the offence is concerned. In such circumstances we do not feel justified in agreeing with the Sessions Judge that the offence is one of murder for the reasons stated by us above, but we are of opinion that the accused can be found guilty only of an offence under section 304, Indian Penal Code, Part I. We therefore set aside the conviction under section 302, Indian Penal Code and sentence to be hanged by neck; but convict the accused of an offence under section 304, Indian Penal Code and sentence him to rigorous imprisonment for seven years.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908); section 5—If applicable to an application filed under the Arbitration Act (X of 1940) to set aside award—Arbitration Act (X of 1940), section 37 (1)—Scope.

The true scope of section 37 (1) of the Arbitration Act, 1940, is that when proceedings are taken before the arbitrator the parties are entitled to plead limitation exactly as if the proceedings had been taken in a civil Court. That being the scope of that section, its operation should be limited to proceedings before the arbitrator and not to proceedings taken in Court, though they might arise out of arbitration proceedings. Accordingly section 37 (1) does not have the effect of making section 5 of the Limitation Act applicable to an application to set aside an award. There is no power in the Court to extend the time prescribed by Article 158 of the Limitation Act.

On appeal from the order of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Krishnaswami Nayudu dated 6th November, 1951 and made in the exercise of the Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction of the High Court in Application No. 2355 of 1951 in O.P. No. 66 of 1951.

K. C. Doraiswami for Appellant.

T. T. Srinivasan and A. N. Rangaswami for Respondents.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Venkatarama Aiyar, J.—The question that is raised in this appeal is whether section 5 of the Limitation Act is applicable to an application filed under the Indian Arbitration Act to set aside an award. In certain arbitration proceedings to which the appellant was a party an award was pronounced and it was filed on the original side of this Court in O.P. No. 66 of 1951. Notice of this petition was served on the appellant on 27th March, 1951. Article 158 of the Limitation Act provides that an application to set aside an award should be filed within 30 days from the date of the service of the notice of filing of the award. The appellant did not file any application to set aside the award within the time limited by Article 158. The High Court was closed for summer recess on the 28th April, 1951 and on the day of reopening the appellant filed Application No. 2355 of 1951 under section 5 of the Limitation Act for excusing the delay in filing the application to set aside the award. That application was dismissed by Krishnaswami Nayudu, J., on the ground that section 5 of the Limitation Act was inapplicable, and this appeal has been brought against that order of dismissal.

Section 5 of the Limitation Act runs as follows :

“Any appeal or application for a review of judgment or for leave to appeal or any other application to which this section may be applicable by or under any enactment for the time being in force may be admitted after the period of limitation prescribed therefor, when the appellant or applicant satisfied the Court that he had sufficient cause for not preferring the appeal or making the application within such period.”

As we are concerned in these proceedings with an application to set aside an award, the only question to be determined is whether there is any enactment which had made section 5 applicable to such proceedings.

Before the Arbitration Act of 1940 the law was well settled that the Court had no power under section 5 of the Limitation Act to extend the time prescribed by Article 158 for filing an application to set aside an award. That was held by Mookerjee and Holmwood, JJ., in *Surja Narain v. Burawari Jha*¹ and that view was followed by the Lahore High Court in *Devi Ditta v. Balu Ram*². The learned Advocate for the appellant does not dispute the correctness of the law as laid down in those decisions. What he contends is that the law has been changed by the Arbitration Act, and under section 37 (1) of the Act properly construed, section 5 of the Limitation Act would be applicable to an application to set aside an award. Section 37 (1) runs as follows :

“All the provisions of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, shall apply to arbitrations as they apply to proceedings in Court.”

The question is, what is the precise meaning of the word “Arbitration” in this section? The contention of the appellant is that arbitration proceedings mentioned in the section include not only proceedings before the arbitrators, but also applications taken out for filing the awards in Court or for setting them aside. He contends that they are also arbitration proceedings and that by virtue of section 37 (1) the provisions of the Limitation Act including section 5 will apply. He relied upon certain observations of the Privy Council occurring in *Ram Dutt Ram Kissen Dass v. E. D. Sassoon and Co.*³ as supporting this position. The facts in that case were these. There were certain arbitration proceedings which resulted in an award. But that award was set aside. Subsequently the applicant commenced fresh arbitration proceedings with reference to the same subject-matter. The opposite party pleaded that at the time of the new proceedings an action by the applicant would be barred and that therefore no relief should be granted to him in arbitration proceedings. The applicant pleaded that he was entitled to the benefit of section 14 of the Limitation Act and to deduction of the time taken in the prior arbitration proceedings. It was this question that came up for consideration before the Privy Council. Lord Salvesan held that the applicant was entitled to the benefit of section 14 of the Limitation Act. His Lordship observed that the Limitation Act was in its own terms inapplicable to proceedings before the arbitrators and that if the opposite party was entitled to rely on a plea of limitation based on the Limitation Act the applicant would likewise be entitled to rely on section 14 of that Act. Then occur the observations on which the advocate for the appellant relies :

"Arbitrations under the Indian Arbitration Act are not prosecuted by filing suits and preferring appeals from the decrees in such suits but by procuring awards and filing them in Court and resisting applications to set them aside."

It is contended on the strength of these observations that proceeding taken in Court for setting aside awards must also be considered to be arbitration proceedings. We are unable to agree that that was what was intended in those observations. The Privy Council was dealing with the question as to whether the provisions of the Limitation Act were applicable to proceedings before the arbitrator. They were not concerned with an application before the Court arising out of arbitration proceedings, and taken in their context the observations do not amount to a decision that an application to set aside an award must be taken to be an arbitration proceeding. The matter has to be decided on an interpretation of the language of section 37 (1). Whatever force there might have been in the contention of the appellant if section 37 (1) had stopped with the words "apply to the arbitrations," it is wholly untenable in view of the words that follow, namely, "as they apply to proceedings in Court". The section makes a sharp distinction between arbitrations and proceedings in Court. Whatever justification there might be for considering an application to set aside an award in a Court as an arbitration proceeding, there can be none for holding it to be not a proceeding in Court. In the context, therefore, the word 'arbitration' should be limited to proceedings before the arbitrators; and an application to set aside an award being a proceeding in Court, cannot be held to be an arbitration proceeding. Moreover section 37 (1) is intended to apply to proceedings in arbitration the provisions of the Limitation Act which would otherwise be inapplicable. But even apart from section 37 (1), Article 158 in terms applies to an application to set aside an award. On the construction of the section therefore we are of opinion that "Arbitration" referred to in section 37 (1) cannot include a proceeding taken in Court for setting aside the award.

That this is the correct conclusion will be clear if regard is had to the history of the legislation on the subject. Section 37 (1) is a reproduction of section 16 (1) of the English Arbitration Act of 1934. Before that Act the statutory law in England relating to arbitration contained no provision similar to section 16 (1). In the absence of such a provision the question was raised whether a party could plead limitation in proceedings before the arbitrators. In the decision in *In re Astley and the Tyldesley Coal and Salt Co.*¹, a Bench of the Divisional Court in England had held that it was open to the defendant to plead limitation in proceedings before the arbitrator. That the law laid down in that case was not accepted without question would be clear from the observations of the Court of appeal in the cases reported in *Cayzer Irvine and Company, Limited v. Board of Trade*² where Scrutton, L.J., in particular expressed doubts as to the correctness of the decision in *In re Astley and the Tyldesley Coal and Salt Co.*¹. When that case was taken in appeal to the House of Lords, Viscount Cave, L.C., observed that it was not necessary in that case to express an opinion as to whether in *In re Astley and the Tyldesley Coal and Salt Co.*¹ was correctly decided. It was only in 1929 that the Privy Council held in the case reported in *Ramduitt Ramkissen Dass v. E. D. Sassoon Co.*² that the law as laid down in *Cayzer Irving Company, Limited v. Board of Trade*³ was correct. As late as 1931 in Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. I, page 653, para. 1104 the law on the subject is stated in these terms :—

"In mercantile references it is an implied term of the contract that the arbitrator must decide the dispute according to the existing law of contract and every defence which would have been open in a Court of law can be legally raised for the arbitrator's decision unless the parties have agreed to exclude the defence."

and the statute of Limitations is mentioned as one of the laws in accordance with which the arbitrators should pronounce their decision. It was in this state of the law that the Arbitration Act of 1934 was enacted and section 16 (1) provided that the rules of limitation applicable to proceedings in Civil Court should also be applicable to proceedings before the arbitrators. It was this provision that has been enacted in section 37 (1) of the Indian Arbitration Act. The true scope of this provision is therefore that when proceedings are taken before the arbitrator the parties are entitled to plead limitation exactly as if the proceeding had been taken in a Civil Court. That being the scope of section 37 (1), its operation should be limited to proceedings before the arbitrator and not to proceedings taken in a Court, though they might arise out of arbitration proceedings. In this view we are of opinion that section 37 (1) does not have the effect of making section 5 of the Limitation Act applicable to an application to set aside the award.

We agree with Krishnaswami Nayudu, J., that there is no power in the Court to extend the time prescribed by Article 158 of the Limitation Act. This appeal is accordingly dismissed. The parties will bear their own costs in the appeal.

Preventive Detention Act (IV of 1950), section 11 and section 11-A (inserted by Act LXI of 1952)—Construction and scope—Amendment coming into force only on 30th September, 1952—Order on 22nd September, 1952, extending an existing order of detention up to 30th September to 31st December, 1952—Validity—General Clauses Act (X of 1887), section 22—Applicability—Substantive orders under new Act—If can be passed before the coming into force of such enactment.

The petitioner was served with an order of detention on the 20th October, 1951. The grounds of detention were furnished on the 1st November, 1951. His case was referred to the Advisory Board on the 13th December, 1951. The appropriate Government confirmed the detention on the 21st January, 1952. It specified 31st March, 1952, as the date up to which the detention was to continue. On the 29th March, 1952, the petitioner's detention was extended till the 30th September, 1952, and on 22nd September, 1952, his detention was again extended till 31st December, 1952. It was contended on behalf of the petitioner that on the 22nd September, the State Government had no jurisdiction to make an order of extension so as to continue the detention beyond the 1st October, 1952, viz., beyond the life of the Act then in force and that the order extending the period of detention up to 31st December, 1952, was illegal. On behalf of the State Government the order made on the 22nd September, 1952, was sought to be justified on the ground that it had power to enlarge the period of detention under the provisions of the Preventive Detention (Second Amendment) Act, 1952 (LXI of 1952) and that it could exercise that power after that Act had been passed by the parliament even though the amended Act had not yet come into force.

Held, the order in question extending the period of detention was illegal. Section 22 of the General Clauses Act is an enabling provision its intent and purpose being to facilitate the making of rules, bye-laws and orders before the date of commencement of an enactment in anticipation of its coming into force. It does not authorise or empower the State Government to pass substantive orders against any person in exercise of the authority conferred by any particular section of the new Act. Orders can only be issued with respect to the time when or the manner in which anything is to be done under the Act. An order for the extension of detention made under the purported exercise of the powers conferred by any of the provisions of the new Act is not an order with respect to the time when or the manner in which anything is to be done under the Act. Such an order could only be made under the Act and after the Act had come into force and not in anticipation of its coming into force. The Act having no retrospective operation, it cannot validate an order made before it came into force.

Held further, when sub-section (2) of the new section 11-A of the Preventive Detention Act refers to specification of a period in the order, it intends to refer to the detention order as confirmed under section 11 (1) and not the initial order of detention. As the existing order of detention was specified to continue up to 30th September, 1952, their detention cannot continue after that date by force of the provisions of sub-section (2) of section 11-A merely because that date by accident or coincidence happens to be identical with the date on which the first amendment Act (1952) was to expire.

The word "shorter" in section 11-A (2) has reference to the 1st April, 1952, or the date of expiry of the period of twelve months mentioned in the section and cannot mean a date antecedent to 30th September, 1952.

Mahajan, J.—This petition and four others, viz., Nos. 350, 356, 362 and 366 of 1952, raise a question regarding the construction of section 11-A, inserted in Act IV of 1950 by the Preventive Detention (Second Amendment) Act (LXI of 1952).

Act IV of 1950, as it originally stood, was to expire on 1st April, 1951, but in that year an amending Act was passed which, among other things, prolonged its life till the 1st April, 1952. A fresh Act was passed in 1952 (Act XXXIV of 1952) called the Preventive Detention (Amendment) Act, 1952. The effect of this Act was to prolong the life of the Act of 1950 for further six months, viz., till the 1st October, 1952. On the 22nd August, 1952, an act further to amend the Preventive Detention Act, 1950, called the Preventive Detention (Second Amendment) Act LXI of 1952, received the assent of the President, by which the life of the Act was extended till the 31st December, 1954. It was to come into force on a date appointed by the Central Government. By a notification, dated 15th September, 1952, the Central Government appointed the 30th September, 1952, as the date when the new Act was to come into force.

The petitioner was served with an order of detention on the 20th October, 1951. The grounds of detention were furnished to him on the 1st November, 1951. His case was referred to the Advisory Board on the 24th November, 1951. The Advisory Board submitted its report on the 13th December, 1951. The appropriate Government confirmed the detention on the 21st January, 1952. It specified 31st March, 1952, as the date up to which the detention was to continue. On the 29th March, 1952, the petitioner's detention was extended till the 30th September, 1952 and on the 22nd September, 1952, his detention was again extended till 31st December, 1952. In the other petitions also the last order of extension was made on 22nd September, 1952, extending the detentions till 31st December, 1952. But for this extension the detentions could not continue beyond 30th September, 1952, except by use of the powers under the new Act.

It was contended on behalf of the detenus that on the 22nd September, 1952, the State Government had no jurisdiction to make an order of extension so as to continue the detention beyond the 1st October, 1952, viz., beyond the life of the Act then in force and that the order extending the period of detention upto 31st December, 1952, was illegal. In our opinion, this contention is well founded. On behalf of the State Government the order made on the 22nd September, 1952, was sought to be justified on the ground that it had power to enlarge the period of detention under the provisions of the Preventive Detention (Second Amendment) Act of 1952 and it could exercise those powers after that Act had been passed by the Parliament even though the amended Act had not yet come into force. Reliance for this proposition was placed on the provisions of section 22 of the General Clauses Act (X of 1897). Section 22 provides as follows :

“Where, by any Central Act or Regulation which is not to come into force immediately on the passing thereof, a power is conferred to make rules or bye-laws, or to issue orders with respect to the application of the Act or Regulation . . . , or with respect to the time when, or the place where or the manner in which . . . anything is to be done under the Act or Regulation, then that power may be exercised at any time after the passing of the Act or Regulation ; but rules, bye-laws or orders so made or issued shall not take effect till the commencement of the Act or Regulation.”

This section corresponds to section 37 of the English Interpretation Act of 1899. It is an enabling provision, its intent and purpose being to facilitate the making of rules, bye-laws and orders before the date of the commencement of an enactment in anticipation of its coming into force. In other words, it validates rules, bye-laws and orders made before the enactment comes into force provided they are made after the passing of the Act and as preparatory to the Act coming into force. It does not authorize or empower the State Government to pass substantive orders against any person in exercise of the authority conferred by any particular section of the new Act. The words of the section “with respect to” prescribe the limit and the scope of the power given by the section. Orders can only be issued with respect to the time when or the manner in which anything is to be done under the Act. An order for the extension of detention made under the purported exercise of the powers conferred by any of the provisions of the new Act is not an order with respect to the time when or the manner in which anything is to be done under the Act. Such an order could only be made under the Act and after the Act had come into force and not in anticipation of its coming into force. The Act having no retrospective operation, it cannot validate an order made before it came into force. It seems to us that the expression “order” in the section means an order laying down directions about the manner in which things are to be done under the Act and it is an order of that nature that can be issued before the Act comes into force but it does not mean that a substantive order against a particular person can be made before the Act comes into force. In our opinion, therefore, the contention raised on behalf of the State Government has no force and the order extending the detention of the detenus on the 22nd September, 1952, upto the 31st December, 1952, is illegal.

The learned Solicitor-General on behalf of the Union Government intervened and contended that the detention of the petitioner as well as of others concerned in the connected petitions was legal because in the initial order of detention made in all these cases no period of detention had been specified and by force of section 11-A (2), the detention of the petitioners stood automatically extended till 1st April, 1953.

Section 10 of the new Act [Preventive Detention (Second Amendment) Act, 1952] adds the new Section 11-A, which is in these terms :

“(1) The maximum period for which any person may be detained in pursuance of any detention order which has been confirmed under section 11 shall be twelve months from the date of detention.

(2) Notwithstanding anything contained in sub-section (1), every detention order which has been confirmed under section 11 before the commencement of the Preventive Detention (Second Amendment) Act, 1952, shall, unless a shorter period is specified in the order, continue to remain in force until the 1st day of April, 1953, or until the expiration of twelve months from the date of detention, whichever period of detention expires later.

(3) The provisions of sub-section (2) shall have effect notwithstanding anything to the contrary contained in section 3 of the Preventive Detention (Amendment) Act, 1952 (XXXIV of 1952), but nothing contained in this section shall affect the power of the appropriate Government to revoke or modify the detention order at any earlier time."

It was suggested that on a grammatical construction of this section the word "order" in sub-section (2) means the initial order of detention and cannot refer to the order of confirmation as no such order is contemplated by the Act. In our opinion, this contention is not sound. It was held by this Court in *Petition No. 308 of 1951, Makkan Singh Tarsikka v. The State of Punjab*¹, that the fixing of the period of detention in an initial order of detention is contrary to the scheme of the Act and cannot be supported as it tends to prejudice a fair consideration of the petitioner's case when it is placed before the Advisory Board. That decision was pronounced on the 10th December, 1951 and according to well-known canons of construction of statutes and principles of legislation it has to be presumed that when Parliament enacted section 11-A in Act LXI of 1952 it was aware of the decision of this Court that no period could be specified in the initial order of detention. It follows that when Parliament in sub-section (2) provided that till a certain date, it plainly intended by the words "the order" to refer, not to the initial order of detention, for no period of detention could legally be specified in that order, but to the order of detention as eventually confirmed under section 11 (1). We are not on any debatable ground when we say that at that stage it is open to an appropriate Government to specify the period of detention in the case of every detenu. We are satisfied that when sub-section (2) refers to specification of a period in the order, it intends to refer to the detention order as confirmed under section 11 (1) and not the initial order of detention.

It was next contended that the period specified in the order in question being coterminous with the date fixed for the life of the Act, the specification of the period was wholly unnecessary and therefore the order of detention could continue till the 1st April, 1953, by force of sub-section (2) of section 11-A in the new Act, as if no period had in fact been specified in the order. This argument cannot be sustained on the language employed in section 11-A (2). The phraseology employed in the section is in sharp distinction to the language employed in section 3 of Act XXXIV of 1952 and if the object was to convey the same intention, then Parliament would have used similar language in section 11-A (2) as in section 3 of Act XXXIV of 1952. That section runs thus :—

"Every detention order confirmed under section 11 of the principal Act and in force immediately before the commencement of this Act shall have effect as if it had been confirmed under the provisions of the principal Act as amended by this Act; and accordingly, where the period of detention is either not specified in such detention order or specified (by whatever form of words) to be for the duration or until the expiry of the principal Act or until the 31st day of March, 1952, such detention order shall continue to remain in force for so long as the principal Act is in force"

The Parliament, when it intended to say that if the date specified in an order is coterminous with the life of the Act the detention will continue for a further period automatically, said so in clear and unambiguous language and by use of apt words. It knew that there may be cases in which the date specified for the determination of the detention may be coterminous with the date on which the Act is to expire, and it made a clear provision in section 3 to cover all such cases. In section 11-A (2), however, it simply said that if a shorter period is specified in the order, then the detenu would be entitled to his release on that date. In the order passed against the petitioner and also in the orders passed in the connected petitions, 30th September, 1952, was the date specified up to which detention could continue and that being so, their present detention cannot continue after that date by force of the provisions of sub-section (2) of section 11-A merely because that date by accident or coincidence happens to be identical with the date on which the first amendment Act was to expire.

Then it was contended that even if the date up to which detention was to continue was specified in the order, it does not fix a period shorter than 30th September, 1952 (the date on which Act XXXIV of 1952 was to expire), and the detenus are not entitled to the benefit of the provisions of sub-section (2) of section 11-A. This contention is difficult to sustain grammatically. The words "unless a shorter period is specified in the order" clearly have reference to the periods mentioned immediately thereafter, namely, the first April, 1953 or the date of expiry of twelve months from the date of detention. They have no reference at all to the date of expiry of Act XXXIV of 1952. When the attention of the learned Solicitor-General was drawn to the plain reading of the section and the grammar of it, he conceded that the adjective "shorter" there had reference to the 1st April, 1953 or the date of expiry of the period of twelve months mentioned in the section and could not mean a date antecedent to 30th September, 1952.

For the reasons given above, in our Judgment, the detention of the petitioner in this petition and of those in the other petitions mentioned above, after the 30th September, 1952, became illegal and we therefore direct that the petitioners in this petition and in petitions Nos. 350, 356, 362 and 366 of 1952 be released forthwith. They are in detention by reason of the extension order made on the 22nd September extending their detention up to 31st December, 1952. On that date the State Government has no jurisdiction to make that order under the law in force as it stood on that date. 30th September, 1952 had been specified as the date up to which their detention was to last by a subsisting and perfectly valid order and their detention beyond that date is illegal and cannot be justified on the provisions of section 11-A (2) or on the provisions of section 11 (1) of the original Act.

Industrial Disputes Act (XIV of 1947), section 3—Industrial Tribunal constituted under—If "Court" within the meaning of Uttar Pradesh General Clauses Act (I of 1904), section 10—Time for giving decision expiring on a holiday—Decision pronounced on next working day—Within time and valid.

An Industrial Tribunal constituted under section 3 of the Industrial Disputes Act, 1947, is a "Court" within the meaning of section 10 of the U. P. General Clauses Act. Where the time within which the decision of the tribunal was to be made, according to the Order promulgated by the State Government and subsequently extended expired on a holiday when the Industrial Court was closed, the decision can be pronounced on the next day on which it was open. Such a decision is well within time valid and binding on the parties.

Appeal from the award dated the 17th November, 1951, made by the Labour Appellate Tribunal of India, Calcutta, in Appeal No. Cal. 280 of 1951.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Bhagwati, J.—This is an appeal by special leave against the decision of the Labour Appellate Tribunal, Calcutta, upholding the award made by the State Industrial Tribunal, Uttar Pradesh, with certain modifications.

An industrial dispute arose between the Appellant the Vishwamitra Press Karyalaya, Kanpur and the Respondents, the workers of the Vishwamitra Press as represented by the Kanpur Samachar Patra Karamchari Union, Kanpur, in regard to the alleged victimisation of certain workmen under the guise of retrenchment. That industrial dispute was referred to the Industrial Tribunal, by a notification, dated the 24th April, 1951. The time for making the award expired on the 9th June, 1951 and on the 9th June, 1951, a further notification was issued extending the time for making the award upto the 30th June, 1951. The 30th June, 1951, was a public holiday and the 1st July was a Sunday. The Industrial Tribunal made its award on the 2nd July, 1951 and pronounced it in open Court on that day. It was, however, thought by the Uttar Pradesh Government that the award was beyond time and invalid and on the 18th July, 1951, a notification was issued extending the period upto the 3rd July, 1951. This award was challenged by the appellant before the Labour Appellate Tribunal. The Labour Appellate Tribunal negatived the contentions of the appellant. The appellant applied for special leave which was granted by this Court on the 21st December, 1951, limited to the following grounds :

"(1) The Government had no power to extend the time of the making of award after the expiry of the time originally fixed, and the award made by the Adjudicator after such time is illegal, ultra vires, inoperative and void.

(2) In any case the State Government had extended the time for making the award till 30th June, 1951, and the Adjudicator's award made after that date is void.

(3) That the extension of time by the Government on 21st July, 1951, after even the time extended previously had expired, was ultra vires, and it could not make a void award as a valid award."

The industrial dispute which arose between the appellant and the respondents was referred by the Uttar Pradesh Government to the Industrial Tribunal in exercise of the powers conferred by sections 3 and 4 of the Uttar Pradesh Industrial Disputes Act, 1947. The Uttar Pradesh Government had in exercise of the powers conferred by section 3 (d) of the Act promulgated an order inter alia providing for the adjudication of the industrial disputes referred by it to the Industrial Tribunals. Paragraph 16 of that order ran as under :

"The Tribunal or the Adjudicator shall hear the dispute and pronounce its decision within 40 days (excluding holidays observed by Courts subordinate to the High Court) from the date of reference made to it by the State Government, and shall thereafter as soon as possible supply a copy of the same to the parties to the dispute, and to such other persons or bodies as the State Government may in writing direct.

Provided that the State Government may extend the said period from time to time."

Paragraph 9 which prescribed the powers and functions of Tribunals inter alia provided :—

"(9) The decision shall be in writing, and shall be pronounced in open Court and dated and signed by the member or members of the Tribunal, as the case may be, at the time of pronouncing it."

It was not disputed before us that the original period calculated in accordance with paragraph 16 above expired on the 9th June, 1951 and the Uttar Pradesh Government validly extended the period upto the 30th June, 1951. It was, however, contended that the Industrial Tribunal should have made its award on the 30th June, 1951 and not on the 2nd July, 1951, as it purported to do. It was urged that the provision as to excluding holidays observed by Courts subordinate to the High Court which obtained in paragraph 16 above did not apply when the period was extended upto a particular date. It would apply only if the period was extended by a particular number of days when for the purpose of the computation of those days the holidays would have to be excluded in the manner therein mentioned. The Uttar Pradesh Government having extended the period upto the 30th June, 1951, it was submitted that the award should have been made by the 30th June, 1951 and not later and having been made on the 2nd July, 1951, was therefore beyond time and invalid.

This argument might well have prevailed but for the provisions of section 10 of the U.P. General Clauses Act, 1904. That section provides :—

“Where, by any United Provinces Act, any act or proceeding is directed or allowed to be done or taken in any Court or office on a certain day or within a prescribed period, then, if the Court or office is closed on that day or the last day of the prescribed period, the Act or proceeding shall be considered as done or taken on the next day afterwards on which the Court or office is open.”

The Industrial Court was closed on the 30th June, 1951, which was declared a public holiday. The 1st July, 1951, was a Sunday and it was competent to the Industrial Court to pronounce its decision on the next day afterwards on which the Industrial Court was open, i.e., the 2nd July, 1951. Prima facie therefore the award which was pronounced on the 2nd July, 1951, was well within time.

The only thing which Shri Khaitan, counsel for the appellant, urged before us therefore was that the Industrial Court was not a Court within the meaning of section 10 of the Uttar Pradesh General Clauses Act. The Court according to his submission could only be construed to mean a Court in the hierarchy of the civil Courts of the State and an Industrial Court did not fall within that category. We are unable to accept this contention of Shri Khaitan. The Uttar Pradesh Industrial Disputes Act, 1947, was an Uttar Pradesh Act. The general order, dated the 15th March, 1951, which provided inter alia for the reference of the industrial dispute for adjudication and the manner in which it was to be adjudicated, was promulgated by the Uttar Pradesh Government in exercise of the powers conferred upon it by section 3 (d) of the Act. Paragraph 9 (g) of the general order provided for the decision being pronounced by the Industrial Tribunal in open Court and we fail to understand how it could ever be urged that the Industrial Tribunal was not a Court within the meaning of section 10 of the U. P. General Clauses Act. If the Industrial Tribunal was thus a Court within the meaning of section 10 of the U. P. General Clauses Act the Court was closed on the 30th June, 1951, as also on the 1st July, 1951, and the decision could be pronounced by the Industrial Court on the next day afterwards on which it was open, i.e., on the 2nd July, 1951. In our opinion therefore the decision which was pronounced on the 2nd July, 1951, was well within time and was valid and binding on the parties.

The above decision is determinative of this appeal, and the appeal will therefore stand dismissed with costs.

Factories Act (XXV of 1934), section 49-B (1)—Workers going on illegal lightning strike for two to four hours in a textile factory (a public utility industry)—If breaks continuity of service so as to deprive them of annual holidays with pay—Industrial Disputes Act (XIV of 1947), section 2 (q)—“Strike”—Essentials.

Constitution of India (1950), Article 136—Substantial question of law—Test.

Where it is found on the evidence and the circumstances that there was concert and combination of the workers in stopping and refusing to resume work on a particular day without giving notice to the management in a textile factory which was a public utility industry such stopping will amount to a “strike” within the meaning of section 2 (q) of the Industrial Disputes Act. The failure to give notice of stopping work to the management makes the strike illegal. Such interruption of work though for only two to four hours, breaks the continuity of service when the strike is illegal and deprives the workers of their right to annual holidays with pay.

Although the Mills in question were exempted from the provisions of Chapter IV-A of the Factories Act, the leave rules being similar to those provisions a construction of such rules involves a substantial question of law to sustain an appeal under Article 136 of the Constitution of India.

On appeal by special leave granted by the Supreme Court from the Judgment dated the 27th June, 1951, of the Labour Appellate Tribunal of India at Calcutta in Appeals Nos. 94 and 142 of 1950 arising out of the award of the Second Industrial Tribunal, Madras and published in the Fort St. George Gazette, Madras, dated the 3rd October, 1950.

N. C. Chatterjee, Senior Advocate (S. N. Mukherjee, Advocate, with him) for Appellant.

S. C. C. Anthoni Pillai, President, Madras Labour Union, for Respondents.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Mahajan, J.—This is an appeal by special leave from a decision dated 27th June, 1951, of the Labour Appellate Tribunal of India at Calcutta in Appeals Nos. 94 and 138 of 1950, arising out of the award of the Second Industrial Tribunal, Madras.

The relevant facts and circumstances giving rise to the appeal are as follows : On 1st November, 1948, 859 night shift operatives of the carding and spinning department of the Carnatic Mills stopped work, some at 4 P.M., some at 4-30 P.M., and some at 5 P.M. The stoppage ended at 8 P.M. in both the departments. By 10 P.M. the strike ended completely. The apparent cause for the strike was that the management of the Mills had expressed its inability to comply with the request of the workers to declare the forenoon of the 1st November, 1948, as a holiday for solar eclipse. On the 3rd November, 1948, the management put up a notice that the stoppage of work on the 1st November, amounted to an illegal strike and a break in service within the meaning of the Factories Act (XXV of 1934) and that the management had decided that the workers who had participated in the said strike would not be entitled to holidays with pay as provided by the Act. This position was not accepted by the Madras Labour Union. The Madras Government by an Order dated the 11th July, 1949, made under section 10 (1) (c) of the Industrial Disputes Act (XIV of 1947), referred this dispute along with certain other disputes to the Industrial Tribunal, Madras. The adjudicator gave the award which was published in the Gazette on 12th October, 1950. By his award the adjudicator found that there could be little doubt that the stoppage of work by the night shift workers on the night of the 1st November, 1948, was a strike, that it was an illegal strike since the textile industry is notified as a public utility industry and there could be no legal strike without a proper issue of a notice in the terms prescribed by the Industrial Disputes Act. No such notice had been given. In view of this finding he upheld the view of the management that the continuity of service of the workers was broken by the interruption caused by the illegal strike and that as a consequence the workers who participated in such strike were not entitled to annual holidays with pay under section 49-B (1) of the Factories Act. He, however, considered that the total deprivation of leave with pay ordered by the management was a severe punishment and on the assumption that he had power to scrutinize the exercise of the discretion by the management in awarding punishment, reduced the punishment by 50 per cent. and held that the workers would be deprived of only half their holidays with pay. The decision of the management was varied to this extent.

The Mills as well as the Union appealed against this decision to the Labour Appellate Tribunal. That Tribunal upheld the contention of the Mills that the adjudicator had no power to interfere with and revise the discretion of the management exercised by it under section 49-B (1). It also upheld the contention of the Union that what happened on the night of the 1st November, did not amount to a strike and did not cause any interruption in the workers' service. This is what the Tribunal said :—

“It would be absurd to hold that non-permitted absence from work even for half an hour or less in the course of a working day would be regarded as interruption of service of a workman for the purpose of the said section. We are inclined to hold that the stoppage of work for the period for about 2 to 4 hours in the circumstances of the case is not to be regarded as a strike so as to amount to a break in the continuity of service of the workman concerned."

In the result the appeal of the Union on this point was allowed and it was ordered that holidays at full rates as provided for in section 49-A of the Factories Act will have to be calculated in respect of the operatives concerned on the footing that there was no break in the continuity of their service by the stoppage of work on 1st November, 1948.

In this appeal it was contended on behalf of the Mills that on a proper construction of section 49-B (1) of the Factories Act (XXV of 1934) the management was right in its decision that the continuity of service was broken by the interruption caused by the illegal strike and that the workers were not entitled to annual holidays with pay under the said section inasmuch as they would not have completed a period of twelve months' continuous service in the factory, and that the non-permitted absence as a result of concerted refusal to work even for two to four hours in the course of a working day amounts to an illegal strike and consequently an interruption of service of a workman for the purpose of section 49-B.

In our judgment, this contention is well founded. Section 49-B provides—

"Every worker who has completed a period of twelve months continuous service in a factory shall be allowed, during the subsequent period of twelve months, holidays for a period of ten, or, if a child, fourteen consecutive days, inclusive of the day or days, if any, on which he is entitled to a holiday under sub-section (1) of section 35"

Explanation.—"A worker shall be deemed to have completed a period of twelve months continuous service in a factory notwithstanding any interruption in service during those twelve months brought about by sickness, accident or authorized leave not exceeding ninety days in the aggregate for all three or by a lockout, or by a strike which is not an illegal strike, or by intermittent periods of involuntary unemployment not exceeding thirty days"

It is clear that the benefit of this section is not available in cases where the interruption in service is brought about by an illegal strike. Section 2 (g) of the Industrial Disputes Act (Act XIV of 1947), defines "strike" as meaning—

"a cessation of work by a body of persons employed in any industry acting in combination, or a concerted refusal, or a refusal under a common understanding, of any number of persons who are or have been so employed to continue to work or to accept employment."

The adjudicator found on the evidence and circumstances of the case that there was concert and combination of the workers in stopping and refusing to resume work on the night of the 1st November. He observed that the fact that a very large number of leave applications was put in for various reasons pointed to the concerted action and that the application given by the workers and their representatives also indicated that they were acting in combination both in striking and refusing to go back to work on the ground that they were entitled to leave for the night shift whenever a half a day's leave was granted to the day shift workers. He further held that the refusal of the workers to resume work in spite of the attempts made by the officers and their own Madras Labour Union representatives indicated that they were not as a body prepared to resume work unless their demand was conceded.

In our opinion, the conclusion reached by the adjudicator was clearly right and the conclusion cannot be avoided that the workers were acting in concert. That being so, the action of the workers on the night of the 1st November, clearly fell within the definition of the expression "strike" in section 2 (g) of the Industrial Disputes Act. We have not been able to appreciate the view expressed by the Appellate Tribunal that stoppage of work for a period of two to four hours and such non-permitted absence from work cannot be regarded as strike. Before the adjudicator the only point raised by the Union was that it was a spontaneous and lightning strike but it was not said by them that stoppage of work did not fall within the definition of "strike" as given in the Act. It cannot be disputed that there was a cessation of work by a body of persons employed in the Mills and that they were acting in combination and their refusal to go back to work was concerted. All the necessary ingredients, therefore, of the definition exist in the present case and the stoppage of work on 1st November, 1948, amounted to a strike. It was not a case of an individual worker's failure to turn up for work. It was a concerted action on the part of a large number of workers. The Appellate Tribunal was thus in error in not regarding it as a strike and it had no discretion not to regard what in law was a strike as not amounting to a strike. If it cannot be denied that the stoppage of work on 1st November, 1948, amounted to a strike, then it was certainly an illegal strike because no notice had been given to the management, the Mills being a public utility industry.

It was contended by the President of the Union, who argued the case on behalf of the workers, that the Factories Act had no application to this case because by a notification of the Government of Madras dated 23rd August, 1946, the Buckingham and Carnatic Mills had been exempted from the provisions of Chapter IV-A of the Act and the provisions of section 49-A and B were not therefore attracted to it and that no substantial question of law in respect to the construction of the section fell to be decided by this Court and that being so, this Court should not entertain this appeal under Article 136 of the Constitution. This contention has no validity. The Mills were granted exemption from the provisions of Chapter IV-A of the Factories Act because their leave rules were in accordance with the provisions of Chapter IV-A of the Factories Act. These rules being in similar terms, the decision of the matter depends on the construction of the rules and this involves a substantial question of law.

Reliance was next placed on section 49-A of the Factories Act which provides that the provisions of the new Act would not operate to the prejudice of any rights which the workers were entitled to under the earlier rules and it was argued that under the leave rules of the Mills which prevailed prior to the coming into force of the Factories Act, the workers were entitled to privilege leave and there was no provision in those rules similar to the one that has been made in section 49-B or in the new rules and that the Mills had no right to deprive them of leave by reason of the strike. This contention cannot be sustained because section 49-A (2) of the Factories Act has no application to the case of the Carnatic Mills in view of the notification dated 23rd August, 1946.

Lastly, it was urged that the stoppage of work on 1st November, 1948, was not a concerted action on the part of the workers and that several workers in their own individual capacity wanted leave on that date. In our opinion, in view of the facts and circumstances detailed in the adjudicator's award this contention cannot be seriously considered. We concur in the view of the facts taken by the adjudicator that the action of the 859 workers on the night of 1st May, 1948, fell within the definition of the word "strike" as given in section 2 (g) of the Industrial Disputes Act and it was an illegal strike and the workers thus lost the benefit of holidays that they would have otherwise got under the rules.

The learned counsel for the appellant undertook on behalf of the management ex gratia that it would condone the default of the workers on 1st November, 1948, and the cessation of work on that night would not be treated as depriving them of the holidays under the rules and we appreciate the spirit in which this undertaking was given and hope that the workers would also take it in that spirit. The result is that the appeal is allowed, and the decision of the Labour Appellate Tribunal on this point is set aside. In the circumstances of this case we make no order as to costs.

P. R. Mukherjee, Chairman, Industrial Tribunal and others .. Respondents.

Industrial Disputes Act (XIV of 1947)—Question as to dismissal of a Head Clerk and a Sanitary Inspector of a Municipality (who were members of the Municipal Workers' Union) taken up by the Union at whose instance the dispute was referred to an Industrial Tribunal—If "Industrial dispute"—Award of Tribunal—Validity—Interference on application under Articles 226 and 227, Constitution of India (1950)—When proper—Conflict of Act XIV of 1947 with Bengal Municipal Act (XV of 1932), sections 66 and 67—Effect.

A Head Clerk and a Sanitary Inspector of a Municipality were also members of the Municipal Workers' Union. On receipt of complaints against them for negligence, insubordination and indiscipline, the Chairman suspended them, drew up separate proceedings and called for explanations within a specified date. After the explanations were received they were considered at a meeting of the Commissioners and by a majority the Commissioners confirmed the order of suspension and directed the dismissal of the two employees. At the instance of the Municipal Workers' Union who questioned the propriety of the dismissal, the matter was referred by the State of West Bengal to the Industrial Tribunal for Adjudication under the Industrial Disputes Act. The Tribunal made its award that the suspension and punishment of the two employees were cases of victimisation and it directed their reinstatement in their respective offices. The Municipality took the matter to the High Court at Calcutta by means of a writ of certiorari under Articles 226 and 227 of the Constitution and having failed to get the award cancelled went on appeal to the Supreme Court under Article 132 (1).

Held : (i) The power to reinstate dismissed employees held in Western India Automobile Association v. Industrial Tribunal, Bombay, (1949) F.C.R. 321 : (1949) F.L.J. 154 (F.C.), to be within the competence of a Tribunal under the Act, will trench no doubt on the power to appoint and dismiss conferred on the Chairman and Commissioners of Municipalities under sections 66 and 67 of Bengal Municipal Act. But this invasion of the Provincial field of legislation does not however render the Industrial Disputes Act of the Central Legislature invalid as one has to pay regard primarily to the pith and substance of the challenged Act in considering the question of conflict between the two jurisdictions. Industrial and labour disputes are within the competence of the central Legislature, and the impugned Act deals with this subject and not with local Government. Profulla Kumar Mukherjee v. Bank of Commerce, Khulna, (1947) F.L.J. 34 : L.R. 74 I.A. 23 : (1947) 2 M.L.J. 6 (F.C.), followed.

(ii) Whether on the facts of a particular case the dismissal of an employee was wrongful or justified is a question primarily for the Tribunal to decide. Where the Tribunal has held (as in the instant case) that the dismissals were clear cases of victimisation and hence wrongful, unless there was any grave miscarriage of justice or flagrant violation of law calling for intervention, it is not for the High Court under Articles 226 and 227 of the Constitution to interfere.

(iii) The dismissal of the two employees was taken up by their Workers' Union who challenged it as grossly improper. Thus there was a dispute between the employer, viz., the Municipality on the one side and the workmen represented by the Union on the other.

(iv) Having regard to the definitions found in the Industrial Disputes Act, the aim or objective that the Legislature had in view, and the nature, variety and range of disputes that occur between employers and employees it must be held that the definitions in the Act includes also disputes that might arise between Municipalities and their employees in branches of work that can be said to be analogous to the carrying out of a trade or business.

Quære :—Whether disputes arising in relation to purely administrative work fall within their ambit? After all whether there is an Industrial Dispute at all is for the Government primarily to find out, for it is only then that it has jurisdiction to refer. Moreover it is not every case of an industrial dispute that the Government is bound to refer. They may refer some but may not also. It is a question of expediency.

(v) The dispute in the instant case was an "industrial dispute" within the meaning of the Act.

Appeal under Article 132 (1) of the Constitution of India from the Judgment and Order dated the 1st June, 1950, of the High Court of Judicature at Calcutta (Harries, C.J. and Banerjee, J.) in Civil Rule No. 563 of 1950 and Original Side Matter No. 25 of 1950.

Panchanan Ghose, Senior Advocate (A. K. Dutt and R. L. Jafardar, Advocates, with him), for Appellant.

B. Sen, Advocate, for Respondents Nos. 1 and 2 and S. N. Mukherjee, Advocate, for Respondent No. 3.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Chandrasekhara Aiyar, J.—Pratul Chandra Mitra was the Head Clerk, and Phanindra Nath Ghose, the Sanitary Inspector of the Budge Budge Municipality, and they were also members of the Municipal Workers' Union. On receipt of complaints against them for negligence, insubordination and indiscipline, the Chairman of the Municipality suspended them on 13th July, 1949, drew up separate proceedings, and called for an explanation within a specified date. After the explanations were received, they were considered at a meeting of the Commissioners held on 6th July, 1949, and by a majority, the Commissioners confirmed the order of suspension and directed the dismissal of the two employees. At the instance of the Municipal Workers' Union who questioned the propriety of the dismissal, the matter was referred by the State of West Bengal on 24th September, 1949, to the Industrial Tribunal for adjudication under the Industrial Disputes Act. The Tribunal made its award on 13th February, 1950, that the suspension and punishment of the two employees were cases of victimisation, and it directed their reinstatement in their respective offices.

The Municipality took the matter to the High Court at Calcutta by means of a petition for a writ of certiorari under Articles 226 and 227 of the Constitution. There were prayers in the petition for quashing the proceedings before the Tribunal, for cancellation of the award, and for an order restraining the authorities from giving effect to the award and from taking any steps in pursuance thereof. At the instance of the High Court, a separate application was filed under Article 227. Both the petitions were heard by Harries, C.J. and Sambhu Nath Banerjee, J.

The points raised before them on behalf of the petitioners were five in all : (a) that there was no industrial dispute, and therefore there could be no reference under the Industrial Disputes Act to any Tribunal ; (b) that the said Act was not applicable to disputes with Municipalities ; (c) that even if it did, it was ultra vires ; (d) that the Tribunal should not have directed reinstatement of the dismissed employees ; and (e) that the award was bad on the merits. These contentions were negatived by the learned Judges, and the petitions were dismissed. But leave was granted under Article 132 (1) of the Constitution, and that is how the matter has now come up before us.

It is not necessary to dwell at any length on points (c), (d) and (e). If the Industrial Disputes Act applies to Municipalities and their employees, the power to reinstate dismissed employees, held in *Western India Automobile Association v. Industrial Tribunal, Bombay and others*¹ to be within the competence of a Tribunal under the Act, will trench no doubt on the power to appoint and dismiss conferred on the Chairman and Commissioners of Municipalities under sections 66 and 67 of the Bengal Municipal Act. This invasion of the provincial field of legislation does not however render the Industrial Disputes Act of the Central Legislature invalid, as we have to pay regard primarily to the pith and substance of the challenged Act in considering the question of conflict between the two jurisdictions. Industrial and labour disputes are within the competence of the Central Legislature, and the impugned Act deals with this subject and not with local Government. The point is covered by *Profulla Kumar Mookerjee v. Bank of Commerce, Ltd., Khulna*².

Whether on the facts of a particular case the dismissal of an employee was wrongful or justified is a question primarily for the Tribunal to decide, and here the Tribunal held that the dismissals were clear cases of victimisation and hence wrongful. Unless there was any grave miscarriage of justice or flagrant violation of law calling for intervention, it is not for the High Court under Articles 226 and 227 of the Constitution to interfere.

1. (1949) F.C.R. 321 : 1949 F.L.J. 154 (F.C.). 74 I.A. 23 (P.C.).
2. (1947) F.L.J. 34 : (1947) 2 M.L.J. 6 : L.R.

Points (a) and (b) are interlaced. The dismissal of the two employees was taken up by the Municipal Workers' Union who challenged it as grossly improper. Thus it is clear that there was a dispute between the employer, viz., the Municipality on the one side and the workmen represented by the Union on the other. But what is urged by the Municipality is that it was not an "industrial dispute" within the meaning of the Act, and hence there was no jurisdiction in the Government to refer the dispute to a Tribunal. It is contended on their behalf that the Municipality in discharging its normal duties connected with local self-government is not engaged in any industry as defined in the Act. It is this question that we have to consider, and for this purpose it becomes necessary to examine rather closely some of the provisions in the Act to ascertain their true scope and meaning.

"Industry" and "Industrial dispute" are defined in the Act in section 2, clauses (j) and (k) as follows:

"(j) 'industry' means any business, trade, undertaking, manufacture or calling of employers and includes any calling, service, employment, handicraft, or industrial occupation or avocation of workmen;

"(k) 'industrial dispute' means any dispute or difference between employers and employees, or between employers and workmen, or between workmen and workmen, which is connected with the employment or non-employment or the terms of employment or with the conditions of labour, of any person."

As clause (k) refers to workmen, we must also look at the definition of "workman" in clause (s) which is in these terms:

"'workman' means any person employed (including an apprentice) in any industry to do any skilled or unskilled manual or clerical work for hire or reward and includes, for the purposes of any proceedings under this Act in relation to an industrial dispute, a workman discharged during that dispute, but does not include any person employed in the naval, military or air service of the Government."

Corresponding definitions of "trade dispute" and "workman" are found in section 8 of the Industrial Courts Act, 1919 (9 and 10, George 5), and they run in these terms:

"The expression 'trade dispute' means any dispute or difference between employers and workmen, or between workmen and workmen connected with the employment or non-employment, or the terms of the employment or with the conditions of labour of any person:

The expression 'workman' means any person who has entered into or works under a contract with an employer whether the contract be by way of manual labour, clerical work, or otherwise, be expressed or implied, oral or in writing, and whether it be a contract of service or of apprenticeship or a contract personally to execute any work or labour."

"Trade dispute" as defined in the English Act and "industrial dispute" as defined in our Act mean the same thing practically.

It has to be conceded, even at the outset, that an industry can be carried on by or under the authority of the Central, or State Government, or by or on behalf of a local authority. This is made clear not only by the provision in sub-clause (i) of clause (a) of section 2 but also by the definition of "employer" in clause (g) to the following effect:

"'employer' means—

(i) in relation to an industry carried on by or under the authority of any department of the Central Government or a State Government, the authority prescribed in this behalf, or where no authority is prescribed, the head of the department;

(ii) in relation to an industry carried on by or on behalf of a local authority, the chief executive officer of that authority;"

Where a dispute arises in such an industry between the employees on the one side and the Central Government or the State or the local body on the other; it would be an industrial dispute undoubtedly. But where a dispute arises in connection with the discharge of the normal activities of Government or of a local body, it is argued for the appellant that the dispute cannot be regarded as an industrial dispute. The soundness of this contention falls to be examined.

In the ordinary or non-technical sense, according to what is understood by the man in the street, industry or business means an undertaking where capital and labour co-operate with each other for the purpose of producing wealth in the shape of goods, machines, tools, etc., and for making profits. The concept of industry in this ordinary sense applies even to agriculture, horticulture, pisciculture and so on and so forth. It is also clear that every aspect of activity in which the relationship of employer and employee exists or arises does not thereby become an industry as commonly understood. We hardly think in terms of an industry, when we have regard for instance, to the rights and duties of master and servant, or of a Government and its secretariat, or the members of the medical profession working in a hospital. It would be regarded as absurd to think so; at any rate, the layman unacquainted with advancing legal concepts of what is meant by industry would rule out such a connotation as impossible. There is nothing however to prevent a statute from giving the word "industry" and the words "industrial dispute" a wider and more comprehensive import in order to meet the requirements of rapid industrial progress and to bring about in the interests of industrial peace and economy, a fair and satisfactory adjustment of relations between employers and workmen in a variety of fields of activity. It is obvious that the limited concept of what an industry meant in early times must now yield place to an enormously wider concept so as to take in various and varied forms of industry, so that disputes arising in connection with them might be settled quickly without much dislocation and disorganisation of the needs of society and in a manner more adapted to conciliation and settlement than a determination of the respective rights and liabilities according to strict legal procedure and principles. The conflicts between capital and labour have now to be determined more from the standpoint of status than of contract. Without such an approach, the numerous problems that now arise for solution in the shape of industrial disputes cannot be tackled satisfactorily, and this is why every civilised government has thought of the machinery of Conciliation Officers, Boards and Tribunals for the effective settlement of disputes.

It is therefore incumbent on us to ascertain what the statute means by "industry" and "industrial dispute," leaving aside the original meaning attributed to the words in a simpler state of society, when we had only one employer perhaps, doing a particular trade or carrying on a particular business with the help of his own tools, material and skill and employing a few workmen in the process of production or manufacture, and when such disputes that occurred did not go behind individual levels into acute fights between rival organisations of workmen and employers, and when large scale strikes and lock-outs throwing society into chaos and confusion were practically unknown. Legislation had to keep pace with the march of times and to provide for new situations. Social evolution is a process of constant growth, and the State cannot afford to stand still without taking adequate measures by means of legislation to solve large and momentous problems that arise in the industrial field from day to day almost.

These remarks are necessary for a proper understanding of the meaning of the terms employed by the statute. It is no doubt true that the meaning should be ascertained only from the words employed in the definitions, but the set-up and context are also relevant for ascertaining what exactly was meant to be conveyed by the terminology employed. As observed by Lord Atkinson in *Keats Lewis Merthyr v. Consolidated Collieries*¹,

"In the construction of a statute it is, of course, at all times and under all circumstances permissible to have regard to the state of things existing at the time the statute was passed, and to the evils, which as appears from its provisions, it was designed to remedy."

If the words are capable of one meaning alone, then it must be adopted, but if they are susceptible of wider import, we have to pay regard to what the statute or the particular piece of legislation had in view. Though the definition may be more or less the same in two different statutes, still the objects to be achieved not only as set out in the preamble but also as gatherable from the antecedent history of the legislation may be widely different. The same words may mean one thing in one context and another in a different context. This is the reason why decisions on the meaning of particular words or collection of words found in other statutes are scarcely of much value, when we have to deal with a specific statute of our own ; they may be helpful, but cannot be taken as guides or precedents.

The words "industrial dispute" convey the meaning to the ordinary mind that the dispute must be such as would affect large groups of workmen and employers ranged on opposite sides on some general questions on which each group is bound together by a community of interests—such as wages, bonuses, allowances, pensions, provident fund, number of working hours per week, holidays and so on. Even with reference to a business that is carried on, we would hardly think of saying that there is an industrial dispute where the employee is dismissed by his employer and the dismissal is questioned as wrongful. But at the same time, having regard to the modern conditions of society where capital and labour have organised themselves into groups for the purpose of fighting their disputes and settling them on the basis of the theory that in union is strength, and collective bargaining has come to stay, a single employee's case might develop into an industrial dispute, when as often happens, it is taken up by the trade union of which he is a member, and there is a concerted demand by the employees for redress. Such trouble may arise in a single establishment or a factory. It may well arise also in such a manner as to cover the industry as a whole in a case where the grievance, if any, passes from the region of individual complaint into a general complaint on behalf of all the workers in the industry. Such widespread extension of labour unrest is not a rare phenomenon but is of frequent occurrence. In such a case, even an industrial dispute in a particular business becomes a large scale industrial dispute, which the Government cannot afford to ignore as a minor trouble to be settled between the particular employer and workman.

When our Act came to be passed, labour disputes had already assumed big proportions, and there were clashes between workmen and employers in several instances. We can assume therefore that it was to meet such a situation that the Act was enacted, and it is consequently necessary to give the terms employed in the Act referring to such disputes as wide an import as reasonably possible. Do the definitions of "industry," "industrial dispute" and "workmen" take in the extended significance, or exclude it? Though the word "undertaking" in the definition of "industry" is wedged in between business and trade on the one hand and manufacture on the other, and though therefore it might mean only a business or trade undertaking, still it must be remembered that if that were so, there was no need to use the word separately from business or trade. The wider import is attracted even more clearly when we look at the latter part of the definition which refer to "calling, service, employment, or industrial occupation or avocation of workmen." "Undertaking" in the first part of the definition and "industrial occupation or avocation" in the second part obviously mean much more than what is ordinarily understood by trade or business. The definition was apparently intended to include within its scope what might not strictly be called a trade or business venture.

Another provision in the Act defining "public utility service" and contained in sub-clause (n) of section 2 is very relevant, and important in the interpretation of "industry" and "industrial dispute," and it is to the following effect :

"public utility service" means—

- (i) any railway service ;
- (ii) any section of an industrial establishment, on the working of which the safety of the establishment or the workmen employed therein depends ;
- (iii) any postal, telegraph or telephone service ;
- (iv) any industry which supplies power, light or water to the public ;
- (v) any system of public conservancy or sanitation ;
- (vi) any industry specified in the Schedule which the appropriate Government may, if satisfied that public emergency or public interest so requires, by notification in the official Gazette declare to be a public utility service for the purposes of this Act, for such period as may be specified in the notification :

Provided that the period so specified shall not, in the first instance, exceed six months but may, by a like notification, be extended from time to time, by any period not exceeding six months, at any one time if in the opinion of the appropriate Government public emergency or public interest requires such extension."

A public utility service such as railways, telephones and the supply of power, light or water to the public may be carried on by private companies or business corporations. Even conservancy or sanitation may be so carried on, though after the introduction of local self-government this work has in almost every country been assigned as a duty to local bodies like our Municipalities or District Boards or Local Boards. A dispute in these services between employers and workmen is an industrial dispute, and the proviso to section 10 lays down that where such a dispute arises and a notice under section 22 has been given, the appropriate Government shall make a reference under the sub-section. If the public utility service is carried on by a corporation like a municipality which is the creature of a statute, and which functions under the limitations imposed by the statute, does it cease to be an industry for this reason? The only ground on which one could say that what would amount to the carrying on of an industry if it is done by a private person ceases to be so if the same work is carried on by a local body like a Municipality is that in the latter there is nothing like the investment of any capital or the existence of a profit-earning motive as there generally is in a business. But neither the one nor the other seems a sine qua non or necessary element in the modern conception of industry.

In specifying the purpose to which the municipal fund is applicable, section 108 of the Bengal Municipal Act (XV of 1932) enumerates under 36 separate heads several things such as the construction and maintenance of streets, lighting, water supply, conservancy, maintenance of dairy farms and milk depots, the taking of markets on lease, etc. They may be described as the normal functions or ordinary activities of the Municipality. Some of these functions may appertain to and partake of the nature of an industry, while others may not. For instance, there is a necessary element of distinction between the supply of power and light to the inhabitants of a Municipality and the running of charitable hospitals and dispensaries for the aid of the poor. In ordinary parlance, the former might be regarded as an industry but not the latter. The very idea underlying the entrustment of such duties or functions to local bodies is not to take them out of the sphere of industry but to secure the substitution of public authorities in the place of private employers and to eliminate the motive of profit-making as far as possible. The levy of taxes for the maintenance of the services of sanitation and conservancy or the supply of light and water is a method adopted and devised to make up for the absence of capital. The undertaking or the service will still remain within the ambit of what we understand by an industry though it is carried on with the aid of taxation, and no immediate material gain by way of profit is envisaged.

In *National Association of Local Government Officers v. Bolton Corporation*¹, after referring to the definitions of "trade dispute" and "workman" contained in the order of reference to the National Arbitration Tribunal and pointing out that they are identical with and have the same meaning as the definitions contained in the Industrial Courts Act, 1919, Lord Wright observed as follows at page 184 of the Report :

"The appellants contended that they include the members of the appellant trade union. The respondents disputed this because, they said, the definitions do not include employees of a public or local authority like the respondents, and, in particular, such employees who are engaged in professional, technical or administrative services. In my opinion, the respondents' contention would unduly narrow and limit the wide connotation which should here be given to 'trade' and to 'workman.' Section 11 of the Act of 1919 shows that 'trade' is used as including 'industry' because it refers to a trade dispute in the industry of agriculture. The same inference appears from the short title. It is described as an Act to provide for the establishment of an Industrial Court in connexion with trade disputes. Trade and industry are thus treated as interchangeable terms. Indeed 'trade' is not only in the etymological or dictionary sense, but in legal usage, a term of the widest scope. It is connected originally with the word 'tread' and indicates a way of life or an occupation. In ordinary usage it may mean the occupation of a small shopkeeper equally with that of a commercial magnate. It may also mean a skilled craft. It is true that it is often used in contrast with a profession. A professional worker would not ordinarily be called a tradesman, but the word 'trade' is used in the widest application in the appellation 'trade unions.' Professions have their trade unions." It is also used in the Trade Boards Act to include industrial undertakings. I see no reason to exclude from the operation of the Industrial Courts Act the activities of local authorities, even without taking into account the fact that these authorities now carry on in most cases important industrial undertakings. The order expressly states in its definition section that 'trade or industry' includes the performance of its functions by a 'public local authority.' It is true that these words are used in Part III, which deals with 'recognized terms and conditions of employment,' and in Part IV, which deals with 'departures from trade practices' in 'any industry or undertaking,' and not in Part I, which deals with 'national arbitration' and is the part material in this case, but I take them as illustrating what modern conditions involve—the idea that the functions of local authorities may come under the expression 'trade or industry.' I think the same may be said of the Industrial Courts Act and of Reg. 58-AA, in both of which the word 'trade' is used in the very wide connotation which it bears in the modern legislation dealing with conditions of employment, particularly in relation to matters of collective bargaining and the like."

The justification for this rather long quotation is that it deals with the specific point now in issue before us.

The same question as the one now before us came up for decision in an Australian case reported in *Federated Municipal and Shire Council Employees' Union of Australia v. Melbourne Corporation*¹, and the judgments of some of the learned Judges are instructive. There was a Union called the Federated Municipal and Shire Council Employees' Union of Australia, which was registered as an organisation under the Commonwealth Conciliation and Arbitration Act, 1914-1915 as having been constituted in connection with municipal and shire councils, municipal trusts and similar industries. The organisation made claims in respect of work done by its members employed by certain municipal corporations in respect of the making, maintenance, control, and lighting of public streets. The original reference stated the dispute as one which "relates to such operations of the said municipal corporations as do not consist of municipal trading," but it was subsequently amended during argument by substituting for the words "as do not consist of municipal trading" the words "as consist of the making, maintenance, control and lighting of public streets or any of them." Two points were argued before the High Court. The first one raised the question of the existence and extent of the immunity of municipalities as instrumentalities of Government of the States, but it has no relevance here. The second point which is material was whether the employees of municipalities could be said to be engaged in an industrial dispute within the meaning of section 51, sub-section 35 of the Constitution. The corporations contended that they were not carrying on any industry but only the normal functions assigned to them under the statute, and that there was therefore no industrial dispute that could be referred to the arbitration Court. The meaning of the words "industrial disputes" used in the said sub-section had therefore to be ascertained and adjudged. The majority of the learned Judges—four against two—decided in favour of the Union. Each side put forward an extreme contention. For the claimant it was urged that "industrial" meant simply "relating to industry in the abstract," whether it be in the exercise of trade, commerce, science or learned professions. The corporations contended that "industrial dispute" meant a "trade dispute," and that "trade dispute" meant "a dispute in trade carried on by the employer for profit." A formula midway between these two extremes was postulated in these terms by Isaacs and Rich, JJ., who were two out of the four who constituted the majority :

"Industrial disputes occur when, in relation to operations in which capital and labour are contributed in co-operation for the satisfaction of human wants and desires, those engaged in co-operation dispute as to the basis to be observed, by the parties engaged, respecting either a share of the product or any other terms and conditions of their co-operation."

After giving copious extracts from the report of the Royal Commission appointed in 1890 in England to deal with labour problems, they summed up their final conclusion in these words at page 564 :

"The question of profit-making may be important from an income-tax point of view, as in many municipal cases in England; but, from an industrial dispute point of view, it cannot matter whether the expenditure is met by fares from passengers or from rates."

Dealing with the insistence by the corporations of the need for the profit-making motive as an essential element before one can say that a trade dispute or industrial dispute has arisen, Powers, J., who was also the Deputy President of the Arbitration Tribunal observed :

"So far as the question in this case is concerned, as the argument proceeded the ground mostly relied upon (after the Councils were held not to be exempt as State instrumentalities) was that the work was not carried on by the municipal corporations for profit in the ordinary sense of the term, although it would generally speaking be carried on by the Councils themselves to save contractors' profits. If that argument were sufficient, then a philanthropist who acquired a clothing factory and employed the same employees as the previous owner had employed would not be engaged in an occupation about which an industrial dispute could arise, if he distributed the clothes made to the poor free of charge or even if he distributed them to the poor at the bare cost of production. If the contention of the respondents is correct, a private company carrying on a ferry would be engaged in an industrial occupation. If a municipal corporation carried it on, it would not be industrial. The same argument would apply to baths, bridge-building, quarries, sanitary contracts, gas-making for lighting streets and public halls, municipal building of houses or halls, and many other similar industrial undertakings. Even coal-mining for use on municipal railways or tramways would not be industrial work if the contention of the respondents is correct. If the works in question are carried out by contractors or by private individuals it is said to be industrial, but not industrial within the meaning of the Arbitration Act or Constitution if carried out by municipal corporations. I cannot accept that view."

Having regard to the definitions found in our Act, the aim or objective that the Legislature had in view, and the nature, variety and range of disputes that occur between employers and employees, we are forced to the conclusion that the definitions in our Act include also disputes that might arise between municipalities and their employees in branches of work that can be said to be analogous to the carrying out of a trade or business. It is unnecessary to decide whether disputes arising in relation to purely administrative work fall within their ambit. After all, whether there is an industrial dispute at all is for the Government primarily to find out, for it is only then it has jurisdiction to refer. Moreover, it is not every case of an industrial dispute that the Government is bound to refer. They may refer some, but may not also. It is a question of expediency.

There was no ground urged before us or before the High Court that the sanitary Inspector and the Head Clerk of the Municipality were officers and not "workmen" within the meaning of the Act. The dispute raised on their behalf by the Workers' Union of which they were members is, in our view, an "industrial dispute" within meaning of the Act.

The order of the High Court is affirmed, and this appeal is dismissed with costs only one set to be shared between Respondent 2 and Respondent 3.

Mrs. Godavari Parulekar w/o Shamrao V. Parulekar .. Petitioner*

The State of Bombay and two others .. Respondents..

Preventive Detention Act (IV of 1950) as amended by Act (LXI of 1952), section 11-A (2)—Scope—Order of detention without specifying any period and order of confirmation on the 4th January, 1952, which also did not specify any period—Detention if can be continued by virtue of newly added section 11-A (2) up to 31st March, 1953—Section 11-A (2)—Classification if discriminatory or bad as offending Articles 14 and 22 (7) (b) of the Constitution of India (1950).

Where G was detained on 16th October, 1951, under the Preventive Detention Act under an Order which merely said that G be detained without specifying any period and the order of confirmation passed on the 4th January, 1952, also did not specify any period, the detention can validly be continued under section 11-A which was added in 1952 to the original Act till the 1st of April, 1953. There is no "shorter period" specified in the order. It cannot be said that there is any discriminatory classification (by reason of longer or shorter periods of detention) in section 11-A (2) such as would render it bad as offending Articles 14 and 22 (7) (a) of the Constitution.

(Under Article 32 of the Constitution of India for a writ in the nature of habeas corpus.)

The Petitioner in person.

M. C. Setalvad, Attorney-General for India (G. N. Joshi and P. A. Mehta, Advocates, with him), for Respondents.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Bose, J.—This is a habeas corpus petition under Article 32 of the Constitution.

The petitioner was detained on the 16th of October, 1951, under the Preventive Detention Act of 1950 as amended in 1951. Her detention was actually longer than this but the earlier detentions were under a different set of orders which are not relevant to the present matter. The present detention is based on an order of the District Magistrate, Thana, and merely says that the petitioner be detained, without specifying any period. The order of confirmation was passed on the 4th of January, 1952, and there again no period was specified. The petitioner's case is that as no period was specified in the order her period of detention expired on the 31st of March, 1952, because of the amending Act of 1951; or at the outside of the 30th of September, 1952, because of Act XXXIV of 1952, which effected a further amendment.

The reply on behalf of the State of Bombay is that the Preventive Detention Act of 1950 was again amended by Act LXI of 1952 and that the effect of this amendment was to carry the petitioner's detention on to the 31st of March, 1953, because of section 11-A which was added to the original Act of 1950.

The petitioner counters by saying that the new Act does not apply to cases in which the order of detention is not silent about its duration and so section 11-A does not serve to extend the period of her detention. She relies on the following portion of section 11-A (2) :

"... every detention order which has been confirmed under section 11 before the commencement of the Preventive Detention (Second Amendment) Act, 1952, shall, unless a shorter period is specified in the order, continue to remain in force until the 1st day of April, 1953"

The petitioner concedes that no shorter period is specified in her order of detention but contends that as her detention would have expired either on the 31st of March, 1952 or the 30th of September, 1952, one of those two dates must now be read into the order and when that is done we have an order which specifies a shorter period, therefore section 11-A (2) does not serve to extend her detention.

We are unable to accept this contention. The section is clear and unless a shorter period is specified in the order, section 11-A (2) applies. We cannot add the words "or must be deemed to have been specified by reason of the expiry of the earlier Act" into the section. We hold therefore that section 11-A (2) validly extended the period of detention till the 1st of April, 1953.

The petitioner's next point is based on Articles 14 and 22 (7) (b) of the Constitution. It arises in this way. Section 3 (1) (a) of the Preventive Detention Act of 1950 classifies grounds of permissible detention into three categories. Article 22 (7) (b) empowers Parliament to prescribe the maximum period for which any person may "in any class or classes of cases" be detained. The petitioner argues that this permits only one maximum for each class and that if different maxima are provided for "equals" within a class it offends not only Article 22 (7) (b) but also Article 14 as interpreted by the decisions of this Court. She next argues that section 11-A, now introduced by the second amending Act of 1952 (Act LXI of 1952), does just that and so is ultra vires. Her point is put as follows.

Sub-section (1) of section 11-A states that the maximum period for which any person may be detained in pursuance of any detention order which has been confirmed under section 11 shall be twelve months from the date of detention. But sub-section (2) qualifies this by dividing detentions into two classes: (a) those in which the detention order was confirmed before 30th September, 1952 and (b) those in which the confirmation was after that date, and it provides that in the former case, unless a shorter period is specified in the order, the detention shall continue either till the 1st of April, 1953 or for twelve months from the date of detention, whichever expires later. This, she says, introduces a fresh classification which divides detentions into those before the Act and those after. That she says is ultra vires, first, because it introduces a discriminatory classification in the class to which she belongs under section 3 of the Act and, second, because it entails discrimination even in the fresh class into which she has been thrown by the new sub-division made by the second amending Act of 1952.

As regards the first point, the ratio decidendi in *Shamrao V. Parulekar v. The District Magistrate, Thana and others*¹, applies here. In that case, detentions were divided into those which had already been considered by an Advisory Board and those which had not. This was upheld. The dividing line here is different, namely a certain date, but the principle is the same and its reasonableness is apparent from a consideration of the various amendments which have been made from time to time.

The life of the Act of 1950, which was the principal Act, was extended till the 1st of October, 1952, by section 2 of the amending Act (Act XXXIV of 1952), and the effect of section 3 was to prolong the life of all detentions in force on 14th March, 1952 (provided they had been confirmed before that date) for so long as the principal Act was in force. At that date this meant till the 1st of October, 1952. But the second amending Act of 1952 extended the life of the principal Act till the 31st of December, 1954. Therefore, in the absence of section 11-A all those detentions would have been extended till that date. But section 11-A modified that and put 1st April, 1953, as the latest date for these old detentions. It therefore conferred a benefit and cannot be deemed unreasonable. Sub-section (3) of section 11-A shows that that was the object.

But the petitioner attacked the provisions on the ground of discrimination. She said that even assuming the new classification of detentions into those before and after the 30th September, 1952, to be good, section 11-A is nevertheless discriminatory because it discriminates amongst those in her class, namely those whose detentions were made and confirmed before the 30th of September. She put it in this way.

Taking the case of her own detention, she pointed out that, if section 11-A is good, it will continue till the 1st of April, 1953, that is to say, her detention will have been for a period of 17½ months from the 16th of October, 1951, till the 1st of April, 1953. On the other hand, a person detained after her on, say, the 1st of September, 1952, would also be due for release on the 1st of April, 1953, and so would have had only six months' detention.

This, in our opinion, is not discrimination within the meaning of Article 14. A maximum can be fixed, either by specifying a particular period, such as twelve months, or by setting an outside limit, and it is inevitable in such a case that the length of detention will vary in each individual case. Those taken into detention at a later date are bound to be detained for a shorter time. Government is not bound to detain everybody for the same length of time. It has a discretion. Moreover, the appropriate Government has been left power to revoke or modify the detention order at any earlier time. This point was considered in *Shamrao V. Parulekar v. The District Magistrate, Thané and others*¹ and was decided against the detenu.

The petitioner endeavoured to have her application reopened on the merits contending again that the grounds of detention are vague. She relies on *Shamrao V. Parulekar v. The State of Bombay*², where another detenu was released by another Bench of this Court in circumstances which, according to her, are very similar. We are unable to allow this as her petition has already been rejected on the merits. She was only allowed to appear on constitutional points. We understand that in the other petition this fact was not brought to the notice of the Court.

The application is dismissed.

v.

The Regional Transport Authority, Tanjore

.. Respondent.

Motor Vehicles Act (IV of 1939), section 68 and Madras Motor Vehicles Rules, rule 268 (as amended) —Scope—Validity of rule 268—Power of Transport Authority to shift bus stand thereby ousting a private stand owner—Madras District Municipalities Act (V of 1920), section 270—Effect—Order if repugnant to Fundamental rights under Article 19 (1) (g) of the Constitution—Consultation required by rule 268 (Madras Motor Vehicles Rules)—Nature and scope of.

The purpose of Chapter IV of the Motor Vehicles Act is described by the compendious expression 'control of transport vehicles' and the Provincial Government is invested with plenary powers to make rules for carrying out that purpose. Keeping in view the purpose underlying the chapter it cannot be held that the fixing or alteration of bus stands is foreign to that purpose.

Sub-section 2 (r) of section 68 prohibits the picking up or setting down of passengers at specified places, in specified areas and at places other than duly notified stands or halting places. If the power to make rules in regard to these matters is given to the Government, then it follows that a specified place may be prohibited from being used for picking up or setting down passengers. This will inevitably result in the closing of that specified place for the purpose of picking up or setting down of passengers. Similarly a specified area may be excluded for the same purpose. The expression 'duly notified stands' is not defined in the Act, but it is reasonable to presume that a duly notified stand must be one which is notified by the Transport Authority and by none else. There is no warrant for the presumption that it must be notified by the Municipality.

Section 270 of the District Municipalities Act empowering the Municipality to construct cart stands and halting places, etc., do not affect the power of the Transport Authority to regulate traffic control or impose restrictions upon the licence of any such cart stand. Rule 268 (as amended) of the Madras Motor Vehicles Rules conferring power on the Transport Authority to direct the fixing or alteration of a bus stand is within the powers conferred under section 68 of the Act and it cannot be challenged as being void because it is not consistent with some general law.

* Civil Appeal No. 16 of 1952.

5th December, 1952.

The order challenging the termini of bus routes from an existing stand owned by a private citizen cannot be said to be repugnant to Article 19 (1) (g) of the Constitution. The restriction on the use of bus stands cannot be said to be unreasonable. Whether the abolition of a stand was conducive to public convenience or not is a matter entirely for the transport authority to judge, and it is not open to the Court to substitute its own opinion for the opinion of the authority, which is in the best position having regard to its knowledge of local conditions to appraise the situation.

The consultation of the local body required under rule 268 of the Madras Motor Vehicles Rules is not obligatory but only discretionary. The fact that the Municipality is owner of a new bus stand does not render the Municipality not the proper public body to be consulted.

The fact that the District Collector in his executive capacity presided over the meeting of the Transport Authority in the exercise of his normal functions and also opened the new municipal stand which he was entitled to do as the head of the District, does not affect the validity or fairness of the order complained of.

On Appeal from the Judgment and Order dated the 6th February, 1951, of the High Court of Judicature at Madras (Rajamannar, C.J. and Somasundaram, J.) in Civil Miscellaneous Petition No. 11307 of 1950, arising out of the Order dated the 10th November, 1950, made in C. No. 2216-A-3-49 on the file of the Regional Transport Authority, Tanjore.

G. R. Jagadisa Iyer, Advocate, for Appellant.

V. K. T. Chari, Advocate-General of Madras (V. V. Raghavan, Advocate, with him), for Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Ghulam Hasan, J.—This appeal brought by special leave under Article 136 (1) of the Constitution is directed against the order dated 6th February, 1951, of the High Court of Judicature at Madras, dismissing the petition of the appellant under Article 226, praying for the issue of a writ of certiorari to quash the order dated 10th November, 1950, passed by the respondent in the following circumstances:—

The appellant is the lessee of a site in the town of Tanjore in the State of Madras upon which he has a bus-stand. The bus-stand originally belonged to the Tanjore Municipality and the appellant merely held a licence from that authority. Later on, the title of the Municipality to the site was questioned by a third party and in a civil litigation which ensued the title to the Municipality was negatived. Thereupon the appellant obtained the lease-hold right of the site from the true owner and constructed a bus-stand conforming to the design approved by the municipality. Besides sheds for passengers and vehicles it provided other amenities. It was situated near the Railway Station and most of the buses leaving Tanjore for out-station journeys used this bus-stand both as the starting point and the terminus. It appears that the site was approved as convenient and suitable for the bus-stand both by the Municipality and the District authorities for buses plying from and into Tanjore. The appellant held the licence for running the bus-stand year after year. In 1939 the Municipality granted him a licence for four months only instead of one year as required by section 270 (c) of the Madras District Municipalities Act (V of 1920), and the appellant succeeded in vindicating his right for a whole year's licence in the Civil Court by obtaining the relief for injunction and an order directing the issue of a licence against the municipality for 1940-41. The appellant carried on the business without let or hindrance until 1950 when the Municipality refused to renew his licence, whereupon he obtained a mandatory injunction from the Civil Court directing the Municipality to grant him a licence for the year 1950-51. This decree was passed on 7th October, 1950.

On 21st February, 1950, however, the Regional Transport Authority, Tanjore, which is the respondent in the present appeal, declared the bus-stand as unsuitable with effect from 1st April, 1950, and altered the starting and the terminal points from that date. This order resulted in the closing of the appellant's bus-stand. This decision which was given by means of a resolution was confirmed subsequently by another resolution passed on 31st March, 1950. The appellant challenged the validity of these resolutions by a petition under Article 226 before the Madras High Court on the ground that they were passed without jurisdiction and were contrary to the principles of natural justice as they were passed without notice to the appellant and without giving him an opportunity to defend his right. The resolutions purported to have been passed under section 76 of the Motor Vehicles Act, 1939, which runs thus :—

“The Provincial Government or any authority authorized in this behalf by the Provincial Government may, in consultation with the local authority having jurisdiction in the area concerned, determine places at which motor vehicles may stand either indefinitely or for a specified period of time, and may determine the places at which public service vehicles may stand either indefinitely or for a specified period of time, and may determine the places at which public service vehicles may stop for a longer time than is necessary for the taking up and setting down of passengers.”

The Division Bench of the Madras High Court consisting of the learned Chief Justice and another learned Judge quashed the two orders as prayed for by the appellant on the grounds that the orders were passed ex parte, and that section 76 did not authorize the respondent to close the bus-stand. In the opinion of the Bench, section 76 deals with provision for parking places and halting stations and has no application to a permanent bus-stand which is a sort of a radiating centre of all the bus traffic for the town. It was held therefore that the Regional Transport Authority could not under section 76 fix starting and terminus places for motor-buses.

Reference was made in the course of the arguments to rule 268, Madras Motor Vehicles Rules, 1940, and the learned Judges observed that though the rule does empower the Transport Authority to fix starting places and termini between which public service vehicles other than motor cars shall be permitted to be used, but that this could be done only if starting places and termini had not already been fixed in accordance with the provisions of any Statute. In the present case as these had already been fixed in accordance with rule 27-D, Motor Vehicles Rules, 1923, the Transport Authority could not fix new starting places and termini under rule 268 of the rules passed in 1940. The Bench pointed out that the rule was defective and would lead to an impasse if the starting places and termini already fixed become unsuitable and have to be shifted. Accordingly they suggested that the rule should be amended and a provision introduced conferring on the appropriate authority the requisite power to alter from time to time the starting places and termini See *T. E. Ebrahim Sahib v. The Regional Transport Authority, Tanjore*¹.

It appears that, within two months of the decision of the High Court, rule 268 was amended by the Government. Before the decision of the High Court was given, the bus-stand was shifted to a place belonging to the Municipality in another area. Rule 268 as it originally stood ran thus :—

“In the case of public service vehicles (other than motor cabs) if starting places and termini have not been fixed in accordance with the provisions of any statute, the transport authority may, after consultation with such other authority as it may deem desirable, fix starting places and termini between which such vehicles shall be permitted to be used within its jurisdiction. A list of such places shall be supplied by such authority to every holder of a permit for such vehicles.

When such places have been fixed, every such vehicle shall start only from such places.”

By the amendment the words “if starting places and termini have not been fixed in accordance with the provisions of any statute” were deleted, and the words “and after notice to the parties affected, fix or alter from time to time for good and proper reasons,” were added. As amended, the rule runs thus :—

“268. In the case of public service vehicles (other than motor cabs) the Transport Authority may after consultation with such other authority as it may consider desirable, and after notice to the parties affected, fix or alter from time to time for good and proper reasons, the starting places and termini between which such vehicles shall be permitted to be used within its jurisdiction. A list of such places shall be supplied by such authority to every holder of a permit for such vehicles at the time of grant of or renewal of permits.

When such places have been fixed, every such vehicle shall start only from such places.”

The respondent then issued a notice to the appellant on 25th October, 1950, to show cause why the bus-stand should not be shifted, the grounds given being that it was not satisfactorily maintained and was situated in a limited space which was inadequate to accommodate all the buses using the stand and that it did not permit of any improvements being carried out. The appellant filed a long written statement objecting to the notice and challenging the grounds, whereupon the respondent issued a fresh notice on 2nd November, 1950, in which the original grounds were dropped and were substituted by the ground 'from the point of convenience of the travelling public.' After hearing the appellant and the Municipality, the Board passed a resolution on 10th November, 1950, that for good and proper reasons, namely, the convenience of the travelling public, the Transport Authority had resolved to alter the starting places and termini of all public service vehicles (other than motor cabs) arriving at and proceeding from Tanjore from the existing bus-stand owned by the appellant to the Municipal bus-stand in another area of the town. This order led to another petition being filed in the High Court at Madras, praying for a writ of certiorari under Article 226. The appellant questioned the jurisdiction of the Transport Authority to pass the order in question. It was contended before the High Court that rule 26B as amended was itself ultra vires, firstly, because it was beyond the rule-making power conferred by section 68, sub-rule (r) of the Motor Vehicles Act, and secondly because it was repugnant to Article 19 (1) (g) of the Constitution. Both these contentions were rejected by the High Court and the petition was dismissed.

The contentions raised before the High Court have been repeated before us. We are satisfied that there is no good ground for differing from the view taken by the High Court. The Motor Vehicles Act contains 10 Chapters. Chapter IV of the Act deals with control of transport vehicles. Section 47 (1) lays down that the Regional Transport Authority shall, in deciding whether to grant or refuse a stage carriage permit, have regard to the following matters, namely :

- (a) the interest of the public generally ;
- (b) to (f).....

Section 48 says that the Regional Transport Authority after consideration of the matters set forth in section 47, may attach to a stage carriage permit any prescribed condition or any one or more of the following conditions. Various conditions are set out one of which (v) is material for our purposes. It is to the effect "that within Municipal limits and in such other areas and places as may be prescribed, passengers shall not be taken up or set down at or except at specified points." The material portion of section 68 may be set out here :—

"(1) A Provincial Government may make rules for the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of this Chapter.

(2) Without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing power, rules under this section may be made with respect to all or any of the following matters, namely :—

* * *

(r) Prohibiting the picking up or setting down of passengers by stage or contract carriages at specified places or in specified areas or at places other than duly notified stands or halting places*;

It is obvious from a plain reading of sub-section (1) that the Government has got full power to make rules, for the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions contained in Chapter IV relating to the control of transport vehicles and according to sub-section 2 without prejudice to this power, the Government has the power to frame rules with respect to matters set out in 2 (a) to (za). It is significant to note that the Act does not follow the ordinary mode of providing at the end of the Act that the Government is empowered to make rules for the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of the Act but at the end of each of the Chapters, including Chapter IV, the power has been reserved to the Provincial Government to make rules for the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of the Chapter. The purpose of Chapter IV is described by the compendious expression 'control of transport vehicles' and the Provincial Government is invested with plenary powers to make rules for carrying out that purpose. Keeping in view the purpose underlying the Chapter we are not prepared to hold that the fixing or alteration of bus-stands is foreign to that purpose.

It was contended that section 68, sub-section 2 (r) does not confer the power upon the transport authority to direct the fixing or the alteration of a bus-stand and that rule 268 of the rules framed under that section was, therefore, ultra vires. We are not prepared to accede to this contention. Sub-section 2 (r) clearly contemplates three definite situations. It prohibits the picking up or setting down of passengers

- (i) at specified places,
- (ii) in specified areas, and
- (iii) at places other than duly notified stands or halting places.

If the power to make rules in regard to these matters is given to the Government, then it follows that a specified place may be prohibited from being used for picking up or setting down passengers. This will inevitably result in the closing of that specified place for the purpose of picking up or setting down of passengers. Similarly a specified area may be excluded for the same purpose. The expression 'duly notified stands' is not defined in the Act, but it is reasonable to presume that a duly notified stand must be one which is notified by the Transport Authority and by none other. There is no warrant for the presumption that it must be notified by the Municipality. Reference was made to sections 270 (b), 270 (c) and 270 (e), 1, 2 and 3 of the Madras District Municipalities Act V of 1920, and it was argued that the authority which is clothed with a power to fix a stand, is the Municipality. Section 270 (b) empowers the Municipal Council to construct or provide halting places and cart-stands, and the latter according to the Explanation appended to the section includes a stand for motor vehicles as well. Section 270 (c) merely says that where a Municipal Council has provided a public landing place, halting place or cart-stand, the executive authority may prohibit the use for the same purpose by any person within such distance thereof, as may be determined by the Municipal Council, of any public place or the sides of any public street. Section 270 (e) lays down that no person can open a new private cart-stand or continue to keep open a private stand unless he obtains from the Council a licence to do so. These provisions do not affect the power of the Transport Authority to regulate traffic control or impose restrictions upon the licence of any such cart-stand. If rule 268 is therefore within the power of the rule-making authority, it follows that it cannot be challenged as being void because it is not consistent with some general law.

Reliance was placed on a passage at page 299 of Craies on Statute Law as laying down that a by-law must not be repugnant to the statute or the general law. But by-laws and rules made under a rule-making power conferred by a statute do not stand on the same footing, as such rules are part and parcel of the statute itself.

Section 68, sub-section 2 (r) involves both a general prohibition that the stand will cease to exist as well as a particular prohibition, namely, that passengers shall not be picked up or set down at a specified point. The order passed by the Transport Authority properly construed falls within the ambit of section 68, sub-section 2 (r). Rule 268 under which the order impeached was passed is a rule framed under the plenary rule-making power referred to in section 68, sub-section 1. Sub-section 2 (za) says that a rule may be made with respect to any other matter which is to be or may be prescribed. This shows the existence of residuary power vested in the rule-making authority. It follows therefore that rule 268 is within the scope of the powers conferred under section 68 of the Act.

The next contention was that the order is repugnant to Article 19 (1) (g) of the Constitution, according to which all citizens must have the right to practise any profession or to carry on any occupation, trade or business. It cannot be denied that the appellant has not been prohibited from carrying on the business of running a bus-stand. What has been prohibited is that the bus-stand existing on the particular site being unsuitable from the point of view of public convenience, it cannot be used for picking up or setting down passengers from that stand for out-stations journeys. But there is certainly no prohibition for the bus-stand being used otherwise for carrying passengers from the stand into the town, and vice-versa. The restriction placed upon the use of the bus-stand for the purpose of picking up or setting down passengers to outward journeys cannot be considered to be an unreasonable restriction. It may be that the appellant by reason of the shifting of the bus-stand has been deprived of the income he used to enjoy when the bus-stand was used for outward journeys from Tanjore, but that can be no ground for the contention that there has been an infringement of any fundamental right within the meaning of Article 19 (1) (g) of the Constitution. There is no fundamental right in a citizen to carry on business wherever he chooses and his right must be subject to any reasonable restriction imposed by the executive authority in the interest of public convenience. The restriction may have the effect of eliminating the use to which the stand has been put hitherto but the restriction cannot be regarded as being unreasonable if the authority imposing such restriction had the power to do so. Whether the abolition of the stand was conducive to public convenience or not is a matter entirely for the transport authority to judge, and it is not open to the Court to substitute its own opinion for the opinion of the authority, which is in the best position, having regard to its knowledge of local conditions to appraise the situation.

It was next contended that rule 268, if it is held to be intra vires, was not complied with as the Transport Authority could pass such an order only after consultation with such other authority as it may deem desirable. It is admitted that the Transport Authority consulted the Municipality before passing the order in question. Rule 268 therefore was fully complied with. But then it is urged that the Municipality was not the proper authority in the circumstances as it was a partisan to the dispute and had been endeavouring to oust the appellant from the bus-stand in order to set up its own bus-stand. The Municipality is a public body interested in public welfare and if it sought the assistance of the Government or the Transport Authority to shift the bus-stand, it was actuated only by the demands of public interest. It was possible for the Transport Authority to consult the District Board or the Panchayat as suggested for the appellant, but it was not bound to do so. We do not think that in consulting the Municipality the Transport Authority acted otherwise than within the scope of its powers. Further according to the language employed the consultation is not obligatory but only discretionary.

It was suggested that the act of the Municipality was mala fide and reference was made to paragraphs 18 and 19 of the appellant's affidavit dated 20th November, 1950. They refer merely to the vagueness of the ground of public convenience and to the amendment of the rule not being bona fide. There is, however, no material to support this suggestion. The mere fact that in the first notice certain grounds were mentioned which were not adhered to in the second notice and convenience of the travelling public was alone mentioned as the ground cannot lead to the inference that the order was mala fide. The rule was amended in pursuance of the suggestion of the High Court in order to overcome the difficulty which arose in the absence of requisite power to alter the bus-stands. It is significant that no allegation about mala fides was made before the High Court and the question was never discussed there. In the petition for special leave to appeal though there is reference to the ground of inconvenience being vague, yet there is no suggestion of mala fides. The question about mala fides appears to have been raised for the first time in paragraph 4 (f) and (g) of the statement of the case. We hold that the plea of mala fides has not been substantiated by any evidence.

It was also urged that the resolution is invalid as the District Collector who presided over the meeting of the Transport Authority which passed this resolution had opened the new Municipal Bus-stand on 1st April, 1950. The suggestion is that he did not bring to bear upon the question an impartial and unbiased mind. The District Collector was not acting in the exercise of judicial or quasi-judicial functions so that his action can be subjected to the scrutiny which is permissible in the case of a judicial officer. He was acting purely in his executive capacity and his conduct in presiding over the meeting of the Transport Authority in the exercise of his normal functions and also opening the Municipal stand which he was entitled to do as the head of the District, does not affect the validity or fairness of the order complained against. We do not think there is any merit in this contention.

Accordingly we dismiss the appeal with costs.

Contempt of Court—Article in newspaper criticising a recent decision of the Supreme Court and attributing improper motives to the Judges—Contempt.

When an article in a newspaper criticising a recent decision of the Supreme Court proceeded to attribute improper motives to the judges, it not only transgressed the limits of fair and bona fide criticism but had a clear tendency to affect the dignity and prestige of the Court. Such an article constitutes a gross contempt of Court.

Andre Paul v. Attorney-General of Trinidad, (1936) 71 M.L.J. 665 : A.I.R. 1936 P.C. 141 (P.C.), followed.

(The unconditional apology of the Editor, Printer and the Publisher of the paper was accepted and proceedings dropped.)

In the matter of Contempt of Court proceedings against the Editor, Printer and Publisher, "Times of India" (Daily), Bombay and Delhi for publishing a leading article in their paper of the 30th October, 1952, entitled "A Disturbing Decision".

M. C. Setalvad, Attorney-General for India (P. A. Mehta, Advocate, with him), amicus curiae.

N. C. Chatterjee, Senior Advocate (Nur-ud-Din Ahmad and A. K. Dutt, Advocates, with him), for the Contemnners.

The Order of the Court was pronounced by Mahajan, J.—In its issue of the 30th October, 1952, the "Times of India", a daily newspaper published in Bombay and New Delhi, a leading article was published under the heading "A Disturbing Decision". The burden of it was that in a singularly oblique and infelicitous manner the Supreme Court had by a majority decision tolled the knell of the much maligned dual system prevailing in the Calcutta and Bombay High Courts by holding that the right to practise in any High Court conferred on advocates of the Supreme Court, made the rules in force in those High Courts requiring advocates appearing on the Original Side to be instructed by attorneys inapplicable to them. The article concluded with the following passage :—

"The fact of the matter appears to be that in the higher legal latitudes at New Delhi and elsewhere, the dual system is regarded as obsolete and anomalous. There is a tell tale note at the top of the rules framed by the Supreme Court for enrolment of advocates and agents to the effect that the rules were subject to revision and the judges had under consideration a proposal for abolishing the dual system. Abolish it by all means if the system has outgrown its usefulness and is found incongruous in the new setting of a democratic constitution. But to achieve a dubious or even a laudable purpose by straining the law is hardly edifying. Politics and policies have no place in the pure region of the law ; and Courts of law would serve the country and the Constitution better by discarding all extraneous considerations and uncompromisingly observing divine detachment which is the glory of law and the guarantee of justice."

No objection could have been taken to the article had it merely preached to the courts of law the sermon of divine detachment. But when it proceeded to attribute improper motives to the judges, it not only transgressed the limits of fair and bona fide criticism but had a clear tendency to affect the dignity and prestige of this Court. The article in question was thus a gross contempt of Court. It is obvious that if an impression is created in the minds of the public that the judges in the highest Court in the land act on extraneous considerations in deciding cases, the confidence of the whole community in the administration of justice is bound to be undermined and no greater mischief than that can possibly be imagined. It was for this reason that the rule was issued against the respondents.

We are happy to find that the Editor, Printer and the Publisher of the paper in their respective affidavits filed in these proceedings have frankly stated that they now realize that in the offending article they had exceeded the limits of legitimate criticism in that words or expressions which can be construed as casting reflection upon the Court and constituting contempt had crept into it. They have expressed sincere regret and have tendered unreserved and unqualified apology for this first lapse of theirs. We would like to observe that it is not the practice of this Court to issue such rules except in very grave and serious cases and it is never over-sensitive to public criticism; but when there is danger of grave mischief being done in the matter of administration of justice, the animadversion cannot be ignored and viewed with placid equanimity. In this matter we are of the same opinion as was expressed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in *Andre Paul v. Attorney-General of Trinidad*¹, where they observed as follows :—

"The path of criticism is a public way; the wrong-headed are permitted to err therein; provided that members of the public abstain from imputing improper motives to those taking part in the administration of justice, and are genuinely exercising a right of criticism and not acting in malice or attempting to impair the administration of justice, they are immune. Justice is not a cloistered virtue; she must be allowed to suffer the scrutiny and respectful even though outspoken comments of ordinary men."

In view of the unconditional apology tendered by the respondents and the undertaking given by them to give wide publicity to their regret, we have decided to drop further proceedings and we accept the apology and discharge the rule without any order as to costs.

Industrial Disputes Act (XIV of 1947), section 10—Scope—Power of Government to refer disputes—Essentials for exercise of—Reference without specifying the disputes—Validity—Award by tribunal—Prosecution for non-implementation after expiry of award—Legality.

Non-implementation of an award is an offence made punishable under section 29 of the Industrial Disputes Act which is a permanent statute and when a party committed the alleged breach of some of the terms of the award which was in force at the time, that party incurred the liability to be prosecuted under the Act. The fact that the award subsequently expired cannot affect that liability.

The disputes referred to a Tribunal under section 10 (1) (c) of the Act, in order that the resulting award may be binding on any particular industrial establishment and its employees, need not have actually arisen between them.

5th December, 1952.

Section 10 of the Act does not require that the particular dispute should be mentioned in the order of reference of the Government, it is sufficient if the existence of a dispute and the fact that the dispute is referred to the Tribunal are clear from the order. This is, however, not to say that the Government will be justified in making a reference under section 10 (1) without satisfying itself on the facts and circumstances brought to its notice that an industrial dispute exists or is apprehended in relation to an establishment or a definite group of establishment engaged in a particular industry. It is also desirable that the Government should wherever possible indicate the nature of the dispute in the order of reference. But it must be remembered that in making a reference under section 10 (1) the Government is doing an administrative act and the fact that it has to form an opinion as to the factual existence of an industrial dispute as a preliminary step to the discharge of its function does not make it any the less administrative in character. The Court cannot therefore canvas the order of reference closely to see if there was a judicial or quasi-judicial determination. No doubt, it will be open to a party seeking to impugn the resulting award to show that what was referred by the Government was not an industrial dispute within the meaning of the Act, and that, therefore, the Tribunal had no jurisdiction to make the award. But, if the dispute was an industrial dispute as defined by the Act, its factual existence and the expediency of making a reference in the circumstances of a particular case are matters entirely for the Government to decide upon, and it will not be competent for the Court to hold the reference bad and quash the proceedings for want of jurisdiction merely because there was, in its opinion, no material before the Government on which it could have come to an affirmative conclusion on those matters.

No obligation can be held to lie on the Government to ascertain particulars of the disputes before making a reference under section 10 (1) or to specify them in the order.

In view of the increasing complexity of modern life and the interdependence of the various sectors of a planned national economy, it is obviously in the interest of the public that labour disputes should be peacefully and quickly settled within the framework of the Act rather than by resort to methods of direct action which are only too well calculated to disturb the public peace and order and diminish production in the country, and Courts should not be astute to discover formal defects and technical flaws to overthrow such settlements.

Appeal under Article 132 (1) of the Constitution of India from the Judgment¹ and Order, dated the 15th November, 1950, of the High Court of Judicature at Madras (Menon and Sayeed, JJ.) in Criminal Miscellaneous Petition No. 1278 of 1950.

V. K. T. Chari, Advocate-General of Madras (Ganapathy Iyer, Advocate, with him), for Appellant.

K. S. Krishnaswamy Iyengar, Senior Advocate (K. Venkataramani, Advocate, with him), for Respondent No. 1.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENTS: Patanjali Sastri, C.J. (Mukherjee, Chandrasekhara Aiyar and Ghulam Hasan, JJ., concurring).—This is an appeal from an order of the High Court of Judicature at Madras quashing certain criminal proceedings instituted in the Court of the Third Presidency Magistrate, Madras, against the first respondent who is the managing director of a cinema company carrying on business in Madras under the name of "Prabhat Talkies."

The proceeding arose out of a charge-sheet filed by the police against the first respondent for an offence under section 29 of the Industrial Disputes Act, 1947 (hereinafter referred to as the Act). The charge was that the first respondent failed to implement certain terms of an award, dated 15th December, 1947, made by the Industrial Tribunal, Madras, appointed under the Act and thereby committed a breach of those terms which were binding on him.

The first respondent raised a preliminary objection before the Magistrate that the latter had no jurisdiction to proceed with the enquiry because the award on which the prosecution was based was void and ultra vires and void on the ground that the reference to the Industrial Tribunal which resulted in the award was not made by the Government in accordance with the requirements of section 10 of the Act. As the Magistrate refused to deal with the objection as a preliminary point, the first respondent applied to the High Court under Article 226 of Constitution for a writ of certiorari to quash the proceeding pending before the Magistrate. The application was heard in the first instance by a single Judge who referred the matter to a Division Bench in view of the important questions involved, and it was accordingly heard and decided by Govinda Menon and Basheer Ahmed Sayeed, JJ., who upheld the objection and quashed the proceeding by their order¹ dated 15th November, 1950. From that order the State of Madras has preferred this appeal.

The second respondent, the South Indian Cinema Employees' Association (hereinafter referred to as the Association) is a registered trade union whose members are employees of various cinema companies carrying on business in the State of Madras. Among these are the 24 cinema houses operating in the City of Madras, including the "Prabhat Talkies". On 8th November, 1946, the Association submitted to the Labour Commissioner of Madras, who had also been appointed as the Conciliation Officer under the Act, a memorandum setting forth certain demands against the employers for increased wages and dearness allowance, annual bonus of three months' wages, increased leave facilities, provident fund, and adoption of proper procedure in imposing punishment and requesting the Officer to settle the disputes as the employers were unwilling to concede the demands. After meeting the representatives of the employees and the employers, the Labour Commissioner suggested on 28th April, 1947, certain "minimum terms" which he invited the employers and the union officials to accept. The managers of six cinema companies in the City including "Prabhat Talkies" agreed to accept the terms but the managements of other companies did not intimate acceptance or non-acceptance. It would appear that, in the meantime, a meeting was convened on 22nd February, 1947, of the employees of four cinema companies including "Prabhat Talkies". Ninety-four out of 139 workers attended the meeting and resolutions were passed to the effect that no action need be taken about the demands of the Association as the managements of those companies agreed to some improvement in the matter of wages and leave facilities and promised to look into the workers' grievances if they were real. But as the terms suggested by the Labour Commissioner were not accepted by all the employers, the representatives of the Association met that Officer on 13th May, 1947 and reported that the Association had decided to go on strike on any day after 20th May, 1947, if their demands were not conceded. As the conciliation proceedings of the Labour Commissioner thus failed to bring about a settlement of the dispute, he made a report on 13th May, 1947, to the State Government as required by section 12 (4) of the Act stating the steps taken by him to effect a settlement and why they proved unsuccessful. In that report, after mentioning the minimum terms suggested by him and enumerating the ten demands put forward by the employees, the Labour Commissioner stated as follows :

"As the employers have not accepted even the minimum terms suggested by me and as the employees are restive, I apprehend that they may strike work at any time. I therefore suggest that the above demands made by the workers may be referred to an Industrial Tribunal for adjudication. I have advised the workers to defer further action on their notice pending the orders of Government," and he concluded by suggesting the appointment of a retired District and Sessions Judge as the sole member of the Special Industrial Tribunal "to adjudicate on this dispute".

Thereupon the Government issued the G.O. Ms. No. 2227; dated 20th May, 1947, in the following terms :

"Whereas an industrial dispute has arisen between the workers and managements of the cinema talkies in the Madras City in respect of certain matters ;

And Whereas in the opinion of His Excellency the Governor of Madras, it is necessary to refer the said industrial dispute for adjudication ;

Now, therefore, in exercise of the powers conferred by section 7 (1) and (2) read with section 10 (1) (c) of the Industrial Disputes Act, 1947, H.E. the Governor of Madras hereby constitutes an Industrial Tribunal consisting of one person, namely, Sri Diwan Bahadur K. S. Ramaswami Sastri, Retired District and Sessions Judge, and directs that the said industrial dispute be referred to that Tribunal for adjudication.

The Industrial Tribunal may, in its discretion, settle the issues in the light of a preliminary enquiry which it may hold for the purpose and thereafter adjudicate on the said industrial dispute.

The Commissioner of Labour is requested to send copies of the order to the managements of cinema talkies concerned."

The Tribunal sent notices to all the 24 cinema companies in the City and to the Association calling upon them to file statements of their respective cases and to appear before it on 7th July, 1947. Pleadings were accordingly filed on both sides and the Tribunal framed as many as 22 Issues of which Issue (3) is material here and runs thus :

• "Is there a dispute between the managements of the City theatres and their respective employees justifying the reference by the Government to the Industrial Tribunal for adjudication? Whether such an objection is tenable in law?"

It appears to have been claimed on behalf of some of these companies including "Prabhat Talkies" that so far as they were concerned there was no dispute between the management and their employees and therefore they should not be included in the reference or the award. The Tribunal repelled this argument observing :

"That even if some of the theatres have got a staff contented with their lot there is a substantial dispute in the industry taken as a whole. After I arrive at my decision about the basic wages, increments, dearness allowance, etc., the same will bind the industry as a whole in the City of Madras if the Government accepts and implements my award."

The Tribunal accordingly held that none of the cinema companies should be "removed from the ambit of this industrial dispute and adjudication". It also found as a matter of fact that "the idyllic picture of industrial peace and contentment" put forward by the first respondent's company was not justified by the evidence. Issue No. 3 was thus found for the Association. The Tribunal finally passed its award on 15th December, 1947, which was confirmed by the Government on 13th February, 1948 and was declared binding on the workers and the managements with effect from 25th February, 1948, the date of its publication in the Fort St. George Gazette, for a period of one year from that date. It is alleged that the first respondent failed to implement certain provisions of the award when their implementation was due and thereby committed an offence punishable under section 29 of the Act.

No prosecution, however, was instituted till 24th April, 1950; as in the meanwhile, certain decisions of the Madras High Court tended to throw doubt on the validity of references made in general terms without specifying the particular disputes or the groups of workers and managements between whom such disputes existed, and legislation was considered necessary to validate awards passed on such references. Accordingly, the Industrial Disputes (Madras Amendment) Act, 1949, was passed on 10th April, 1949, purporting to provide, inter alia, that all awards made by any Industrial Tribunal constituted before the commencement of that Act shall be deemed to be valid and shall not be called in question in any Court of law on the ground that the dispute to which the award relates was not referred to the Tribunal in accordance with the provisions of the Industrial Disputes Act, 1947 (section 5). It also purported to validate certain specified awards including "the award in the disputes between the managements of cinema theatres and workers" (section 6), which obviously refers to the award under consideration in these proceedings.

In support of his application to the High Court the first respondent herein raised three contentions. First, the Government had no jurisdiction to make the reference in question as there was no dispute between the management and workers of "Prabhat Talkies" and, therefore, the reference and the award in so far as they related to the first respondent were ultra vires and void; secondly, in any case the notification by the Government purporting to refer an industrial dispute to the Tribunal was not competent under the Act, inasmuch as it did not refer to any specific disputes as arising for adjudication and did not mention the companies or firms in which the disputes are said to have existed or were apprehended; and, thirdly, the Madras Amendment Act was unconstitutional and void under section 107 of the Government of India Act, 1935, being repugnant to the provisions of the Central Industrial Disputes Act, 1947, and also void under Article 13 (1) read with Article 14 of the Constitution as being discriminatory in character. The learned Judges, by separate but concurring judgments, upheld these contentions and issued a certificate under Article 132 (1) of the Constitution as the case raised substantial questions of law regarding the interpretation of the Constitution. As we considered that the contentions of the appellant on the first two points must prevail, we did not hear arguments on the constitutional issue.

Before dealing with the main contentions of the parties, we may dispose of a minor point raised by Mr. Krishnaswami Aiyangar, for the first time before us, namely, that the prosecution of the first respondent for the alleged breach of some of the terms of the Tribunal's award is unsustainable inasmuch as it was instituted after the expiry of the award. In support of this argument learned counsel invoked the analogy of the cases where it has been held that a prosecution for an offence under a temporary statute could not be commenced, or having been commenced when the statute was in force, could not be continued after its expiry. Those decisions have no application here. The first respondent is prosecuted for an offence made punishable under section 29 of the Act which is a permanent statute and when he committed the alleged breach of some of the terms of the award, which was in force at the time, he incurred the liability to be prosecuted under the Act. The fact that the award subsequently expired cannot affect that liability.

On behalf of the appellant, the Advocate-General of Madras urged that the question whether there existed an industrial dispute when the Government made the reference now under consideration was an issue of fact which the High Court ought not to have found in the negative at this preliminary stage before evidence was recorded by the trial Court. He submitted, however, that, on the facts already appearing on the record, there could be no reasonable doubt that an industrial dispute did exist at the relevant time. We are inclined to agree. The ten demands set forth in the Labour Commissioner's letter of the 13th May, 1947, which were not agreed to by the managements of the 24 cinema theatres in Madras clearly constituted industrial disputes within the meaning of the Act. Basheer Ahmed Sayeed, J., with whom the other learned Judge concurred, says :

"There is nothing in the letter of the Commissioner which would indicate that these demands made by the South Indian Cinema Employees' Association were referred to the respective owners of the cinema houses in the City of Madras as a body or to any of them individually."

This, we think, is based on a misapprehension of the true facts. The demands were identical with those mentioned in the Association's memorandum originally submitted on the 8th November, 1946, and they formed the subject of discussion with the representatives of the cinema companies in the City in the course of the conciliation proceedings. That memorandum, which was not made part of the record in the Court below, was produced here, and Mr. Krishnaswami Aiyangar was satisfied that the demands referred to in that memorandum were the same as those mentioned in the Labour Commissioner's letter of 13th May, 1947, of which all the employers were thus fully aware. Nor is it correct to say :

"that the disputes, if any, which might have existed between the workmen of the petitioner's cinema and the petitioner himself had been settled by the petitioner's ready and willing acceptance of the terms suggested by the Commissioner."

The terms accepted by the first respondent were what the Commissioner called "the minimum terms" and were by no means the same as the demands put forward by the Association, which were never accepted by the Association. The Commissioner's letter of the 13th May, 1947, made this clear.

But, in truth, it was not material to consider whether there was any dispute outstanding between the first respondent and his employees when the Government made the reference on 20th May, 1947. The learned Judges appear to have assumed that the disputes referred to a Tribunal under section 10 (1) (c) of the Act must, in order that the resulting award may be binding on any particular industrial establishment and its employees, have actually arisen between them.

"Analysing the order of reference of the Madras Government now under consideration", the learned Judges observe:

"It is obvious that there is no mention of the existence of any dispute between the petitioner (the first respondent herein) and his workmen. . . . In fact there was no dispute to be referred to a Tribunal so far as this petitioner is concerned. If, therefore, there was no jurisdiction to make any reference, it follows that the whole reference and the award are both invalid and not binding on the petitioner."

This view gives no effect to the words "or is apprehended" in section 10 (1). In the present case, the Government referred "an industrial dispute between the workers and managements of cinema talkies in Madras City in respect of certain matters." As pointed out in the Labour Commissioner's letter to the Government, there were 24 cinema companies in Madras, and the Association, which, as a duly registered trade union, represented their employees, put forward the demands on behalf of the employees of all the cinema houses in the City. Fifteen out of 43 workers of the "Prabhat Talkies" were admittedly members of the Association which thus figured as one of the parties to the dispute. In that situation, the Government may have thought, without a close examination of the conditions in each individual establishment, that disputes which affected the workmen collectively existed in the cinema industry in the City and that, even if such disputes had not actually arisen in any particular establishment, they could, having regard to their collective nature, well be apprehended as imminent in respect of that establishment also. It is not denied that notices were sent by the Tribunal to all the 24 companies and they all filed written statements of their case in answer to the demands made by the Association on behalf of the employees. In these circumstances, it is idle to claim that the Government had no jurisdiction to make the reference and that the award was not binding on the respondent's organisation. The latter was clearly bound by the award under section 18 of the Act.

It was next contended that the reference was not competent as it was too vague and general in its terms containing no specification of the disputes or of the parties between whom the disputes arose. Stress was laid on the definite article in clause (c) and it was said that the Government should crystallise the disputes before referring them to a Tribunal under section 10 (1) of the Act. Failure to do so vitiated the proceedings and the resulting award. In upholding this objection Govinda Menon, J., who dealt with it in greater detail in his judgment, said,

"secondly, it is contended that the reference does not specify the dispute at all. What is stated in the reference is that an industrial dispute has arisen between the workers and the managements of the cinema talkies in the City of Madras in respect of certain matters. Awards based on similar references have been the subject of consideration in this Court recently. In *Ramayya Pantulu v. Kutty and Rao (Engineers), Ltd.*¹, Horwill and Rajagopalan, JJ., had to consider an award based on similar references without specifying what the dispute was."

After referring to the decision of the Federal Court in *India Paper Pulp Co., Ltd. v. India Paper Pulp Workers' Union*², and pointing out that though the judgment of the Federal Court was delivered on 30th March, 1949, it was not referred to by the High Court in *Kandan Textile, Ltd. v. Industrial Tribunal, Madras*³, which was decided on 26th August, 1949, the learned Judge expressed the view that "the trend of decisions of this Court exemplified in the cases referred to by me above has not been overruled by their Lordships of the Federal Court".

Basheer Ahmed Sayeed, J., however, sought to distinguish the decision of the Federal Court on the facts of that case, remarking "that a reading of the order of reference that was the subject-matter of the Federal Court decision conveys a clear idea as to a definite dispute its nature and existence and the parties between whom the dispute existed".

1. (1949) 1 M.L.J. 231.

348: (1949) F.L.J. 367 (F.C.).

2. (1950) 1 M.L.J. 270: (1949-50) F.C.R.

3. (1949) 2 M.L.J. 789.

It is, however, clear from the order of reference which is fully extracted in the judgment that it did not mention what the particular dispute was, and it was in repelling the objection based on that omission that Kania, C.J., said :

"The section does not require that the particular dispute should be mentioned in the order ; it is sufficient if the existence of a dispute and the fact that the dispute is referred to the Tribunal are clear from the order. To that extent the order does not appear to be defective. Section 10 of the Act, however, requires a reference of the dispute to the Tribunal. The Court has to read the order as a whole and determine whether in effect the order makes such a reference."

This is, however, not to say that the Government will be justified in making a reference under section 10 (1) without satisfying itself on the facts and circumstances brought to its notice that an industrial dispute exists or is apprehended in relation to an establishment or a definite group of establishments engaged in a particular industry. It is also desirable that the Government should, wherever possible, indicate the nature of the dispute in the order of reference. But, it must be remembered that in making a reference under section 10 (1) the Government is doing an administrative act and the fact that it has to form an opinion as to the factual existence of an industrial dispute as a preliminary step to the discharge of its function does not make it any the less administrative in character. The Court cannot, therefore, canvass the order of reference closely to see if there was any material before the Government to support its conclusion, as if it was a judicial or quasi-judicial determination. No doubt it will be open to a party seeking to impugn the resulting award to show that what was referred by the Government was not an industrial dispute within the meaning of the Act, and that, therefore, the Tribunal had no jurisdiction to make the award. But, if the dispute was an industrial dispute as defined in the Act, its factual existence and the expediency of making a reference in the circumstances of a particular case are matters entirely for the Government to decide upon, and it will not be competent for the Court to hold the reference bad and quash the proceedings for want of jurisdiction merely because there was, in its opinion, no material before the Government on which it could have come to an affirmative conclusion on those matters. The observations in some of the decisions in Madras do not appear to have kept this distinction in view.

Moreover, it may not always be possible for the Government, on the material placed before it, to particularise the dispute in its order of reference, for situations might conceivably arise where public interest requires that a strike or a lock-out either existing or imminent, should be ended or averted without delay, which, under the scheme of the Act, could be done only after the dispute giving rise to it has been referred to a Board or a Tribunal (vide sections 10 (3) and 23). In such cases the Government must have the power, in order to maintain industrial peace and production, to set in motion the machinery of settlement with its sanctions and prohibitions without stopping to enquire what specific points the contending parties are quarrelling about, and it would seriously detract from the usefulness of the statutory machinery to construe section 10 (1) as denying such power to the Government. We find nothing in the language of that provision to compel such construction. The Government must, of course, have sufficient knowledge of the nature of the dispute to be satisfied that it is an industrial dispute within the meaning of the Act, as, for instance, that it relates to retrenchment or reinstatement. But, beyond this no obligation can be held to lie on the Government to ascertain particulars of the disputes before making a reference under section 10 (1) or to specify them in the order.

This conclusion derives further support from clause (a) of section 10 (1) which provides in the same language for a reference of the dispute to a Board for promoting a settlement. A Board is part of the conciliation machinery provided by the Act, and it cannot be said that it is necessary to specify the dispute in referring it to such a body which only mediates between the parties who must, of course, know what they are disputing about. If a reference without particularising the disputes is beyond cavil under clause (a) why should it be incompetent under clause (c)? No doubt, the Tribunal adjudicates, whereas the Board only mediates.

But the adjudication by the Tribunal is only an alternative form of settlement of the disputes on a fair and just basis having regard to the prevailing conditions in the industry and is by no means analogous to what an arbitrator has to do in determining ordinary civil disputes according to the legal rights of the parties. Indeed, this notion that a reference to a Tribunal under the Act must specify the particular disputes appears to have been derived from the analogy of an ordinary arbitration. For instance, in *Ramayya Pantulu v. Kuity and Rao (Engineers), Ltd.*¹, it is observed :

•“ that if a dispute is to be referred to a Tribunal the nature of the dispute must be set out just as it would if a reference were made to an arbitrator in a civil dispute. The Tribunal like any other arbitrator can give an award on a reference only if the points of reference are clearly placed before it.”

The analogy is somewhat misleading. The scope of adjudication by a Tribunal under the Act is much wider as pointed out in the *Western India Automobile Association's case*², and it would involve no hardship if the reference also is made in wider terms provided, of course, the dispute is one of the kind described in section 2 (k) and the parties between whom such dispute has actually arisen or is apprehended in the view of the Government are indicated either individually or collectively with reasonable clearness. The rules framed under the Act provide for the Tribunal calling for statements of their respective cases from the parties and the disputes would thus get crystallised before the Tribunal proceeds to make its award. On the other hand, it is significant that there is no procedure provided in the Act or in the rules for the Government ascertaining the particulars of the disputes from the parties before referring them to a Tribunal under section 10 (1).

In view of the increasing complexity of modern life and the interdependence of the various sectors of a planned national economy, it is obviously in the interest of the public that labour disputes should be peacefully and quickly settled within the frame-work of the Act rather than by resort to methods of direct action which are only too well calculated to disturb the public peace and order and diminish production in the country, and Courts should not be astute to discover formal defects and technical flaws to overthrow such settlements.

In the result we set aside the order of the High Court and dismiss the first respondent's petition.

Bose, J.—I agree but would have preferred to rest my decision on the grounds that in this case there was sufficient compliance with the terms of section 10 (1) (c) of the Act even on the first respondent's interpretation of it, namely, that the words, “the dispute” require Government to indicate the nature of the dispute which the Tribunal is required to settle. I say this because, in my judgment, we must read the order of the 20th May, 1947, along with the documents which accompanied it. I also agree that one must not be over-technical, but had it not been for the fact that the point is now settled by the decision in the *India Paper Pulp Company's case*³, I would have been inclined to consider that an indication of the nature of the dispute, either in the order itself or in the papers accompanying it, was necessary. However, that is now settled and I have no desire to go behind the decision but I would like to say that even if it is not legally necessary to indicate the nature of the dispute, it is, in my opinion, desirable that that should be done.

East Punjab Cotton Cloth and Yarn (Regulation of Movement) Order (1947)—Constitutional validity—Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Act (XXIV of 1946), section 4—Delegation of power under to Governor—Scope.

Constitution of India (1950), Article 132 (1)—Appeal on certificate under—Other questions—When can be challenged—Proper procedure.

The provisions of the East Punjab Cotton Cloth and Yarn (Regulation of Movement) Order (1947) which prohibit inter alia the export of certain commodities to any country outside India without a permit and make the violation of such provisions an offence, were validly made by the Governor in exercise of the powers delegated to him under section 4 of the Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Act, 1946.

As the main object of the legislation Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Act was the continuance of control over the production, supply and distribution of commodities considered essential to the community and as these are, provincial subjects, the Central Legislature in legislating on them invoked the powers conferred upon it by Statutes IX and X, George VI, Chapter 39. But from this it cannot be argued that the Central Legislature was legislating only in exercise of the powers which it derived from the British Parliament and that it did not exercise the powers which it itself had under the Government of India Act (1935). The Central Government was fully competent to legislate on exports and imports which are Central subjects and in making any provision relating thereto it cannot be said that it acted in excess of its authority.

Even taking the legislation to be purely on the Provincial subjects of production, distribution and supply of goods, restriction of exports as ancillary to production and supply of essential commodities would be quite within the scope and ambit of such legislation and in pith and substance it would be an enactment dealing exclusively with these Provincial matters.

The scope and purpose of this Act was totally different from that of the Imports and Exports Control Act (XVIII of 1947) and there was nothing wrong if they existed side by side and were in operation at one and the same time. As the Legislature was competent to enact both sets of provisions any occasional overlapping, even if it is assumed to exist would not be material.

In appeals brought before the Supreme Court on the strength of a certificate granted under Article 132 (1) of the Constitution the appellants are not entitled to challenge the propriety of the decision appealed against on a ground other than that on which the certificate was given except with the leave of Court as provided for by clause (3) of Article 132 of the Constitution. Where it is found that the High Court relied on a supposed admission (which was not in fact made) the Court will interfere if it has resulted in grave miscarriage of justice and order a retrial. The function of the Supreme Court which is not an ordinary court of criminal appeal, is not so much to weigh and appraise the evidence again, to find out the guilt or innocence of the accused as to see that the accused gets a fair trial on proper evidence.

Appeals under Article 132 (1) of the Constitution of India from the Judgment and Order dated the 5th April, 1950, of the High Court of Judicature for the State of Punjab at Simla (Khosla, J.) in Criminal Revision Nos. 1144 and 1147 of 1949.

Achhru Ram, Senior Advocate (Gopal Singh, Advocate, with him), for Appellant in Case No. 11 of 1950 and S. M. Sikri, Advocate-General of Punjab and Umrigar (H. S. Gujral, Advocate, with them), for Appellant in Case No. 12 of 1950.

M. C. Setalvad, Attorney-General for India (B. Sen, Advocate, with him), for the Intervener.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Mukherjea, J.—The facts giving rise to these two connected appeals may be briefly narrated as follows :—Darshan Singh, the appellant in Case No. 11 and

*Case Nos. 11 and 12 of 1950.

Attar Singh, who is the appellant in Case No. 12 along with three other persons were tried by the Special Magistrate, Ambala, East Punjab, on charges under section 120-B of the Indian Penal Code, read with section 3/10 of the East Punjab Cotton Cloth and Yarn (Regulation of Movement) Order, 1947, and section 7 of the Essential Supplies Act, 1946. There was a further charge under section 8 of the Essential Supplies Act against three of these accused, Darshan Singh, being one of them.

The allegation against all the accused, in substance, was that they conspired to export 76 bags of mill-made cloth to Pakistan without a permit, by smuggling them through the customs barrier near Wagha, on the morning of the 26th May, 1948. Wagha is about 18 miles from Amritsar; and at a distance of nearly half a mile from this place lies the actual Indo-Pakistan border. Between the customs barrier and the border there is a small Police Post and almost opposite the Police Post is the Customs Office which is located in a tent. The prosecution case is that at about 7 A.M., on the 26th of May, 1948, a truck, loaded with a large quantity of mill-made cloth owned by the accused Ram Singh, arrived at the customs barrier near Wagha. Rajendra Singh, another accused, who was on duty at that time as the Customs Supervisor, allowed the truck to pass through and the truck stopped near the Customs Office on the side of the Police Post. As soon as the truck stopped, Darshan Singh, who was the Deputy Superintendent in charge of the customs barrier, and Attar Singh, who was a Customs Preventive Officer at Amritsar and was then under order of transfer to some other place, went to the Police Station and asked Kulraj, the Sub-Inspector in charge of the same, to allow the lorry to pass through upto the border. Kulraj did not accede to this request and thereupon both Darshan Singh and Attar Singh went back to the Customs tent. The truck was then unloaded and the goods were handed over to a large number of coolies who began carrying them towards the border, being followed by both Attar Singh and Ram Singh. A little later, Kailash Chandra, a Police Sub-Inspector of Amritsar, who was at that time, on special duty in connection with checking and detection of smuggling cases, arrived at the place on a motor-bicycle and being informed by Kulraj of what had happened before, both he and Kulraj proceeded in his motor-cycle towards the border and overtook the coolies who were carrying the goods. The coolies were rounded up and brought back to the border along with Attar Singh, though Ram Singh managed to slip away. Kailash Chandra made a report of the occurrence to Inder Singh, who was the head of the Special Police Establishment at Delhi dealing with smuggling cases, and after a detailed investigation, the five accused were sent up to take their trial. The trying Magistrate convicted all of them under section 120-B of the Indian Penal Code, read with section 3/10 of the East Punjab Cotton Cloth and Yarn Order, 1947, and sentenced them to rigorous imprisonment for a period of one year each. Attar Singh was further convicted under section 7 of the Essential Supplies Act and Darshan Singh under section 8 of the said Act, and there was a sentence of one year's rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 1,000 upon each one of them under these sections, the sentence of rigorous imprisonment to run concurrently with that on the previous charges.

Against this judgment there was an appeal taken by all the accused to the Court of the Sessions Judge at Amritsar. The Additional Sessions Judge, who heard the appeal, acquitted two of the accused but maintained the conviction of the other three, namely, Attar Singh, Ram Singh and Darshan Singh, though their sentences were reduced. Thereupon these three persons presented three separate revision petitions to the High Court of East Punjab at Simla which were heard and disposed of by Mr. Justice Khosla sitting singly. The learned Judge dismissed the revision petitions but granted a certificate under Article 132 of the Constitution on the ground that the cases involved a substantial question of law as to the interpretation of the Constitution. It is on the strength of this certificate that these two appeals have come before us, one being filed by Darshan Singh and the other by Attar Singh. No appeal has been preferred by the accused Ram Singh.

The constitutional point involved in these appeals has been presented before us very lucidly by Mr. Achhru Ram who appeared on behalf of Darshan Singh, the appellant in Case No. 11, and his contention, in substance, is that the East Punjab Cotton Cloth and Yarn Order, 1947, which was promulgated by the Governor of East Punjab by notification dated 15th November, 1947, and under the provisions of which the prosecution was launched against the accused, was ultra vires the authority of the Governor, in so far as it purported to legislate on matters of export and import across the customs frontier; and consequently the accused could not be held guilty of any offence for having violated such provisions.

For a proper appreciation of the contention raised by the learned counsel, it would be necessary to refer to certain provisions of the Government of India Act, 1935, as well as to those of a number of later enactments. Under entries 27 and 29 of List II of the Government of India Act, 1935, "trade and commerce within the province" and "production..... supply and distribution of goods" were provincial subjects, while "import and export across the customs frontier" was a central subject being covered by item 19 in List I. Section 102 of the Government of India Act, 1935, gave the Central Legislature the power to legislate on provincial subjects if and when a proclamation was issued by the Governor-General that a state of emergency existed in the country, and such legislation would, under sub-section (4) of the section, cease to have effect on the expiration of a period of six months after the proclamation had ceased to operate. It appears that these extraordinary powers were assumed by the Central Legislature during the period of the last war when there was a Proclamation of Emergency by the Governor-General, and the Defence of India Rules promulgated during this period dealt with various provincial matters. The Proclamation of Emergency was revoked by the Governor-General under section 102, clause (3) of the Constitution Act on 1st April, 1946, and the result of the revocation was that all orders passed on the basis of the Defence of India Act or the Defence of India Rules ceased to be operative after the 30th of September, 1946. The state of the country, however, was at that time far from normal and it was considered necessary that the control of the Central Legislature over the production, supply and distribution of goods should not be discontinued. To meet this situation, the British Parliament passed a temporary Act (IX and X, Geo. VI chapter 39) which gave the Indian Legislature, during the period specified in the Act, the power to make laws with regard to certain provincial subjects. The provision of section 2 of the Act, so far as is necessary for our present purpose, stood as follows :

"(1) Notwithstanding anything in the Government of India Act, 1935, the Indian Legislature shall, during the period mentioned in section 4 of this Act, have power to make laws with respect to the following matters :

(a) trade and commerce (whether or not within a Province) in and the production, supply and distribution of, cotton and woollen textiles, paper, petroleum, products, spare parts of mechanically propelled vehicles, coal, iron, steel and mica ;"

Armed with this authority, the Indian Legislature passed the Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Act of 1946, sections 3 and 4 of which are in these terms :—

"3. The Central Government so far as it appears to it necessary or expedient for maintaining or increasing supplies of any essential commodity or for securing their equitable distribution and availability at fair prices may, by notified order provide for regulating and prohibiting the production, supply and distribution thereof and trade and commerce therein.

* * * * *

"4. The Central Government may by notified order direct that the power to make orders under section 3 shall in relation to such matters and subject to such conditions, if any, as may be specified in the direction, be exercisable also by

(a) * * * * *

(b) such Provincial Government or such officer or authority subordinate to a Provincial Government as may be specified in the direction."

By a notification dated 20th of December, 1946, issued under section 4 mentioned above, the Central Government delegated to the Governor of Punjab the powers under section 3 of the Act. On the 15th of November, 1947, the Governor of East Punjab, in exercise of the powers delegated by the said notification, passed the East Punjab Cotton Cloth and Yarn (Regulation of Movement) Order, 1947, and sections 2, 3 and 10 of the Order are material for our present purpose. Section 2 is in these terms :—

“ In this Order unless there is anything repugnant in the subject or context, (a) “ export ” means to take out of the Province of the East Punjab or the said land by rail, road or river to any Province or State of the Dominion of India and Pakistan and includes taking out of the Province of East Punjab to any place, situated in the said lands as well as out of the said lands to any place situated in the East Punjab.”

Section 3 runs as follows :—

“ No person shall export or attempt to export cotton cloth or yarn except under the authority and in accordance with the conditions of a permit issued by a permit issuing authority The permit shall be in form IV, specified in Schedule ‘ A ’ annexed to this Order.”

Section 10 provides :—

“ If any person contravenes any provision of this Order, he shall be punishable with imprisonment which may extend to 3 years, with fine or both and without prejudice to any other general punishment which may be imposed by any court trying such contravention may direct that any cotton cloth and/or yarn in respect of which the court is satisfied that this order has been contravened together with the covering and packing of such cloth shall be forfeited to His Majesty.”

The point for our consideration is, whether the above provisions which prohibit inter alia the export of certain essential commodities to any country outside India without a permit and make the violation of such provisions an offence, were validly made by the Governor in exercise of the powers delegated to him under section 4 of the Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Act, 1946?

It is not suggested by the learned counsel that there was anything improper in the Central Government's delegating its powers to the Governor of East Punjab under section 4 of the Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Act. His contention is that the Governor, in making the order, acted in excess of his delegated authority by prohibiting the export of cotton cloth and yarn to any place outside India. Matters of export and import, it is said, were not within the scope of section 3 of the Essential Supplies Act, and the notification under section 4 could only delegate to the Governor such powers as the Central Government could itself exercise under section 3. Section 3 of the Essential Supplies Act, it is true, authorised the Central Government to make provisions for regulating and prohibiting the production, supply and distribution of the essential commodities specified in the Act and also trade and commerce therein ; but it is argued by the learned counsel that the expression “ trade and commerce,” as used in the section, must be taken to mean trade and commerce within a province or at the most between provinces inter se, but it cannot include any transaction by way of exporting goods outside India. This interpretation, somewhat restricted as it appears to us, is sought to be supported by a two-fold argument. In the first place, it is said, that the Essential Supplies Act, as its preamble shows, was passed by the Central Legislature in exercise of the authority conferred upon it by the Statute IX and X, George VI Chapter 39 and that statute conferred, only for a short period of time, a power in the Central Indian Legislature to legislate on certain provincial matters, which it could not do after the revocation of the Proclamation of Emergency on the termination of the war. It is said, therefore, that the Essential Supplies Act purported to deal exclusively with provincial matters, and import and export of goods outside the Indian territory, being a central subject, could not reasonably be brought within the purview of the Act. The other line of reasoning that is put forward in support of the argument is, that the intention of the Central Legislature not to include export and import within the provisions of the Essential Supplies Act is evidenced by the fact that the Central Legislature dealt with export and import of goods separately and by an altogether different set of enactments which existed side by side with the Essential Supplies Act and other legislation of the same type preceding it. It is pointed out that there was an order made under the Defence of India Rules on 3rd November, 1945 (being Order No. 91 c.w. (1) 45) imposing prohibitions on export of various descriptions of goods specified therein.

The Defence of India Rules were due to expire on the 30th September, 1946. On the 25th September, 1946, the Essential Supplies Ordinance was passed and this was later replaced by the Essential Supplies Act. On the very day that this Ordinance was passed, another Ordinance, being Ordinance No. XX of 1946, was promulgated, which inter alia continued the provisions of the Defence of India Rules relating to prohibition and restriction of import and export of goods. Subsequently on the 25th of March, 1947, the Imports and Exports (Control) Act was passed, which dealt comprehensively with the subject of control over exports and imports. As it would be unnatural to suppose that the Legislature was legislating on the same subject simultaneously by two parallel sets of legislation existing side by side, it is argued that export and import of goods were not within the scope and intendment of the Essential Supplies Act.

These arguments though somewhat plausible at first sight, do not appear to us to be sound or convincing. It is a cardinal rule of interpretation that the language used by the legislature is the true depository of the legislative intent, and that words and phrases occurring in a statute are to be taken not in an isolated or detached manner dissociated from the context, but are to be read together and construed in the light of the purpose and object of the Act itself.

The object of the Essential Supplies Act, as set out in the preamble, was to provide for the continuance, during a limited period of time, of the power to control the production, supply and distribution of, and trade and commerce in, food-stuffs, cotton and woollen textiles, petroleum, iron and other essential commodities, a list of which appeared in the Act itself. Section 3, which is the most material part of the Act, authorised the Central Government, whenever it considered expedient or necessary, for maintaining or increasing supplies of any essential commodity or for securing their equitable distribution and availability at fair prices, to provide by notified order, for regulating or prohibiting, the production, supply and distribution thereof or trade and commerce therein. Keeping this object in view and reading the words "trade and commerce" in the light of the context, there appears to be no reason why these words should not be taken in their ordinary or natural sense and why restriction on the export of goods to any place, outside a province, including a neighbouring foreign state should be deemed to be outside their scope and ambit. For maintenance or increase of supply of essential commodities within a province and to secure their equitable distribution and availability at fair prices, it might certainly be necessary to restrict export of the goods outside the Province, and Pakistan being a foreign State abutting on the very borders of East Punjab, it was quite natural for the East Punjab Governor to mention Pakistan as one of the places to which export of goods from his province should not be allowed without a proper permit. As the main object of the legislation was the continuance of control over the production, supply and distribution of commodities considered essential to the community and as these are provincial subjects, the Central Legislature in legislating on them must have to invoke the powers conferred upon it by the Statute IX and X George VI Chapter 39 spoken of above; and that is plainly the reason why a reference to that statute was made in the second paragraph of the preamble. But from this it cannot be argued that the Central Legislature was legislating only in exercise of the powers which it derived from the British Parliament and that it did not exercise the powers which it itself had under the Government of India Act. It is not disputed that the Central Legislature was fully competent to legislate on exports and imports which are central subjects and in making any provision relating thereto, it cannot be said that it acted in excess of its authority.

Looked at from this standpoint, the other argument advanced by Mr. Achhru Ram would also be found to be without any substance. The Imports and Exports Act or the earlier Order and Ordinance, referred to by the learned counsel, were legislation essentially on the subject of exports and imports. Their object was to regulate or control imports and exports generally and they dealt with a large variety of articles far outnumbering those enumerated in the Essential Supplies Act. The object of the Imports and Exports Act was not to regulate production and distribution of commodities considered essential to the community and it was not as a means to secure that object that it purported to prohibit or restrict exporting of goods. Thus the scope and purpose of the two sets of legislation were totally different and there was nothing wrong if they existed side by side and were in operation at one and the same time. We are not told that there was any overlapping of the provisions of these two statutes; and as the competency of the Legislature to enact both these sets of provisions is not disputed, we do not think that any occasional overlapping, even if it is assumed to exist, would be at all material. In our opinion, therefore, the contentions raised in regard to the constitutional point involved in these appeals are unsupportable and could not be accepted.

As the appeals have come up before us on the strength of a certificate granted under Article 132 (1) of the Constitution, the appellants are not entitled to challenge the propriety of the decision appealed against on a ground other than that on which the certificate was given except with the leave of this Court as provided for by clause (3) of Article 132 of the Constitution. At the close of the arguments of the parties in regard to the constitutional point referred to above, we made it clear to the learned counsel appearing for both the appellants that we would not allow any question relating to the merits of the cases to be raised before us which turned merely on appreciation of evidence by the courts below. Mr. Umrigar, who appeared for Attar Singh the appellant in Case No. 12, however stated to us that he would crave leave to bring to our notice one important matter which, according to him, resulted in grave miscarriage of justice at least so far as his client was concerned. He pointed out that both the Additional Sessions Judge and the learned Judge of the High Court in deciding the case against his client relied upon an admission alleged to have been made by the latter that he was present at the Customs barrier at Wagha on the morning of the day of occurrence and had gone there to say good-bye to the Customs staff, he being under an Order of transfer from Amritsar to Gurdaspur. It is said by the learned counsel that his client never admitted his presence at the Customs barrier on the morning of 26th May, 1948, and that he neither did nor had any occasion to put forward any explanation regarding his presence there at that time. The whole thing, it is said, is based upon sheer misapprehension and is not warranted by anything appearing on the record.

There is no doubt that the Additional Sessions Judge as well as the High Court did refer in their respective judgments to the alleged admission of Attar Singh and rely upon the same to arrive at their decision in the case. The Additional Sessions Judge said in his judgment :

"The next important man is Attar Singh accused. He admits his presence at the barrier on that morning, when he says that he had gone to bid good-bye to the Customs staff on his transfer to Gurdaspur. According to the leave obtained by him he had yet to remain at Amritsar till 28th and in view of illness of his wife he need not have been in hurry to go to the barrier for this purpose so soon. I am not convinced with his explanation."

The High Court in referring to the said admission observed as follows :

"Attar Singh admitted that he was present at the barrier on that morning but the explanation he gave was this. His office is at Amritsar but he had received orders of transfer to Gurdaspur. His wife was ill and, therefore, he could not move immediately. So he applied for a few days leave, and on the morning of the 26th of May he went to the barrier to say good-bye to his colleagues in the Customs Department and while he was there this incident took place without his knowledge. . . . Attar Singh's explanation of his presence at the spot does not convince me at all."

It appears that in course of the examination of the accused Attar Singh under section 342 of the Criminal Procedure Code before the trial Magistrate a specific question was put to him as to whether he could explain his presence on the scene of occurrence on the 26th May, 1948, although it was alleged that he was on leave. To this question he replied categorically that he was not present as alleged. In this state of the records, we asked the learned Advocate-General, who appeared for the State of East Punjab, as to when and how was the admission referred to above made by Attar Singh? The Advocate-General answered that the admission might be in the written statement which Attar Singh said he would file, when he was interrogated under section 342 of the Criminal Procedure Code. In order to clear up the matter we had the further hearing of the case adjourned to enable the Advocate-General to produce before us the written statement, if any, that was filed by Attar Singh in the trial Court. The case was again taken up for hearing on the 26th of November last and the Advocate-General frankly stated to us that no written statement by Attar Singh was on the records at all. It is clear, therefore, that both the courts below in coming to their decision regarding the guilt of the accused did rely to a considerable extent on the so-called admission of Attar Singh which, it must be held, had no existence in fact. The Advocate-General contends that even if there was an error committed by the courts below in this respect, we should nevertheless dismiss the appeal inasmuch as there is sufficient evidence to support the conviction of the accused independently of the so-called admission of Attar Singh; and he invited us to examine the evidence ourselves and come to our own decision on the point. Without in any way disputing our right to adopt this course in cases where it may be considered necessary, we think that in the circumstances of the present case the proper order to make will be to direct a rehearing of the appeal by the Sessions Court on the evidence as it actually stands after excluding from consideration the alleged admission of Attar Singh. There can be no doubt that the supposed admission was of a very damaging character and was highly prejudicial to the accused. It is quite problematic to value its effect upon the minds of the Judges in the courts below and it is difficult for us to say that had it been excluded from consideration the courts would have come to the same decision of guilt or that conversely a verdict of acquittal would have been a perverse one. In such cases, the function of this Court, which is not an ordinary court of criminal appeal, is not so much to weigh and appraise the evidence again, to find out the guilt or innocence of the accused as to see that the accused gets a fair trial on proper evidence.

It has been argued by Mr. Achhru Ram and in our opinion quite rightly, that if the case of Attar Singh is to be heard afresh, the same order should be made in the case of Darshan Singh as well. Not only are the two cases closely interconnected, but so far as Darshan Singh is concerned the prosecution sought to establish his complicity in the affair primarily by adducing evidence to show that he was in the company of Attar Singh when both of them approached Kulraj, the officer-in-charge of the police station, and requested him to allow the truck to pass through. The Additional Sessions Judge observed in his judgment that the only motive of Darshan Singh was to help his colleague, namely Attar Singh, who was about to leave the district. It is necessary, therefore, that the case of Darshan Singh should also be reheard and the whole evidence against him reconsidered with a view to find out whether he is guilty or innocent.

The result, therefore, is that both the appeals are allowed. The judgment of the High Court as well as that of the Additional Sessions Judge are set aside and the cases remitted to the Sessions Court in order that they may be heard afresh on the evidence on record in the light of the observations made above after excluding from consideration the supposed admission of Attar Singh. Pending the decision of the Sessions Court, the accused would remain on bail on the same terms as before.

• Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Act (XXIV of 1946)—Extension by Resolution of 20th December, 1949, by Constituent Assembly till 31st March, 1951—Validity—Contravention of Act on 24th October, 1950—Offence—Constitution of India (1950), Articles 379 (1) and 372 (1), Explanation III—Scope.

The Constituent Assembly had authority on 25th February, 1948 and again on 23rd March, 1949, to make two successive extensions of the Essential Supplies Act of a year each.

Joylal Agarwala v. The State, (1952) S.C.R. 127 : 1951 S.C.J. 743 (S.C.), relied on.

The Constituent Assembly derived its authority to make the extensions from section 4-A of the India (Central Government and Legislature) Act, 1946. This was an Act of the British Parliament which originally conferred on the British Houses of Parliament the power of approving by resolution the extension of the period fixed by section 4. Later, the Indian Independence Act, 1947, was passed by the British Parliament and in exercise of the powers conferred by sections 9 and 19 of that Act the Governor-General by an Adaptation Order substituted the words "Dominion Legislature," for the words "Houses of Parliament" and thus enabled the Dominion Legislature to exercise the powers of Parliament in that behalf. At the same time, the Governor-General introduced section 4-A into the British Act of 1946, the India (Central Government and Legislature) Act, 1946, by way of adaptation and conferred on the Constituent Assembly the powers of the Dominion Legislature. Thus the Constituent Assembly became empowered to extend the period fixed in section 4 by the passing of a resolution and that in its turn had the effect of extending the life of the Essential Supplies Act of 1946, because section 1 (3) of the Act says that it shall cease to have effect on the expiration of the period mentioned in section 4 of the India (Central Government and Legislature) Act, 1946.

Section 4-A provides that the Constituent Assembly shall have the powers of the Dominion Legislature under the British Act "until other provision is made by or in accordance with a law made by the Constituent Assembly under sub-section (1) of section 8 of the Indian Independence Act, 1947." Section 8 (1) of the Independence Act invested the Constituent Assembly with all the powers of the Dominion Legislature for the purpose of making provision as to the constitution of the Dominion. That power it exercised and drew up the Indian Constitution, but in doing so it decided to bring the Constitution into being in two instalments and it did that by enacting Article 394 and enacting in it that that Article and certain others including Article 379, should come into force "at once"—at once, being the 26th of November, 1949—while the remaining Articles were to come into force on the 26th of January, 1950. Under Article 379, the body functioning as the Constituent Assembly of the Dominion of India immediately before the commencement of the Constitution shall be the Provisional Parliament and exercise all the powers and perform all the duties conferred by the provisions of the Constitution on Parliament. The Constituent Assembly was to continue in existence till 26th January, 1950 and its power could be validly exercised on 20th December, 1949, to extend the life of the Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Act, 1946. The Essential Supplies Act as a law in force immediately before the commencement of the Constitution continued in force because of Article 372 (1), Explanation III until it was due to expire.

The Act was a living Act (extended by a competent body) and a contravention of the provisions of that Act on 24th October, 1951, constituted an offence.

Appeal under Article 132 (1) of the Constitution of India from the Judgment and Order, dated the 11th April, 1951, of the High Court of Judicature at Calcutta (Das Gupta and Mookerjee, JJ.) in Criminal Revision Case No. 1028 of 1950, arising out of the Order, dated the 23rd November, 1950, of the Presidency Magistrate, 8th Court, Calcutta, in P.R. * Case No. 275 of 1951.

• 5th December, 1952.

Bose, J.—This is an appeal under Article 132 (1) of the Constitution. Leave to appeal was granted by the High Court at Calcutta.

The appellant was convicted under section 7 (1) of the Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Act of 1946 for an offence said to have been committed on the 24th of October, 1950. The conviction was on two counts: (1) for selling cloth above the controlled rate and (2) for not issuing a cash memo. The sentence was rigorous imprisonment for three months and a fine of Rs. 200 with another three months in default. The trial was before the 8th Presidency Magistrate at Calcutta who adopted a summary procedure.

There was an application for revision before the High Court but it was dismissed. An application for leave to appeal to this Court was then filed. It was granted on a ground which was not taken either in the original Court or in the revision before the High Court, namely, that the Essential Supplies Act of 1946, under which the appellant was convicted was not in force on the 24th of October, 1950, and so there could be no conviction under it.

The validity of this Act was challenged in *Joylal Agarwala v. The State*¹, but this Court held that the Act was valid up to the 31st of March, 1950, that being the life of the Act at the date relevant to that case. It is necessary to explain that the Act is a temporary Act and that its life has been extended from time to time after the date of its first expiry for a year at a time. The latest extension at the date of the previous case was up to the 31st of March, 1950. We therefore start with the position that the Act was a good Act up till that date.

The Act was further extended up till the 31st of March, 1951, by a Resolution dated the 20th of December, 1949. This is the extension with which we are concerned and which is now challenged, the argument being that there was no legislative body in existence on that date competent to extend the life of the Act for another year.

The Gazette Notification setting out the Resolution is in the following terms:

New Delhi, the 22nd December, 1949.

No. F.—7 WL (1) 47.—The following resolution which was passed by the Constituent Assembly (Legislative) at its meeting held on the 20th of December, 1949, is hereby published for general information:

In pursuance of the proviso to section 4 of the India (Central Government and Legislature) Act, 1946, as adapted by the India (Provisional Constitution) Order, 1947, this Assembly hereby approves the extension of the period mentioned in sections 2 and 3 of the said Act for a further period of twelve months commencing on the first day of April, 1950."

It has to be seen whether the body which passed that Resolution had the power to extend the Act.

It can be accepted, because of the decision in *Joylal Agarwala v. The State*¹ that the Constituent Assembly had authority on 25th February, 1948 and again on 23rd March, 1949, to make two successive extensions of the Essential Supplies Act of a year each. The only question, therefore, is whether any body continued to have that power on the dates material here.

The extensions just referred were brought about as follows. The Constituent Assembly derived its authority to pass the above Resolution from section 4-A of the India (Central Government and Legislature) Act of 1946. This was an Act of the British Parliament which originally conferred on the British Houses of Parliament the power of approving by resolution the extension of the period fixed by section 4. Later, the Indian Independence Act of 1947 was passed by the British Parliament and in exercise of the powers conferred by sections 9 and 19 of that Act the Governor-General by an Adaptation Order substituted the words "Dominion Legislature" for the words "Houses of Parliament" and thus enabled the Dominion Legislature to exercise the powers of Parliament in this behalf. At the same time, the Governor-

1. (1952) S.C.R. 127 at 131 : (1951) S.C.J. 743 (S.C.).

General introduced section 4-A into the British Act of 1946, the India (Central Government and Legislature) Act, 1946, by way of adaptation and conferred on the Constituent Assembly the powers of the Dominion Legislature. Thus the Constituent Assembly became empowered to extend the period fixed in section 4 by the passing of a resolution and that in its turn had the effect of extending the life of the Essential Supplies Act of 1946, because section 1 (3) of that Act says that it shall cease to have effect on the expiration of the period mentioned in section 4 of the India (Central Government and Legislature) Act of 1946.

Now section 4-A provides that the Constituent Assembly shall have the powers of the Dominion Legislature under the British Act

"until other provision is made by or in accordance with a law made by the Constituent Assembly under sub-section (1) of section 8 of the Indian Independence Act, 1947."

Turning to sub-section (1) of section 8 we find that the British Parliament intended the Constituent Assembly with all the powers of the Dominion Legislature

"for the purpose of making provision as to the constitution of the Dominion."

That power it exercised and drew up the Indian Constitution, but in doing so it decided to bring the Constitution into being in two instalments and it did that by enacting Article 394 and enacting in it that that Article and certain others, including Article 379, should come into force "at once"—at once being the 26th of November, 1949—while the remaining Articles were to come into force on the 26th of January, 1950.

Now Article 379 (1) provides that—

"Until both Houses of Parliament have been duly constituted and summoned to meet for the first session under the provisions of this Constitution, the body functioning as the Constituent Assembly of the Dominion of India immediately before the commencement of this Constitution shall be the Provisional Parliament and shall exercise all the powers and perform all the duties conferred by the provisions of this Constitution on Parliament."

It was argued on behalf of the appellant that because of this Article the Constituent Assembly disappeared as a law making body on and after the 26th of November, 1949 and that its place was taken by the Provisional Parliament referred to by that Article, and as the Resolution of the 20th December, 1949, purports to be a resolution of the Constituent Assembly (Legislative) and not of the Provisional Parliament, it is a resolution of a body which no longer had authority to enact laws or pass a resolution of this kind affecting the laws of the land.

The learned Attorney-General argues, on the other hand, that the Constituent Assembly continued to function as such and to retain its right to exercise its dual functions of constitution making and law making right up to the last stroke of midnight on the 25th of January, 1950. The very next second, when a new day ushered in a new era for this country, it ceased to exist as a Constituent Assembly and its place was taken by the Provisional Parliament of India.

We need not decide this point, for even if the Provisional Parliament was intended to function on the 26th of November, 1949 and not from the 26th of January, 1950, it is clear that the Constituent Assembly was to continue in existence till "the commencement of the Constitution" which, by Article 394, is the 26th of January, 1950. Consequently, the power conferred on it as a designated body, by the English statute, as adapted by the Governor-General, could be validly exercised on the 20th of December, 1949 and was so exercised when it passed the resolution of that date. The Provisional Parliament was not a body authorised to exercise the special power of approving the extension of the period mentioned in section 4 of the English statute as that was not one of "the powers conferred by this Constitution on Parliament", nor can bringing the Provisional Parliament into existence on the 26th of November, 1949 (assuming that to be the case) be regarded as "other provision" made by the Constituent Assembly within the meaning of section 4-A of the English Act. It follows the Constituent Assembly was not deprived of these specially designated powers on the date of the Resolution.

The next question is whether the Constituent Assembly had this power to extend the life of this particular piece of legislation beyond the 26th of January, 1950. The question was posed in this way. It was conceded that the Essential Supplies Act was validly extended up to the 31st of March, 1950. The Resolution which extended its life for another year beyond this was passed on the 20th of December, 1949, but it was argued that it could not take effect till after the expiry of the previous extension, that is, not until the 1st of April, 1950. But by that time the Constitution had come into being and so neither the Constituent Assembly nor the Provisional Parliament could have extended the life of the temporary Act after its expiration on the 31st of March, 1950, because of Explanation III to Article 372. It follows that the Constituent Assembly which purported to effect the extension ahead of time could not do, in anticipation, what the Constitution says cannot be done after its commencement.

There is nothing in this contention. The Resolution of the 20th December, 1949, took immediate effect and its effect was to alter the date fixed for the expiration of the period mentioned in section 4 of the English statute from the 31st of March, 1950, to the 31st of March, 1951. The Essential Supplies Act fixed the date for its own expiration as the date fixed for the expiration of the period mentioned in section 4 above. Accordingly, it was an Act which was alive immediately before the 26th of January, 1950 and which was due, at that time, to expire of its own force, not on the 31st of March, 1950, but on the 31st of March, 1951, and as this was a law in force immediately before the commencement of the Constitution it continued in force, because of Article 372 (1) and Explanation III, until it was due to expire.

That exhausts the constitutional points. We hold that there was a body in existence at all material times competent to extend the life of the Act up till the 31st of March, 1951 and that it did so extend its life on the 20th of December, 1949. The Act continued in force until after the Constitution and therefore was a living Act at the date of the offences, namely, the 24th of October, 1950.

Counsel then sought to attack the conviction on other grounds but as the leave to appeal was confined to the constitutional points he cannot, so far as that is concerned, be permitted to travel further. Of course, it would have been competent for him to file a separate petition for special leave to appeal on the other points but had he done so it would have followed the usual course and he would have been obliged to obtain special leave in the usual way. We therefore treated this part of the argument as one asking for special leave to appeal. We heard him fully and are of opinion that these remaining points are not ones on which special leave to appeal should be granted. We therefore reject this irregular petition for special leave to appeal on its merits.

The appeal filed under Article 132 (1) is also dismissed.

Court-Fees Act (VII of 1870), section 17—Scope of—Distinct subjects—Test—Different inam villages comprised in different title deeds in favour of different individuals—Suit for declaration—If single “subject-matter”*

A number of plaintiffs joined together and instituted a single suit for declaring that an order of resumption passed by the Revenue Divisional Officer and Collector on appeal in respect of nine distinct inams in favour of distinct individuals and under nine inam title deeds was illegal and a nullity. Before the Revenue Divisional Officer nine separate applications were filed. The Revenue Divisional Officer and the Collector passed a single order in respect of the nine applications.

On a question whether the suit comprised nine distinct subjects within the meaning of section 17 of the Court-Fees Act (VII of 1870), Held, the words “distinct subjects” used in section 17, though not defined, should be interpreted to mean distinct subject-matters only. If the words “distinct subjects” are to be construed as including distinct categories of subjects taking the word “subject” in a very comprehensive sense then the meaning of section 17 would become absurd. Obviously, the intention underlying the section seems to be to provide for suits which involve multifariousness and which do not offend against the other provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure such as misjoinder of causes of actions and so forth.

In the present case it was not contended that each one of the plaintiffs is interested in each one of the different inams nor that all the inams belonged to all the plaintiffs jointly or in common. If one of the plaintiffs or a few of them alone had filed the suit a decree passed in favour of such plaintiffs would not enure to the benefit of the rest of the plaintiffs who were not parties to the suit. It is a suit of this type that can be called as a multifarious suit and it is suits of such type that are sought to be provided for by section 17 of the Court-Fees Act. Because it is possible to avoid multiplicity of suits by combining causes of action and parties without offending against the provisions of Civil Procedure Code, it cannot be contended that such suits ceased to be multifarious or that they became suits on a single cause of action or they embrace a single subject or subject-matter. The only commonality which can be postulated in the present case is that the Revenue Divisional Officer and the Collector passed a single order of resumption as a matter of convenience. This cannot be said to have taken away the distinctness of the subjects comprised in the suit.

Petition under section 115 of Act V of 1908, praying that the High Court will be pleased to revise the order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Madhurai (Additional), dated 28th October, 1950 and passed in O.S. No. 3 of 1949 on its file:

J. Sitamahalakshmi and N. Rammohan Rao for Petitioner.

The Government Pleader (P. Satyanarayana Raju) for Respondent.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—This Civil Revision Petition is against the order of the learned Subordinate Judge of Madhurai directing the plaintiffs to pay enhanced court-fee consequent upon his finding on the preliminary issue, namely, whether the court-fee paid and the valuation of the suit were proper? The first plaintiff is the petitioner.

Fifteen plaintiffs sued for a decree setting aside the order of the Collector of Madhurai, dated 17th October, 1947, directing resumption of the plaint schedule lands and for declaring the order to be illegal and a nullity. According to the plaint, the cause of action in the suit arose on 17th October, 1947, when the Collector of Madhurai confirmed the order of the Revenue Divisional Officer of Usilampatti, dated 4th April, 1947, directing the resumption of the suit lands. In the schedule attached to the plaint, the description of the properties in respect of which the resumption order was passed sets out nine different inams with the respective extents of the lands covered by nine title deeds. The entire extent of the land is stated to be 35.67 acres and for the purpose of jurisdiction the value of the suit lands is given as Rs. 5,000.

It transpires that before the Revenue Divisional Officer nine separate applications were filed for resumption, each application relating to the properties covered by each one of the nine title deeds. But the Revenue Divisional Officer heard all the applications together and passed a single order directing the resumption of the lands appertaining to the said nine inam title deeds. The Collector who heard the appeals against this order also confirmed the order of the Revenue Divisional Officer by a single order of his which is now sought to be set aside.

In a prior suit (O. S. No. 104 of 1948) on the file of the Sub-Court of Madhurai filed by the very same plaintiffs against the Province of Madras and also two other parties who had applied for resumption of the suit lands on the ground that the alienations by the service holders were void, the contention of the plaintiffs was that the inam title deeds disclosed the inam grant to comprise only the melwaram and not the kudiwaram, and that in so far as the service was being properly rendered, the lands having been endowed by Hindu Rajahs as manibhams for the purpose of certain service in Sri Mulanatha Swami temple at Thenkarai village of Nilakottah Taluk of Madhurai district, the resumption was not legal. In that suit however the learned Subordinate Judge had held that the total valuation of the suit properties could not be said to be Rs. 10,000 or more. But in the present suit the learned Subordinate Judge relying upon the finding in the previous suit by his predecessor accepted the valuation given in the plaint at Rs. 5,000, especially in view of the fact that it would make no difference if the value of the property was Rs. 5,000 or above but did not amount to Rs. 10,000 or more.

After the filing of the plaint, the Court-fee Examiner pointed out by means of a checkslip that the court-fee of Rs. 15 paid by the plaintiffs under Article 17-A (1) of Schedule II of the Court-Fees Act (hereinafter referred to as the Act) would be Rs. 100 and not Rs. 15. From the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge, it appears that the plaintiffs conceded that that was the correct position, namely, that instead of Rs. 15 the legitimate court-fee payable on the plaint would be Rs. 100. In the checkslip put up by the Court-fee Examiner it appears that he further pointed out that the valuation of the suit lands totalling about 35.67 acres in extent at Rs. 5,000 was grossly inadequate and that each acre would be worth Rs. 1,000 and that under Article 17-A (1) of Schedule II of the Court-Fees Act, Rs. 500 should have been paid as the court-fee as the total value would have exceeded Rs. 10,000 and more. In the written statement the defendant-respondent had pleaded that a single suit in respect of distinct subjects which comprised nine different inams covered by nine inam title deeds was not competent and that different suits should have been filed in respect of each one of the inams, that in any event the court-fee paid was grossly inadequate, that each inam should have been separately valued at the market value of lands, and that the court-fee should have been paid with reference to each inam, and that a single court-fee of Rs. 15 paid by the plaintiffs was wholly insufficient in view of the provisions of the Act.

The learned Subordinate Judge who tried the preliminary issue and heard arguments in respect thereof also took into consideration the checkslip prepared by the Court-fee Examiner in which the question of valuation and court-fee had been raised. No evidence, however, was adduced by either of the parties with reference to the valuation, and, as already observed, the learned Subordinate Judge proceeded on the basis of the finding of his predecessor in regard to the valuation of the properties and on a consideration of the material available before him, came to the conclusion that since the valuation was under Rs. 10,000 the proper court-fee to be paid would be Rs. 100 for the suit. But on the question as to whether the suit comprised nine distinct subjects within the meaning of section 17 of the Act or whether it was a single subject that was comprised in the plaint, the learned Subordinate Judge held, agreeing with the contention of the respondent that each one of the inams covered by the title deeds was a distinct subject within the meaning of section 17 of the Act and that the mere fact that the Collector for the sake of convenience passed a single order and the further fact that the suit was similarly instituted as one suit instead, of nine suits, would not exempt the plaintiffs from their obligation to pay court-fee on nine declarations as they were bound to pray for a declaration in respect of each of the nine inams comprised in the nine title deeds and the lands appertaining to them. Having come to the conclusion, the learned Subordinate Judge directed amendment of the plaint to incorporate separate declarations of the same kind in respect of each of the nine inams and also directed the payment of court-fee of Rs. 100 in respect of each of the nine declarations and that Rs. 15 having already been paid, a further sum of Rs. 885 was made payable, within the date stipulated by the order of the learned Subordinate Judge. It is against this order that the first plaintiff-petitioner has now preferred this revision petition.

• There can be no question in this case that section 17 of the Act would govern the case and the only question then is as to what is the correct interpretation of section 17 of the Act with reference to the facts of the present case. Section 17 of the Act is to the following effect :

“Where a suit embraces two or more distinct subjects, the plaint or memorandum of appeal shall be chargeable with the aggregate fees to which the plaints or memoranda of appeal in suits embracing separately each of such subjects would be liable under this Act.”

This section relates to court-fee payable in respect of multifarious suits. But unfortunately in the whole of the Act the word “subject” has not been defined. Whereas in sections 7 and 13 of the same Act which relate to computation of fees payable in certain suits and fees paid on memorandum of appeal, the words used are “subject-matter of the suit,” in section 17 of the Act, the words used are “suit embraces two or more distinct subjects.” It is not therefore clear from the language of the section as such as to whether the word “subject” here means and includes subject-matter, or whether it means something else. On a reading of the entire provisions of the Act as a whole I am inclined to the view that the terminology, namely, “distinct subject” used in section 17 of the Act should be interpreted to mean distinct subject-matters only, and it should also be understood to mean such subject-matters as are distinct but which can be clubbed together in a single suit. Otherwise, if the words “distinct subjects” are to be construed as including distinct categories of subjects taking the word “subject” in a very comprehensive sense, then the meaning of section 17 would become absurd ; for distinct categories of subjects could not be embraced in a single suit. Obviously, the intention underlying this section 17 seems to be to provide for suits which involve multifariousness and which do not offend against the other provisions of the Civil Procedure Code, such as misjoinder of causes of action and so forth.

The question then that arises for consideration is whether the present suit embraces different subject-matters or whether it involves a single subject-matter. The facts of this case disclose that there are nine inams granted to the original service holders for performing the service to the temple and each one of these nine inams has been comprised in “separate inam title deed”. The extent of each inam varies with the rest and the parties to whom these inams have been granted appear also to have been distinct individuals. Even so, at the time when the inam commissioner issued titles in favour of the respective service holders for the respective lands, he did so in favour of each one of the service holders for the respective lands, notwithstanding the recognition by the Collector of Madhurai of the title of Kunjana Iyer who had purchased from the respective manibhamdars at some time prior to 1861. This Kunjana Ayyar appears to be the ancestor of plaintiffs 2 to 4 and the predecessor-in-title of the other plaintiffs. At the time of the resumption proceedings before the Revenue Divisional Officer it also transpires that nine separate applications were filed. Only the Revenue Divisional Officer and the Collector contented themselves with passing a single order of resumption in respect of the nine separate service inams and separate title deeds. The reason why all the fifteen plaintiffs have combined in this suit is also obvious, for they want relief in respect of each of the inams comprised by a separate and distinct title deed. It is not however the case that each one of the plaintiffs is interested in each one of the nine inams. Nor is it the case that all the nine inams belong to all the fifteen plaintiffs jointly or in common. So that it is fairly clear that the cause of action for each one of the aggrieved parties among the plaintiffs would be only in respect of the inam or the land covered by the inam title deed in which he is interested and he could not have a cause of action in respect of the rest of the items of inams comprised in the present suit. Therefore, the construction sought to be put upon the terms "distinct subjects" occurring in section 17 of the Act by the learned counsel for the petitioner does not seem to be sound. Whether the items involved in the suit are distinct subjects or one and the same subject may also be tested by the fact as to whether, if one of the plaintiffs alone had filed a suit or if a few of the plaintiffs alone had filed the suit and a decree passed therein in favour of such plaintiffs, it would enure to the benefit of the rest of the plaintiffs who have not been parties to the suit. Unless and until the scope of the suit is made comprehensive enough to include all the nine items and unless all the parties interested in each of the subject-matters of the suit are before the Court, any decree or order passed by the Court would not be of any avail to set the matters in dispute at rest, as regards the other claimants. The effect of such a procedure adopted actually is that instead of each one filing a separate suit for a declaration in respect of the inam in which he is interested, all the interested parties have combined to file a suit in respect of the nine items involved, so that in effect it means that there are nine suits in respect of nine inams by the parties who are respectively entitled to the same and who want to assert their claim in respect of it and seek a relief from the Court by way of a declaratory decree that the resumption ordered by the Revenue authorities ought not to stand. In other words, each one of the parties who is interested in the inam is claiming a relief in respect of that particular subject-matter in which he is interested, and seeks a decree from the Court to nullify the effect of the resumption so far as it operates against that particular subject-matter to which he has a claim. It may be convenient for all such people who claim a similar relief on a similar cause of action to combine and file a suit and such a suit would not amount to a single suit comprising a single subject-matter. On the other hand, it is a suit of this type that can be called a multifarious suit and it is suits of such a type that are sought to be provided for by section 17 of the Act. Because it is possible to avoid multiplicity of suits by combining causes of action and parties without offending against the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code, it cannot be contended that such suits ceased to be multifarious, or that they became suits for a single cause of action or they embrace a single subject or subject-matter. In this view, I think, each one of the subject-matters, namely, the inam comprised by a separate title deed in respect of which there has been an order of resumption should be considered to be a distinct subject and the provision contained in section 17 of the Act would attract itself, to such a suit.

The learned counsel for the petitioner, however, invited my attention to the decision reported in *The Raja of Vizianagaram v. The Government*¹, where it has been held that a suit filed by a landholder against the ryots of a village under section 193 of the Madras Estates Land Act does not comprise "distinct subjects" within the meaning of section 17 of the Court-Fees Act, and that where such a suit is dismissed and the landholder appeals, the court-fee payable is on the total of the annual rents of the immoveable property to which the suit relates and not on the aggregate of the court-fees separately payable in respect of the rent of the holding of each particular ryot calculated in accordance with section 7 (xi) (b) of the Act. In this decision Anantakrishna Ayyar, J., has considered the question as to whether a suit under section 193 of the Madras Estates Land Act embraced distinct subjects and has come to the conclusion that since the word subject has not been defined, it would not be unreasonable to hold that a suit under section 193 did not comprise distinct subjects, and that the suit of the landholder to enhance the rent upon the particular conditions mentioned in that section which should all exist before a suit under that section can be instituted did not embrace distinct subjects within the meaning of section 17 of the Act. Though two other Full Bench decisions of this Court and one other Full Bench decision of the Calcutta High Court have been referred to by the learned Judge in the course of his judgment, I do not think these decisions throw much light on the question at issue in this petition. But one thing is clear, namely, the judgment of Anantakrishna Ayyar, J., is authority only for the proposition that a suit filed under section 193 of the Madras Estates Land Act by a single landholder cannot be said to comprise distinct subjects, and cannot come under the purview of section 17 of the Act. The learned counsel for the petitioner has also invited my attention to another decision reported in *Thangasami Pillai v. Dhanabhagayammal*¹. In that suit the plaintiff had sued for possession of several properties and the prayer in the plaint was that the plaintiff should be put in possession of the "undermentioned" properties through the process of Court and free from obstruction of the defendants who came into possession under different titles from the first defendant who in violation of a trust had alienated them. On the question as to what the proper court-fee payable was, Krishnaswami Nayudu, J., held that on the allegations in the plaint and taking the substance of the plaint also into consideration the suit did not embrace distinct subjects but only one subject as claimed in the prayer in the plaint and as such section 17 of the Act was not applicable to it. I do not think that the decision in this case applies to the facts of the case under revision. A single plaintiff suing for possession of different items of land in the hands of various defendants has been rightly held to be not coming within the scope of section 17 of the Act. But in the present case, as already stated, there are fifteen plaintiffs who are not all of them interested in every one of the items of the property but are interested in distinct items comprised in distinct inam title deeds. The only commonalty which can be postulated in respect of these distinct subjects is that the Revenue Divisional Officer and the Collector passed a single order of resumption as a matter of convenience. This act of passing a single order for purposes of administrative convenience cannot be said to take away the distinctness of each one of the subjects comprised in the suit filed by the plaintiffs for a declaration that that order should not be held to be operative against each one of the items of the inam. I do not think that the decision has any bearing on the facts of the present petition.

The learned counsel for the respondent however invited my attention to a decision in *Haru Bepari v. Kshiteeshbhooshan Ray*². The ruling in that decision in my view applies in all its bearings to the facts of the present case. There, several plaintiffs joined in a suit and prayed for declarations affecting the title to their respective jotes and for the removal of cloud upon their titles occasioned by one compromise decree. It was held that proceedings of such a kind embrace as many distinct subjects as the titles affected within the meaning of section 17 of the Act and separate court-fee must be paid for each of them. I think that the reasoning contained in this judgment of a Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court is in full accord with the facts that obtained in the present petition. This decision reviewed the decisions referred to by Anantakrishna Ayyar, J., in *The Raja of Vizianagaram v. The Government*³. The learned Judges have observed :

"The expression causes of action may be capable of definition. Indeed, definitions have been formulated in the past although the terms of one definition have not always been identical with those of another, the elements varying to suit particular exigency which evoked the attempt. Be that as it may, we are of opinion that the word 'subject' in section 17 of the Court-Fees Act covers a multitude of matters which cannot be confined within the precise formula. We find it difficult to see how distinct causes of action can ever be one subject within the meaning of section 17. But the converse does not necessarily hold good ; for it may well be that a suit based on one cause of action alone may nevertheless embrace more than one subject within the meaning of section 17 of the Court-Fees Act."

In *Munshi Lachmi Narayan Lal v. Bhupendra Prasad Shukul*⁴, a co-sharer landlord instituted a suit for rent and paid court-fee on his share of rent. He impleaded the remaining co-sharer as pro forma defendant, but alleged that his share of rent only was due. The pro forma defendant disclosed that his share of rent had also not been paid and that he be added as a plaintiff and a decree for his share of rent.

also be granted. This was allowed on his paying court-fee on his claim. The suit was decreed in favour of both. The tenants preferred an appeal. In the appeal it was held by Roland, J., that the claim of the added plaintiff was not on the same cause of action and was not within the same subject as the claim preferred by the original plaintiff and that his claim was a separate and distinct subject within the meaning of section 17 of the Act. The learned Judge held further that the court-fee payable on the Memorandum of Appeal, therefore, was equal to the total of the court-fee paid by the plaintiff and the added plaintiff in the Court below. Though this decision does not refer to the earlier decision in *Haru Bepari v. Kshiteeshbhooshan Ray*¹, still it throws considerable light on the question as to what the word 'subject' in section 17 of the Act means and what is meant by 'cause of action.' Agreeing with the views expressed in the aforesaid two decisions reported in *Haru Bepari v. Kshiteeshbhooshan Ray*¹, and *Munshi Lachmi Narayan Lal v. Bhupendra Prasad Shukul*², I am inclined to hold that in the present form in which the suit stands, the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge that the plaintiffs should be deemed to have asked for nine separate declarations of the same kind in respect of each of the nine inams, that the suit as framed embraces distinct subjects and that the court-fee payable is governed by the provisions of section 17 of the Act is justified. His further direction that the plaintiffs should pay court-fee of Rs. 100 in respect of each one of the nine declarations is also correct, so long as the frame of the suit remains what it is.

This petition is therefore dismissed with costs.

Penal Code (XLV of 1860), section 497—Validity—If repugnant to Article 13 (1) read with Article 15 (1) of the Constitution of India (1950) as perpetuating discrimination on the ground of sex only—Burden of proof as to connivance of husband.

Where an alleged offence of adultery had been committed before the coming into operation of the Constitution of India (1950) no question of fundamental rights arises and the question whether section 497 of the Penal Code is repugnant to Articles 13 (1) and 15 (1) of the Constitution as perpetuating discrimination on the ground of sex only, need not be decided.

The burden of proving that the accused had sexual intercourse with the complainant's wife without the complainant's consent or connivance is on the prosecution. (As to what constitutes connivance discussed.)

Per Basheer Ahmed Sayeed, J.—It is essential that the complainant should show against the particular person who is made the accused, that his sexual intercourse with the complainant's wife was without the complainant's consent or connivance, notwithstanding the fact that the complainant might or might not have consented or connived at the sexual intercourse which other persons might have had with the complainant's wife earlier or later than the complaint.

Petition under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying that the High Court will be pleased to revise the order of the Court of Session of the Coimbatore Division in Crl. Appeal No. 148 of 1950, dated 8th March, 1951, preferred against the order of the Additional First Class Magistrate of Erode, dated 9th October, 1950, and made in C. C. No. 405 of 1949.

JUDGMENTS : Govinda Menon, J.—The charge against the petitioner before the Court of the Additional First Class Magistrate of Erode was that he, between October, 1948 and 16th May, 1949, at Gobichettipalayam committed adultery with one Dr. Suguna Bai, knowing that she is the wife of one Dr. P. Reddi, the complainant, and without the consent of the said Ramachandra Reddi, and thereby committed an offence punishable under section 497, Indian Penal Code. He was found guilty of the offence and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for six months. On appeal, the learned Additional Sessions Judge of Coimbatore confirmed the conviction and sentence. Hence this revision:

Mr. Panchapakesa Ayyar, J., before whom the revision came on for hearing on 13th March, 1951, directed the case to be posted before a Bench of two Judges as according to the learned Judge, section 497, Indian Penal Code, perpetuates a discrimination solely on ground of sex and as such is repugnant to the provisions of the Indian Constitution, viz., Article 13 (1) read with Article 15 (1). It was for the purpose of deciding the validity of section 497, Indian Penal Code, and its repugnancy in relation to the articles of the Constitution that the references was made. The learned Judge overlooked the fact that the offence complained of had been committed before the coming into operation of the Indian Constitution. Both the learned counsel for the petitioner and the learned Public Prosecutor conceded that no question of fundamental rights arises in this case, as the alleged offence took place before the 26th January, 1950.

Under section 497, Indian Penal Code, whoever has sexual intercourse with a person who is, and whom he knows, or has reason to believe, to be, the wife of another man, without the consent or connivance of that man, commits the offence of adultery, if such sexual intercourse does not amount to rape.

The complainant had been married to one Dr. Suguna Bai on the 26th January, 1940, under the Special Marriage Act (III of 1872) at Madras. From the evidence of P.W. 1 the complainant, it appears that the wedded life of the parties had not been a happy one. It is in evidence that both the husband and wife were members of the Communist party and that they are interested in the activities of that party. The petitioner who was a friend of both the spouses, was also a member of the Communist party and knew them very intimately. The relations between the married couple became very much estranged from 1942 onwards and the inference that can be drawn from the prosecution case is that the husband allowed the wife to lead her own life without much interference on his part. From 1946 the wife was in different places on private as well as on Government service. It is further alleged that in the second week of October, 1946, the wife went away from the house of the complainant at Madras without the knowledge and in spite of diligent enquiries made by the complainant he could not know her whereabouts till the end of December, 1946. In May, 1948, it is alleged that the differences between both of them were patched up in the presence of a respectable mediator; but even after that, the estrangement continued. Ex. P-2 is a copy of the petition in O.M.S. No. 22 of 1948, filed by the complainant on the Original Side of this Court under section 17 of the Special Marriage Act and section 10 of the Indian Divorce Act for a dissolution of the marriage on the ground of the wife's adultery with one Mr. G. P. That petition was withdrawn sometime in July, 1949. P.W. 1 says that though he had sufficient evidence that his wife committed adultery with Mr. G. P., he withdrew the suit at the advice of his lawyer. The complaint in the present case was filed on 16th May, 1949, before the withdrawal of that application. Both the lower Courts have found that the accused and Dr. Suguna Bai were living together in house No. 13, Cutchery Street, Gobichettipalayam, that no other person lived in that house, that both of them had one and the same mess and that both of them used to sleep in one and the same room. On this evidence it was found that the only inference is that the accused committed an offence under section 497, Indian Penal Code.

We have been taken through the evidence of the various witnesses examined on behalf of the complainant as well as the testimony of the defence witnesses and it seems to us that the finding of the lower Court on the question of fact that the complainant's wife and the accused were living together in the same house and under the conditions described in the judgment of the lower Court cannot be disputed. But the argument that is put forward by the learned counsel for the petitioner is that assuming, without conceding, that the accused had sexual intercourse with Dr. Suguna Bai, knowing that she was the lawfully wedded wife of the complainant; still the necessary pre-requisite for a conviction under section 497, Indian Penal Code, viz., that such sexual intercourse was without the consent or connivance of the husband, should be proved. It is urged that the evidence in this case does not show that there was no connivance. It is argued that from the conduct of the husband the Court has to presume that though he did not positively consent to his wife living apart and living with others, he must have tacitly connived at such a life. The learned counsel for the appellant invited our attention to the observations of Edge, C. J. and Aikman, J., of the Allahabad High Court in *Brij Basi v. The Queen-Empress*¹. That was a case where the accused person was found guilty by the lower Courts of an offence under section 451, Indian Penal Code, for having committed house trespass with intent to commit an offence, the prospective offence being adultery. During the course of the discussion the learned Judges observe as follows :

"It is the first principle of criminal law that where a statute creates a criminal offence the ingredients of that criminal offence must be strictly proved, and that where the doing of an act without consent or without authority is made a criminal offence, and the statute does not expressly put upon the accused the proof of such consent or authority, it is a necessary part of the case for the prosecution to negative by evidence such consent or authority. In this case, if Brij Basi had actually been caught in the act of sexual intercourse with the wife of Ram Gopal, assuming that he knew to be Ram Gopal's wife, the offence of criminal adultery would not have been made out without proof that such sexual intercourse was without the consent and without the connivance of Ram Gopal."

Granting that the prosecution has proved that the accused has committed adultery with the complainant's wife, still is there anything in the evidence to show that it was without his consent or connivance? It is not sufficient for the complainant to prove the act of adultery. He must also prove that he did not connive at it. Paragraph 20 of Ex. P-2 is clear that the complainant knew that his wife was committing adultery with persons other than the accused on the 13th April, 1948, and on other occasions during April and December, 1947 and between 10th April, and 12th April, 1948, and also between 14th April, 1948 and 16th April, 1948. There is not a word in the deposition of P.W. 1 that subsequent to his having known about his wife's adultery with other persons, he had done anything to prevent her committing adultery with anyone else. In fact the inference is irresistible that after he was convinced that his wife had adulterous intercourse with the co-respondent in O.M.S. No. 22 of 1948, he tacitly acquiesced in the conduct of his wife. His filing an application for divorce and later on withdrawing it is proof that he did not take any steps to wean away his wife from the alleged evil conduct into which she had fallen. We are therefore satisfied that the necessary pre-requisite for a finding that an offence under section 497, Indian Penal Code, has been committed is absent in this case. It is absolutely essential as stated in *Brij Basi v. The Queen-Empress*¹, that being a criminal offence, one of the two ingredients to be proved is that the husband did not connive at the adultery.

What "connivance" means in cases under the English Matrimonial Causes Act has been the subject of discussion in *Lloyd v. Lloyd*². Langton, J., after discussing all the earlier cases on the subject holds that when the husband having been fully apprised of what was going on, viz., that his wife was committing adultery with other persons, took no active steps to prevent it, and therefore acquiesced in it, it should be presumed that there has been connivance on the part of the husband and therefore a petition for divorce should be dismissed. The learned Judge discussed the earlier cases on the point such as *Rogers v. Rogers*³, and other cases.

But it is argued by the learned Public Prosecutor that this decision has not been approved in England in the subsequent cases. He invites our attention to *Churchman v. Churchman*⁴. In that case the Court of Appeal dissented from certain observations of Langton, J., in *Lloyd v. Lloyd and Leggan*², but lays down that it is the essence of connivance that it preceded the event and, generally, the material event was the inception of the adultery, and not its repetition, although the facts might be such that petitioner must be taken to have connived at it from the first. The same view has been taken in *Manning v. Manning*¹, again a judgment of the Court of Appeal. It may therefore be taken that unless there has been connivance at the inception, the English Law would not accept subsequent condonation of adultery as connivance.

We are satisfied from the evidence that after the filing of O.M.S. No. 22 of 1948, the complainant was no longer interested in his wife leading a chaste life. In fact, he was anxious to get a divorce and for some reason, which is not clearly explained, he withdrew the suit on the advice of his counsel. It is alleged by the accused in this case that the complainant abducted his wife from Gobichettipalayam with the intention that she should not give evidence in the divorce suit. Whatever that might be, on a careful reading of P.W. 1's evidence, we are driven to the conclusion that it mattered to him nothing as to what his wife did after he had filed the divorce suit. He allowed her to have her own mode of living without any kind of let or hindrance on his part. That was the reason why there was no evidence let in on behalf of the prosecution that there was no connivance on the part of the husband. As the necessary ingredients of the offence have not been proved we find that the petitioner is not guilty of the offence with which he is charged and we acquit him and set him at liberty.

Basheer Ahmed Sayeed, J.—I agree with my learned brother in the conclusions he has arrived at and the reasoning which he has put forth for allowing the revision petition filed by the petitioner. I would like to add a few words of mine. Section 497, Indian Penal Code, requires that the complainant should prove that the accused had sexual intercourse with the complainant's wife without the complainant's consent or connivance. That means the burden is cast upon the prosecution to prove that the sexual intercourse had been without his consent or connivance of the complainant himself. My learned brother has rightly held that this onus which is cast upon the complainant has not been discharged by the complainant. All that has been proved by the complainant in the case is that the accused must have had or actually had sexual intercourse with the wife of the complainant. This cannot be full compliance with the requirements of the section. On the other hand, it was incumbent upon the complainant to prove that the said sexual intercourse which the accused had with the wife of the complainant was without his consent or connivance. As has been pointed out, there has been no evidence whatsoever that such want of consent or connivance has been proved by the complainant though averments have been made by the complainant to that effect in his complaint. A reference to paragraph 5 of the complaint will make this clear. So also his sworn statement at the time he filed the complaint makes reference to the fact that he did not consent to the sexual intercourse of the accused with his wife. But it does not really meet the requirements of the section. The complainant who gave the evidence as P.W. 1 has not shown that he did not give his consent or that he did not connive at the accused having sexual intercourse with his wife. In order to show this he should have spoken to the steps which he took to prevent the accused or his wife from having intercourse with each other from the moment he came to know of the intimacy between the wife and the accused and from the time he began to suspect that the accused was having sexual intercourse with his wife. Far from speaking to any such facts or steps taken by him, it appears from the evidence that he actually took no steps whatever, though he was fully aware from August 1946 up till 16th May, 1949, when he actually filed the complaint that the accused and his wife were on intimate terms with each other. Paragraph 7 of Ex. P-4 and also Ex. P-3 counter-affidavit filed by the wife makes this position very clear. In spite of this knowledge if the complainant had failed to take steps to prevent sexual intercourse between the accused and his wife, such conduct on the part of the complainant would give rise it is claimed, to the presumption that he had connived at the accused having sexual intercourse with his wife, though in my opinion, such presumption does not seem to be necessary at all in a criminal case where the onus is laid on the complainant to prove the ingredients of the offence against the accused.

Mr. Nambiar has referred to a number of events which have preceded the filing of the complaint by the complainant to show that the complainant had connived at the sexual intercourse of his wife with other persons like Mr. G. P. during a long period of time and to the various proceedings which were instituted by and against the complainant in connection with the conduct of his wife and that of the complainant himself respectively. These facts might be quite relevant and necessary in a case where the complainant sought to have a divorce between himself and his wife. But in a criminal case I do not think that the connivance by the complainant at acts of sexual intercourse which the wife of the complainant might have had with persons other than the accused would be material or relevant to the particular complaint with which the complainant goes to the criminal Court for vindicating his so-called rights. In my opinion, it is essential that the complainant should show against the particular person who is made the accused, that his sexual intercourse with the complainant's wife was without the complainant's consent or connivance, notwithstanding the fact that the complainant might or might not have consented or connived at the sexual intercourse which other persons might have had with the complainant's wife earlier or later than the complainant. In order to make the accused liable to punishment, the complainant must show that that particular accused had sexual intercourse with his wife without his consent or connivance. All the English cases cited by the learned counsel on both sides have relevance only to the civil proceedings in matrimonial cases and they do not have much bearing on the requirements laid down by the express language of section 497, Indian Penal Code. In the present case as has been observed by my learned brother while the complainant has failed to discharge the onus laid down on him to prove the absence of consent or connivance at the sexual intercourse of the accused with the complainant's wife, the petitioner-accused has shown by evidence on record that the complainant had connived at the sexual intercourse of the accused with the complainant's wife though it was absolutely unnecessary on his part to prove such consent or connivance. In this view the petition must be allowed and the conviction will have to be set aside, as has been rightly held by my learned brother.

Madras Agriculturists Relief Act (IV of 1938), section 19—Petition presented under returned for presentation to proper Court—Appeal lies and High Court will not interfere in revision.

An appeal lies under section 25 (a) of Madras Act (IV of 1938) against an order returning a petition under section 19 of the Madras Agriculturists Relief Act, for re-presentation to the proper Court and therefore the High Court will not interfere with that order on a revision petition.

If under Order 7, rule 10, Civil Procedure Code, an order for return of a plaint has been made that will certainly be appealable under Order 43, rule 1 (a). The right of appeal under that provision cannot stand attracted to orders made in connection with matters other than suits or plaints. Merely because of section 141, Civil Procedure Code, which can only imply and involve that the mode of trial laid down by the Code in regard to suits will be available in the case of all original petitions as well.

Petition under section 115 of Act V of 1908, praying that the High Court will be pleased to revise the order of the Court of the District Munsiff, Vijayawada, dated 4th August, 1949, in C.M.P. No. 373 of 1949, in O. S. No. 547 of 1935.

M. S. Ramachandra Rao and M. Krishna Rao for Petitioners.

M. V. Nagaramiah for Respondents.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—The petition presented under section 19 of the Madras Agriculturists Relief Act to the Court of First Instance where its decree had gone up on appeal and on second appeal also to this Court was returned by that Court for presentation to the proper Court on the ground that the proper Court was the Court of second appeal and not itself. To this view of the learned District Munsiff, Mr. Krishna Rao, urges his objection on the basis of a ruling in a Divisional Bench of this Court consisting of the present Chief Justice and Somasundaram, J., in C. M. P. No. 918 of 1950. Mr. Nagaramayya for the respondents has however invited me to dismiss this petition on the ground that there is an appeal rightly preferred against the order of the learned District Munsiff to the Sub-Court, Vijayawada which is pending. The learned counsel for the respondents says that if the order under revision is an appealable order, I ought not to interfere in revision with the order in question. Mr. Krishna Rao seeks to get over the point made by Mr. Nagaramayya by saying that against the order of the learned District Munsiff now under consideration no appeal can properly lie because all that section 141, Civil Procedure Code, renders possible of application to the original petition for scaling down with which we are concerned in the present case is the procedure provided by the Code of Civil Procedure which may well include a provision for the return of the petition to the proper Court under Order 7, rule 10, Civil Procedure Code, but not necessarily a provision for right of appeal under Order 43, rule 1 (a), Civil Procedure Code. The learned counsel has in my opinion rightly maintained that the right of appeal is not a matter of procedure but a substantive right which unless expressly given by the statute cannot be held to be available to a litigant. The interpretation to be placed upon the language in Order 43, rule 1 (a) is, in my opinion, this, namely, that if under Order 7, rule 10, an order for the return of a plaint has been made, that will certainly be appealable. I am inclined to think that the right of appeal under that provision cannot stand attracted to orders made in connection with matters other than suits or plaints merely because of section 141, Civil Procedure Code, which can only imply and involve that the mode of trial laid down by the Code in regard to suits will be available in the case of all original petitions as well. It is stated by Mr. Krishna Rao that there is unreported ruling of this Court (Wadsworth, J.) in support of his present submission. I am satisfied that even apart from any such authority the submission of the learned counsel is sound and that the preliminary point of objection of Mr. Nagaramayya based upon section 141, Civil Procedure Code, has no force and must be repelled. It is next contended that the appeal now pending in the Sub-Court at Vijayawada is valid under section 25 (a) of the Madras Agriculturists Relief Act. That section provides for an appeal against orders amending or refusing to amend decrees—language which according to the submission of the learned counsel Mr. Nagaramayya is wide enough to include an order for the return of the petition under section 19 on the ground of want of jurisdiction in the Court to which it is presented. Mr. Krishna Rao urges in answer to this further point of Mr. Nagaramayya that refusing to amend can only mean refusing to amend on a consideration of the merits and not a refusal to amend on the ground of want of jurisdiction in the Court to which the petition for amendment is presented. Mr. Krishna Rao urges that the right of appeal conferred by section 25-A ought to be understood in this restricted sense which is the only natural sense that one can prima facie impute to the words amending or refusing to amend in the context in which they occur. I am of the opinion that if the language of the rule authorising an appeal is sufficiently wide to take in a case of the kind before me by a Court of first instance, such a right of appeal ought not to be restricted by the considerations of the kind relied on by Mr. Krishna Rao. No consideration except that derived from the language of the rule authorising the appeal ought to enter into the mind of the Court when deciding the question of appealability and if any consideration other than the literal meaning of the language is permissible I rather think that an interpretation in favour of appealability should prevail rather than the interpretation against appealability. The only one consideration that is permissible is whether the language in its literal tenor leaves one in doubt whether a particular case is within the scope of the language or outside it. In the present case as I have already indicated, the language of section 25-A is sufficiently wide to authorise an appeal preferred by the petitioners to the Sub-Court, Vijayawada.

In view of my upholding the objection of Mr. Nagaramayya based upon section 25-A of the Madras Agriculturists Relief Act it follows that this revision petition must be dismissed but in the circumstances without costs.

Mr. Krishna Rao wants me to make it clear that in view of this objection taken by the respondents to this revision petition the competency of the appeal preferred by his clients to the Sub-Court would no longer be a matter for controversy between the parties there. I can only say that it would not be a matter of controversy hereafter. Mr. Nagaramayya it must be stated in fairness to him has in answer to a question put to me, conceded that it will not be open to him or his clients to question the validity of the appeal in the Sub-Court at Vijayawada.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), section 55 and Indian Contract Act (IX of 1872), section 73—Breach of covenant of title and quiet possession—Damages—Mode of assessing—Limitation—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Article 116—Applicability.

The suit property was leased out to the plaintiff's father in 1921 and after the death of the lessor his widow sold the property to the defendant in 1932 who in his turn sold it to the plaintiff in 1933. A portion of the purchase money was received by the defendant to discharge a decree debt with respect to which attachment of the said property was pending, but as the defendant did not satisfy the decree the property was brought to sale. The defendant instead of paying and settling the decree started a litigation which failed against the auction-purchaser, in which the plaintiff was not impleaded. The auction-purchaser who obtained symbolical possession filed a suit in 1943 against the plaintiff which was decreed in 1943 and on appeal by the plaintiff was dismissed in 1945. Plaintiff filed the present suit in 1947 for damages for breach of covenant of title and quiet possession.

Held (i) There was a breach of covenant of title and quiet possession as under section 55 of the Transfer of Property Act there is always an implied covenant as to title and quiet possession and enjoyment in all sales of immoveable properties. Unless there is an express contract to the contrary by the terms of the document, such covenant for title would subsist and would enure to the benefit of the purchaser if there should be a breach of that covenant at any subsequent stage.

(ii) Article 116 of the Limitation Act is applicable to a case of this kind and it provides for six years from the date of the breach of the covenant the covenant being not only the covenant for title but the covenant for possession also and the suit is within time whether the date of the decree of the trial Court in the auction-purchaser's suit in 1943 or an appeal in 1945 is taken as the relevant date.

(iii) The principle of section 73 of the Contract Act is made applicable to breach of covenant of title even as regards immoveable properties and the difference between the contract price and the market price on the date of the breach would be the ordinary mode of assessing damages. But in applying this principle to breaches of covenant of title relating to immoveable properties it is necessary to consider whether courts are prevented from holding that the relevant date would be the date on which the plaintiff makes the claim for damages, i.e., the date of the suit. It is always open in cases of breaches of covenant of title or quiet possession for the plaintiff to have two causes of action to recover the consideration paid together with interest on the basis of failure of consideration or to recover damages on the breach of covenant by reason of the indemnity implied in the covenant of title. When the plaintiff has recourse to the latter, i.e., claiming damages for the loss of property he must be given the property or its value on the date when he makes the demand by instituting a suit, i.e., in this case the market value in 1947.

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Bapatla, dated 31st July, 1948 and passed in O.S. No. 30 of 1947.

*Appeal No. 688 of 1948.

K. Umamaheswaram for Appellant.

G. A. Vaidyalingam and P. Rajeswaran for Respondent.

Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Krishnaswami Nayudu, J.—The defendant is the appellant and the appeal is against the decree of the learned Subordinate Judge of Bapatla in O.S. No. 30 of 1947, the decree being for damages for breach of covenant of title and quiet possession. Two acres eighty-four cents of dry lands originally belonged to one Jalambotlu, who leased it to the plaintiff's father for a period of 25 years under Exhibit A-1, dated 4th October, 1921, on an annual rental of Rs. 76, subject to a payment of quit rent out of the maktha amounting to Rs. 2-5-6. The property owned by Jalambotlu was of the extent of 3 acres and odd. After the death of Jalambotlu, his widow Sitaramamma, who acquired absolute rights to the property under a will left by her husband, conveyed 2 acres and 84 cents out of the 3 acres and odd owned by Jalambotlu to the defendant under a sale deed Exhibit B-2, dated 24th June, 1932 for a consideration of Rs. 1,250. The property was already subject to an attachment before the judgment in O.S. No. 170 of 1932, a suit instituted by one Subbamma against Sitaramamma, for recovery of a sum of Rs. 500. Subsequently a decree was also passed in the suit. On 15th September, 1933, the defendant conveyed 2 acres and 84 cents of lands to the plaintiff under the original of Exhibit B-3 for Rs. 1,200. Out of the consideration, a sum of Rs. 500 was received by the defendant for the purpose of discharging the decree debt in O.S. No. 170 of 1932, in which there was already an attachment pending against the property. But after the sale deed, obviously, the defendant having received the amount of Rs. 500 did not pay and satisfy the decree in O.S. No. 170 of 1932 and further proceedings in execution of the decree appears to have been taken and 2 acres and 84 cents of lands were sold on 9th November, 1936 and symbolical possession was taken in favour of the auction-purchaser. The defendant instead of paying and settling the decree in O.S. No. 170 of 1932 appears to have launched himself in litigation by filing a claim petition and after dismissal of the claim petition by instituting a claim suit O.S. No. 508 of 1933 in the District Munsif's Court, Ongole, which was dismissed on the 28th November, 1935. He filed an appeal against that decision A.S. No. 4 of 1936, which likewise was dismissed on the 16th August, 1937. Not content with this, he appears to have filed S.A. No. 142 of 1938 in this Court, which received a similar fate of dismissal on the 11th February, 1941. It may be mentioned that in not one of these proceedings started by the defendant the plaintiff was a party.

The auction-purchaser by the strength of his purchase of the property in court auction instituted O.S. No. 112 of 1943 in the District Munsif's Court, Ongole against the plaintiff for recovery of the makthas or the lease amount due up to 1943, i.e., a total sum of Rs. 612-12-0. The plaintiff resisted the suit on the strength of his title and possession by the purchase under the original of Exhibit B-3, but the suit was decreed in favour of the auction-purchaser on the 30th September, 1943. The plaintiff appealed in A.S. No. 31 of 1944 on the file of the Subordinate Judge's court of Bapatla and the appeal was dismissed on 16th January, 1945. The period of 25 years' lease also expired on 4th October, 1946 and the auction-purchaser took actual possession on 22nd March, 1947. The present suit for breach of covenant of title and quiet possession was instituted on 11th April, 1947. The plaintiff claimed a sum of Rs. 9,500 as damages for the breach. The suit was resisted by the defendant in his written statement. He denied that there was any covenant of title and on the other hand pleaded that there was an agreement not to claim compensation or damages in regards to warranties of title, possession and enjoyment except in regard to any alienations made by himself of the suit property and also raised a plea of limitation besides questioning the quantum of damages claimed by the plaintiff. The lower court held in favour of the plaintiff and decreed the suit for Rs. 9,500 and hence this appeal.

Three contentions were urged on behalf of the appellant. All the three contentions that were raised in the lower court were urged before us and as regards the first of the contentions that there was no covenant of title and quiet possession and enjoyment, there was not much argument by the counsel on behalf of the appellant, as undoubtedly there could not be any doubt that, in this case even apart from any specific covenant as to title in the document, by virtue of section 55, clause (2) of the Transfer of Property Act, the defendant must be deemed to have contracted with the plaintiff, that the interest, which he professed to transfer under the sale deed Exhibit B-3 to the plaintiff subsisted and that he had power to transfer the same. There is always an implied covenant as to title and quiet possession and enjoyment in all sales of immoveable properties, unless it is shown that there is an express contract to the contrary by the terms of the document, such covenant for title would subsist and would ensure to the benefit of the purchaser, if there should be a breach of that covenant at any subsequent stage. Very properly the learned counsel did not press his argument on this issue and we have no doubt in holding that there was such a covenant. An attempt was made in the lower Court to cull out from the terms of Exhibit B-3 a contract to the contrary, which very properly has been rejected by the lower court as there could not be by any means any contract to the contrary which could be ascertained from the terms of Exhibit B-3.

The only two other questions that are required to be determined in this appeal are whether the suit is barred by limitation and whether the damages awarded are excessive. On the first of these questions as to limitation, it is contended that the starting point of limitation must be taken to be 9th November, 1936, the date of sale held in execution of the decree in O.S. No. 170 of 1932, and in any event 11th March, 1937, the date when the auction-purchaser purports to have obtained symbolical delivery of the property. In our view, none of these dates should be relied on to fix the cause of action. As whatever might have been the declarations made by the Court as to title relating to this property, such a declaration was made in the absence of the plaintiff and in the proceedings to which the plaintiff was not a party and it could not be expected that in so far as he was concerned the title has been decided as against him. Equally so, as regards possession, since what was delivered was only symbolical possession as nothing more could be given to the auction-purchaser. And it is not in evidence that the plaintiff was aware of this delivery of possession symbolically and in the absence of such evidence, it is not safe to hold that the cause of action had arisen on the date of the order or on the date of the effecting of this symbolical delivery to the auction-purchaser, which was on 11th March, 1937.

It is therefore for consideration as to what will be the relevant date on which the plaintiff's cause of action could be said to have arisen. For the first time in 1943 by the institution of O.S. No. 112 of 1943, by the auction-purchaser for the recovery of the rent on the strength of his purchase at the Court auction, the plaintiff's title to the property was in issue and he contested the suit on the strength of his own title and a decision was given against him by the first court on 30th September, 1943. The matter was taken up in appeal and finally concluded on 16th January, 1945, when it could reasonably be said that the matter has been conclusively decided against the plaintiff in so far as the title to the property was concerned. Article 116 of the Limitation Act which is applicable to a case of this kind provides for a period of six years from the date of the breach of the covenant, the covenant here being not only the covenant for title but the covenant for possession also. If the cause of action is within six years from any of these two dates, the plaintiff would perfectly be in time. We are inclined to hold that until the determination of the appeal on 16th January, 1945, it could not reasonably be held that the title of the plaintiff has been conclusively determined against him and found in favour of the auction-purchaser in view of the plaintiff having filed an appeal questioning the decision of the first Court. In these proceedings it must be stated that the plaintiff was in fact fighting out the case of the defendant and trying his best to see if he could have his title established against the auction-purchaser in O. S. No. 170 of 1932, though the defendant had failed initially in the claim petition and subsequently in the proceedings which he instituted and conducted. Our attention is however invited to a decision in *Juscurn Boid v. Pirthichand Lal Choudhury*¹, where the following observations of the Privy Council are relied upon in support of the contention that the cause of action must be deemed to have arisen on the date of the disposal of the suit in the first Court. Sir Lawrence Jenkins, delivering the judgment observes at page 678, as follows :

“ Their Lordships feel no doubt that as between these two decrees (a decree of the first Court and a decree of the appellate Court), this is the correct view, for whatever may be the theory under other systems of law, under the Indian Law and procedure an original decree is not suspended by presentation of an appeal nor is its operation interrupted where the decree on appeal is one of dismissal.”

Sir Lawrence Jenkins proceeding observed :

“ There may be circumstances in which a failure to get or retain possession may justly be regarded as the time from which the limitation period should run, but that is not the case here.”

So either the date of the first decree or the date when the plaintiff failed to retain possession would be relevant for the purpose of ascertainment as to the relevant dates of cause of action under section 116 of the Limitation Act. In either case, the present suit is in time the suit having been instituted on 11th April, 1947, within six years from 30th September 1943, or from 22nd March, 1947, which was the date when the auction-purchaser actually took vacant possession. The suit is well within the time provided by law.

The question as to whether the damages are excessive would to a great extent depend upon the determination of the question as to what should be the relevant date on which the damages have to be ascertained, that is, as to the date on which the value of the lands has to be fixed. Mr. Umamaheswaram, the learned counsel for the appellant contends that the date of delivery of possession to the auction-purchaser on 11th March, 1937, that is when symbolical delivery was made, should be the date on which the market value of the lands has to be fixed. In the view which we have already taken, that would not be the proper date to be relied upon for the purpose of limitation. We are unable to agree that that date should be taken for fixing the market value of the property. The only other alternative which the counsel for the appellant suggests as the relevant date is 30th September 1943, when the decree for the maktha was passed in the suit instituted by the auction-purchaser. As regards this question, the date for the purpose of limitation, which ordinarily will be the date of breach of the covenant of title, could not be treated as the date also for assessing the damages, that is, for fixing the market value of the lands in respect of which the breach has occurred. The principle of section 73 of the Indian Contract Act is made applicable to breaches of covenant of title even as regards immoveable properties, and it is sought to be contended placing reliance on section 73 of the Indian Contract Act that the quantum of damages must be ascertained on the date of the breach as in a contract for sale of goods, where there is a breach of contract, the difference between the contract price and the market price on the date of the breach would be the ordinary mode of assessing the damages. But in applying the principle to breach of covenant of title relating to immoveable properties, it is necessary to consider whether Courts are prevented from holding that the relevant date would be the date on which he makes the claim for damages, that is the date of the suit. All that section 73 provides is that when a contract has been broken, the party who suffers by such breach is entitled to receive, from the party who has broken the contract, compensation for any loss or damage caused to him thereby, which naturally arose in the usual course of things from such breach. Applying that principle one has to see what is it that the plaintiff has lost by the failure on the part of the defendant to implement the covenant for title regarding the sale of the property to the plaintiff. What the plaintiff has lost is the property which he is entitled to get back, but which he could not secure for the reason that the defendant is not in a position to deliver back possession of the property or to show good title to it. It is therefore the property, that the plaintiff has lost and which he must get back and when asked for it he must get it or its value in terms of money, and when therefore a suit is instituted for recovery of damages, the damages must be ascertained on the date of the suit and not on any other date prior to it. It is always open in cases of breaches of covenant of title or quiet possession, for the plaintiff to have two causes of action, to recover the consideration paid together with interest on the basis of failure of consideration or to recover damages on the breach of covenant by reason of the indemnity implied in the covenant of title. When the plaintiff has recourse to the latter, i.e., claiming damages for the loss of property, he must be given the property or its value on the date when he makes the demand by instituting a suit. We consider that to be the reasonable and suitable view to be taken in cases of this kind relating to damages arising out of the breach of covenant of title and our view finds support in the decisions reported in *Muhammad Siddiq v. Muhammad Nuh*¹, and in *Dadha Sahib v. Muhammad Sultan Sahib*². The learned counsel however relied on the decisions reported in *Alagurappi Reddiar v. Alagirisami Naick*³ and in *Muthu Goundan v. Muttayyan alias Kolanda Goundan*⁴, but the question there did not arise in the manner in which it has been raised in the present case. In those cases the contention was as to whether the damages were to be ascertained on the date of the sale or on the date of the breach and not on the date of the dispossession or on the date of the suit as is the case before us. We have therefore to find out what the market value of this property would be on 11th April, 1947, the date of the suit.

The evidence as regards the value is discussed by the learned Subordinate Judge and he has arrived at the figure of Rs. 9,500 mainly basing his conclusion on two documents of sale, Exs. A. 10 and A. 11, both dated 12th October, 1946, of lands of the same quality and which are situated adjacent to the suit lands. Ex. A. 10 is a sale deed of about 1 1/2 acres of land to one P. Rangiah for Rs. 7,000, Rs. 4,000 having been paid by way of cash and Rs. 3,000 by way of promissory note executed in favour of the vendor. Ex. A. 11 is in favour of P.W. 2 of an extent of 97 cents for a price of Rs. 4,000. On the basis of these two sale deeds, there can be no doubt that the sum of Rs. 9,500 is the reasonable figure that could be fixed as the value of the property and as claimed by the plaintiff. It is pointed out by Mr. Umamaheswaram, that in or about 1940 or 1941 from the evidence of the witnesses P.Ws. 3 and 4 it is evident that an acre was sold for Rs. 400 and for Rs. 1000. No sale deeds are produced in respect of these transactions; but accepting the evidence of these witnesses that in 1940 or 1941 the prices of these properties ranged from Rs. 400 to Rs. 1,000 per acre, that would not be sufficient to hold that the prices continued at the same rate in 1947, when the suit was instituted. The evidentiary value of Exs. A. 10 and A. 11 cannot be under-estimated. It is suggested however that in Ex. A. 10, part of the consideration was paid by way of promissory note, which is not of any consequence, since it is ordinarily common in land transactions that part of the price is paid in cash and the balance of the price by way of promissory note. It is also pointed out that P.Ws. 1 and 2 are near relations of the plaintiff and it is likely that these two documents might have been brought into existence to support the claim of the plaintiff in this suit. But the fact remains that a sum of Rs. 4,000 in cash has been paid by the vendee in Ex. A. 11 before the Sub-Registrar of Assurances, which it is very difficult for the appellant to get over. That these dry lands have arisen phenomenally in value is evident from the fact that they have been used for raising tobacco, which is a paying commercial crop, in this part of the State and this is also evident from the fact that though the same lands were leased to the plaintiff's father for a sum of Rs. 76 per annum, after the auction-purchaser secured possession he appeared to have leased it for an amount of Rs. 300. Mr. Umamaheswaram relied on this prior evidence on the side of the plaintiff and contended that the proper mode of ascertainment of the market value in this case should be by capitalising the annual rental which the property was fetching. Capitalising the annual rental value of Rs. 300 at 20 times, he submitted, that a sum of Rs. 6,000 would be the reasonable market value. We would have been inclined to take the annual rental value as the basis and fix the market value, but for the fact that there is the other evidence in this case which gives us a clear indication of the market value of the lands in the locality on the relevant date in about 1946 or 1947. Further it must be stated that there is no evidence on the side of the defendant to disprove that the value of the lands has not increased as has been shown in this case by the evidence on behalf of the plaintiff and the documents relied on by him in support of his contentions. We do not therefore feel justified in disagreeing with the valuation fixed by the lower Court at Rs. 9,500 which appears to be the reasonable market value on the date of the suit.

In the result the appeal is dismissed with costs.

The State of Madras, represented by the Secretary to Government
Local Administration Dept., Fort St. George, Madras

Respondent.

Madras Village Panchayats Act (X of 1950), section 47 (1)—Whether irregularities committed before the commencement of the Act can be taken into account—Allegations of mala fide against Government should not lightly be made.

On 1st April, 1951, the Madras Village Panchayats Act came into force and on 30th July, 1951, the Inspector of Local Boards issued a notice to the President of a Panchayat (the petitioner) to show cause why he should not be removed from office alleging four irregularities all of which were committed before 1st April, 1951. The petitioner submitted an explanation which was not accepted and he was ordered to be removed from office.

Held : that (i) under section 47 (1) of the Act the omission or refusal to carry out, or disobedience of the provisions of the Act or rules framed thereunder relates to acts committed or omissions made after the commencement of the Act, and the Inspector of Local Boards cannot take into consideration acts done or omissions made prior to the commencement of the Act and the order passed is therefore contrary to the provisions of the Act.

(ii) While it is necessary in the interests of the country that Government and its Officials should act bona fide in the discharge of their duties it is equally important that members of the public should not make grave and unfounded allegations against the Government unless they are in a position to substantiate them.

Petition praying that in the circumstances stated in the affidavit filed therewith the High Court will be pleased to issue a writ of certiorari calling for the records in R. O. C. No. 65013-50 H-4 dated 28th August, 1951, on the file of the Inspector of Local Boards, as confirmed by G.O. No. Bt. 56, Local Administration Dept., dated 23rd January, 1952 and connected records and quash the same.

Neti Subramaniam and J. V. Krishna Sarma for Petitioner.

V. V. Raghavan for the Government Pleader (P. Satyanarayana Raju) for State.

The Court made the following

ORDER.—This is an application under Art. 226 of the Constitution of India for issuing a writ of certiorari to quash the order of the Government of Madras, dated 28th August, 1951, in R. O. C. No. 65013-50 H-4.

The petitioner was elected President of the Panchayat Board, Bhogapuram, Pithapuram taluk in the year 1940. The Madras Village Panchayats Act (Act No. X of 1950) came into force on 1st April, 1951. After the Act came into force, on 31st July, 1951, the Inspector of Local Boards issued a notice to the petitioner to show cause why he should not be removed from his office. In that notice, four irregularities alleged to have been committed by the petitioners were detailed :

(1) The President failed to convene meetings of the Panchayat Board in May and November, 1948, January, February, April, June, July, August and November, 1949 and in the months of June, July, August, October and November, 1950.

(2) When three members of the Panchayat Board ceased to be members for not attending three consecutive meetings, he failed to report the same to the authorities concerned.

(3) He was favouring Prathipadu hamlet of Bhogapuram in preference to Bhagapuram, as he was residing in that place.

(4) He did not afford access to Harijan members to attend the meetings and that they were denied access to enter the Panchayat Board Office at the time of meetings.

The petitioner submitted explanation denying the allegations. The Inspector of Local Boards made an order dated 28th August, 1951, removing the said Bojja Venkataraju from the office of the President of the Bhogapuram Panchayat Board with effect from 4th September, 1951. The petitioner filed an appeal to the Government and the Government declined to interfere with the order of the Inspector of Local Boards. Mr. N. Subramaniam, the learned counsel for the petitioner raised before me three points :

(1) The Government and the Inspector of Local Boards were actuated by mala fides in removing him from the office.

(2) That the petitioner's removal is contrary to the express provisions of section 47 (1) of Madras Village Panchayats Act of 1950 as all or most of the acts complained of were done long before that Act came into force.

(3) Neither did the notice state that the irregularities alleged to have been committed by the petitioner were wilful nor was there a finding that the irregularities were wilful within the meaning of that section.

The question of mala fides was based upon the following allegations : In the village, there were two groups of congressmen, one the ministerial group and the other anti-ministerial group. The petitioner belonged to the anti-ministerial group. An attempt was therefore made through the Secretary of the All-India Congress Committee to influence the Minister in charge to amalgamate Bhogapuram Panchayat with the neighbouring Panchayat Board and when that attempt failed, to get the petitioner removed from the office. To substantiate this grave allegation, the learned counsel for the petitioner stated that petitions were sent through the Secretary, All-India Congress Committee, who forwarded the same with his recommendation to the Minister-in-charge, and the Minister-in-charge took personal interest in the file and expeditiously passed orders within a month. A perusal of the records does not support the allegations made against the Government. The records submitted to the court disclose that a petition for amalgamation was sent through the secretary, All India Congress Committee who forwarded it to the Minister in charge with a note "Please look into the matter and do the needful." But the same records disclose that notwithstanding the recommendation of the Secretary the Government directed the Inspector of Local Boards to make an enquiry and he reported that amalgamation was not in the interests of the Panchayat Boards. Accepting the recommendation, the Government dropped the proposal. Far from showing that the Government was influenced by the recommendation of the Secretary, it shows that notwithstanding the recommendations, they disposed of the matter on the merits in favour of the petitioner. Then it is said that the petition mentioned in the affidavit was not the petition forwarded to the Minister prior to the dropping of the amalgamation proceedings, but a petition sent subsequently. No doubt, an allegation to that effect was made in the affidavit and it was not specifically denied in the counter, but the records submitted to the Court do not show that any such petition was forwarded to the Government. If it was sent, just like the other petition, it would have found a place in the records. I cannot therefore accept the allegation that some other petition was sent with the recommendations of the Secretary of the All India Congress Committee to the Minister-in-charge. From the mere fact that the petitioner belonged to the opposite group working against the official congress, and from the other laudable circumstance that the Secretariat disposed of the matter expeditiously, I find it impossible to hold that either the Government or the Inspector of Local Boards were influenced by the ministerial group or through some other influential quarter. I hold on the record placed before me that the petitioner failed to substantiate the allegations made in the petition. I must once again state what I have been stating in many similar other applications before me, that while it is necessary in the interests of our country that the Government and their officials should act bona fide in discharge of their duties, it is equally important that members of the public should not make grave and unfounded allegations against the Government unless they are in a position to substantiate the allegations made.

There is some force in the next argument advanced by the learned counsel for the petitioner. The learned counsel argued that the Inspector of Local Boards acted illegally in removing the President under section 47 (1) of the Madras Village Panchayat Act of 1950 in respect of acts alleged to have been committed by the petitioner prior to the date when the Madras Village Panchayat Act came into force. Section 47 (1) reads :

“ The Inspector may, by notification and with effect from a date to be specified therein, remove any president or vice-president who, in his opinion, wilfully omits or refuses to carry out or disobeys the provisions of this Act or any rule, by-laws, regulations or lawful orders issued thereunder, or abuses the powers vested in him.”

This Act came into force on 1st April, 1951. Prima facie, therefore, the omission or refusal to carry out, or disobedience to the provisions of the Act or the rules framed thereunder must necessarily relate to the acts committed, or omissions made, after the Act came into force. But the learned Government Pleader contended that by reason of the transitory provision, the Inspector of Local Boards has a power to take into consideration acts done by the President at a time prior to the date when the Act came into force. He relied upon section 131 in support of his contention. S. 131 says :

“ With regard to the first reconstitution in accordance with the provisions of this Act of Panchayats in existence at the commencement thereof, and otherwise in first giving effect to the said provisions, they shall be read subject to the rules in Schedule III.”

Schedule III deals with transitional provisions. There is no rule in schedule III enabling the Inspector of Local Boards to take into consideration the acts done by the President in contravention of some provisions of a different Act. Rule 13 only saves any action taken by any authority before the commencement of the Act unless that is inconsistent with that Act. I, therefore, agree with and accept the contention of the learned counsel for the petitioner that the Inspector of Local Boards cannot take into consideration acts done or omissions made by the petitioner in his capacity as a President functioning under a different Act. Even so, the learned Government Pleader contended that the Acts taken into consideration by the Inspector of Local Boards related only to a period after 1st April, 1951. Even a perusal of the counter-affidavit filed on behalf of the Government shows that all the acts were committed long prior to the Act came into force. The meetings alleged not to have been convened relate to the years 1948, 1949 and 1950. The three members were disqualified in the year 1944. The expenditure incurred by the petitioner in respect of the hamlet in which he was living related to a period ending with 31st March, 1951. The Harijans were prevented from attending the office long prior to the Act came into force. The order passed upon the said facts is, in my view, contrary to the provisions of section 47 (1) of the Act. The Inspector of Local Boards therefore acted illegally in removing the President of the Panchayat Board under section 47 (1) of the Act. For the aforesaid reasons, I quash the orders of the Inspector of Local Boards and the Government of Madras. As regards costs, I do not think this is a fit case for awarding costs to the petitioner. As I have already stated, he made grave allegations against the Government and failed to establish the same. Further, the point now raised has not been specifically stated in the affidavit filed in support of the petition. For the aforesaid reasons, I direct the parties to bear their own costs.

Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908), section 24 (1) and (4)—Transfer of suit to Sub-Court by High Court's order—Sub-Court having no small cause jurisdiction—Revision—If lies.

A small cause suit filed in a District Munsiff's Court was transferred by order of the High Court to a Subordinate Judge's Court to be tried along with other suits in that Court. On a revision petition filed against the decision of the Sub-Court the preliminary point was raised, namely, that an appeal and not a revision would lie as the decision of the Sub-Court must be regarded as one made in the exercise of the original jurisdiction and not a decision in the exercise of small causes jurisdiction.

Held : that section 24 (4), Civil Procedure Code, should have been made by the Legislature in order to ensure that the decision of the transferee court be regarded, for the purpose of procedure, including a question of appealability as a small cause suit which originally it was undoubtedly.

Further where the High Court as in this case had made the transfer, the original disability on the Sub-Court could not survive it.

Sankaramma v. Padmanabha, (1912) 23 M.L.J. 373 : I.L.R. 38 Mad. 25 applied.

Murugesu Mudaliar v. Venkatesavali Chetty (1929) 56 M.L.J. 649, disapproved.

Petition under section 25 of Act IX of 1887, praying that the High Court will be pleased to revise the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Eluru, dated 28th February, 1950, in O.S. No. 8 of 1950.

B. V. Subramanian for Petitioner.

Ch. Sankara Sastri for Respondents.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—A small cause suit filed in the District Munsiff's Court of Eluru was transferred by an order of this Court, to the Subordinate Judge's Court at Eluru for disposal along with two other suits. In the suit out of which this revision arises there was a decision rendered by the transferee court, the Sub-Court at Eluru, against which the defendant has filed this revision petition.

Mr. Ch. Sankara Sastri, the learned advocate appearing for the plaintiffs, has taken a preliminary objection to the maintainability of this revision petition on the ground that against the decision of the Subordinate Judge an appeal would lie to the District Court. So, says counsel, this revision is incompetent. In other words, learned counsel says that the decision pronounced by the Subordinate Judge must be regarded as a decision in the exercise of his original jurisdiction and not a decision in the exercise of small cause jurisdiction. It is pointed out by Mr. Sankara Sastri that in fact the Sub-Court at Eluru had no small cause jurisdiction at the time that the transfer took place. So, says counsel, the jurisdiction actually exercised by the Sub-Court at Eluru must be referred to its original jurisdiction and not to any small cause jurisdiction. As counsel drew my attention to section 24 of the Civil Procedure Code, in connection with their arguments, it has struck me that section 24 (4) of the Code creates a real difficulty in the way of this preliminary objection raised by Mr. Sankara Sastri. The language of that section is to this effect :

"The court trying any suit, transferred or withdrawn under this section from a Court of Small Causes shall, for the purposes of such suit, be deemed to be a Court of Small Causes."

This, to my mind, puts an end to all enquiry after a transfer has taken place as to whether, after the transfer, it is the original jurisdiction of the transferee court that must be said to have been exercised, or the small cause jurisdiction of the court from which the transfer took place.

Mr. Sankara Sastri concedes that in this case he is not disputing the validity of the order of transfer made by the High Court. But he says that notwithstanding the order of transfer, the jurisdiction actually exercised by the transferee Court is referable only to the original jurisdiction vested in the transferee Court from the inception and not to the small cause jurisdiction which can be reasonably supposed to have been transferred to it by the High Court on account of its order of transfer of the cause itself from the file of the Munsif's Court to the Sub-Court.

If a provision like the one embodied in section 24 (4) of the Civil Procedure Code did not exist, the contention of Mr. Sankara Sastry might have some force. In most cases it is difficult to say, after the kind of transfer under sub-section (1) has been made, whether the subsequent trial of the transferred suit must be referred, where the transfer has been to a Court possessed of original jurisdiction, to such original jurisdiction or to the small cause jurisdiction vested in the Court in which the suit was originally instituted as a small cause suit. It is precisely to avoid enquiries into matters of such difficulty, after the order of transfer has taken place, that the provision in section 24 (4), Civil Procedure Code, seems to my mind to have been made by the Legislature in order to ensure that the decision of the transferee Court shall be regarded, for the purpose of procedure including a question of appealability, as in a small cause suit which it originally was undoubtedly. The effect of sub-section (4) in my opinion is to make the decision by the Sub-Court at Eluru in the present case a small cause decision and not an original side decision.

The only point which has given some room for anxious consideration on my part in this matter is the fact that when the order of transfer was made, the Sub-Court at Eluru had no small cause jurisdiction. But for the reasons that I have given, I think that if one has to apply the language of section 24 (4), Civil Procedure Code, as it stands the decision of the Sub-Court at Eluru in the present case was a small cause decision which accordingly would be revisable under section 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act and not appealable under section 96 of the Civil Procedure Code.

The fact that the Sub-Court at Eluru had only original jurisdiction and no small cause jurisdiction at all may entail a disability for it to entertain a suit which is of a small cause nature. But where the transfer of the suit has been made by the High Court, the original disability in the Sub-Court does not in my opinion survive it, so as to make the kind of preliminary objection raised by Mr. Sankara Sastri tenable. In support of the view that I have taken there is a Bench decision of this Court reported in *Sankararama v. Padmanabha*¹. So, if authority were needed for the conclusion that I have reached, that in this case the revision petition is competent, that decision prima facie furnishes authority in that direction. Mr. Sankara Sastri has attempted to distinguish that ruling, as one single learned Judge of this Court is said by him to have distinguished it in *Murugesu Mudaliar v. Venkatesavali Chetti*². It is unnecessary for me to deal with this point of distinction between the case in *Sankararama v. Padmanabha*¹ and the present case on the facts, as I am satisfied that the statement of principle contained in that decision, which is really what governs me sitting here as a single Judge, is supported by the prima facie view that I have formed on the language of section 24 (4), Civil Procedure Code. It is to my mind therefore clear that the preliminary objection raised by Mr. Sankara Sastri must be overruled and this civil revision petition must be proceeded with on the merits.

Turning to the merits of the small cause revision Mr. B. V. Subramaniam, the learned advocate for the petitioner-defendant, has taken the point before me that no decree could have been passed for the rent part of the suit claim on the basis of the lease between the respondent and his client because, on a construction of Exhibit A-1, the lease between the respondents and the owner of the property, one Mulukutla Venkata Ramakrishnayya, the respondents ceased to have any title to the property on the date on which they granted the lease in their turn to the present petitioner. The point in question, as learned counsel has frankly admitted before me after a verification of the pleadings and the issues, is not one which was raised by him in the Court below. I do not think, sitting in revision as I do, I can allow this point to be raised, of which there is no hint, as I have said, in the pleadings in the case or in the issues as framed by the District Munsif before the transfer of the suit to the Sub-Court at Eluru.

2. (1929) 56 M.L.J. 649.

Mr. Subramaniam draws my attention to the fact that in the judgment of the Court below it has been observed that it is not necessary to go into the question of the construction of Exhibit A-1 or of whether there were any rights in the respondents at the time of their alleged lease to the petitioner. In my opinion the Court below rightly observed to that effect because the point was not one which had been taken either in the pleadings or in the issues.

There is no other point which has been argued before me or attempted to be argued before me in this case very properly, because any other point would not be within the purview of my revisional jurisdiction under section 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act. This revision petition is therefore dismissed with costs.

The State of Madras, represented by Secretary, Local Administration Department and others

.. Respondents.

Madras District Municipalities Act (V of 1920), section 43—Scope of—Writ under Article 226 of the Constitution of India (1950)—Cannot issue at the instance of a person not aggrieved—Jurisdiction of Courts to interfere with electoral process.

There is no provision of law in the District Municipalities Act to compel the Government to give effect to the recommendations made by a municipality. The Government is not bound to accept all the recommendations of a municipality in regard to the division of the municipality into wards. All that they have to do under section 43 of the Act is to consider the proposals made by a municipality before arriving at a decision. So, where a municipality sent proposals for division into wards and the Government after considering them passed orders, it cannot be said that the Government should accept any further recommendations of the municipality or even consider them.

Where the petitioners do not state how the division into wards resulted in a diminution of their chances of being elected to the Municipal Council, an application for the issue of a writ by them is not maintainable as they cannot be said to be aggrieved or affected by the failure of the Government to comply with the provisions of section 43 of the Act even assuming that there was such a non-compliance. It is only the municipality that can complain about it. Belated attempts at the close of the argument to file a petition on behalf of the municipality should not be entertained especially when the Chairman could not come on record without sanction from the municipality.

It is nowhere laid down in the Act that the wards in a municipality are to be so divided as to make it easy for the members of a particular community to be returned to the municipal council or that equality of voting strength in the wards should be ensured.

Even assuming that the disparity in the voting strength in the matter of redistribution of wards might amount to a violation of the principles of natural justice, the matter is outside the jurisdiction of a court of law to interfere by way of a writ.

Petition under Article 226 of the Constitution of India praying that in the circumstances stated in the affidavit filed therewith the High Court will be pleased to issue a writ of certiorari or any other appropriate writ or direction, call for the records of the case and quash the Notification of the Government G.O. No. 1293, L.A., dated 1st July, 1952.

N. Subrahmanyam for Petitioners.

The Government Pleader (P. Satyanarayana Raju) for Respondents.

The Court made the following

ORDER.—This petition relates to the Municipal Council, Guntur and is taken out by twelve persons stated to be the members of that municipality for calling for the records and for quashing the notification issued by the Government in G.O. No. 1298, Local Administration, dated 1st July, 1952. In 1949 the strength of the Municipal Council, Guntur, was fixed at 32 and as the census of 1951 disclosed an increase in the population, the strength of the council had to be increased to 36 in view of the provisions of section 7 of the District Municipalities Act. This necessitated re-division of the wards into 32. Under section 43 of the District Municipalities Act, the Government have to consult the municipalities concerned before dividing the municipality into wards and doing other things mentioned in that section. Accordingly the Government called for proposals from the municipality with regard to the division of it into wards and also the wards in which seats if any should be reserved under sub-section 3 of section 7 of the Act. On receipt of this communication the Municipal Council passed a resolution on 1st November, 1951, appointing a sub-committee of eight of whom two of the present petitioners were members for formulating proposals to be submitted to the Government regarding division into wards. In order to consider the recommendations of the sub-committee, a meeting of the Council was called for on 7th March, 1952 and the agenda specifically included the consideration of the proposals of the sub-committee with regard to division of wards. But as there was no quorum, the meeting had to be adjourned. By a notice dated 13th March, 1952, the meeting was fixed for 27th March, 1952. On that day a point of order was raised that the meeting was not validly summoned as the notice for the meeting and the agenda were not signed by the Vice-Chairman, the basis of the objection being that the Vice-Chairman left the town on the 16th evening and so he could not have signed either the notice or the agenda. But this point of order was ruled out by the Vice-Chairman who was then presiding on the ground that, the notice and the agenda were signed on the 13th and there was absolutely no force in the point of order. Thereafter the proposals of the sub-committee were considered and were accepted with slight modification and they were communicated to the Government. On 30th May, 1952, some members of the Municipal Council sent a requisition for summoning a special meeting for the purpose of reconsidering the resolution of the 27th of March, 1952. Accordingly the special meeting was summoned and at that meeting it was resolved that the resolution of the 27th March, 1952, should be reconsidered. The meeting was adjourned to 20th June, 1952 and on account of some inconvenience to some of the members, the meeting could not be held on the 20th and it was postponed to 23rd June, 1952. On 23rd June, 1952, at about 11 o'clock when the council was in meeting, a notice was served on the Vice-Chairman by an advocate informing him that a suit was filed by one of the Municipal Councillors for an injunction restraining the Municipal Council from reconsidering the resolution passed on 27th March, 1952. Immediately the Vice-Chairman read out the notice received by him and adjourned the meeting entering in the minute book that the matter of reconsideration of the resolution was sub judice and left the meeting. It is alleged in the affidavit in support of the petition for the issue of writ of certiorari that 17 members of the Council stayed behind, elected one of them as the president of the meeting and passed a resolution making certain proposals to be forwarded to the Government for the division of the wards. This seems to have been communicated to the Government and it is stated that these proposals were before the Government before the notification now sought to be quashed was issued.

The main grounds of attack against the notification in question are that it is based on the proposals of the municipality made on the 27th March, 1952, which are inequitable, and unjust and is therefore ultra vires the powers of the Government, that it contravenes the provisions of section 43 and that the Government acted in a very high-handed and arbitrary manner and were actuated by mala fides in not issuing a notification in accordance with the proposals made on 23rd June, 1952.

The chief question therefore for consideration is whether the Government disregarded the provisions of section 43 of the District Municipalities Act. Section 43 of that Act runs thus :

"43. (1) For the purpose of election of councillors to a Municipal Council, the Provincial Government after consulting the Municipal Council may, by notification,

- (a) divide the municipality into wards,
 - (b) determine the wards in which the seats, if any, reserved under sub-section (3) of section 7 shall be set apart, and
 - (c) declare for whom such seats are reserved.

We are not concerned with the other provisions of the section. It is seen that under section 43 all that the Government are required to do before dividing the municipality into wards is to consult the municipality concerned. Before issuing a notification regarding the division, the Government should have the advice of the Municipal Council, that is, the views of the concerned municipality with regard to that matter. They are not bound to adopt all the proposals submitted to them in that behalf. All that they have to do before arriving at a decision with regard to division into wards is to take the recommendations of the municipality into consideration they being the final authority and the responsibility being entirely their own. In this case the notification issued on 1st July, 1952, is mainly based on the proposals made by the municipality on 27th March, 1952.

It is argued by Mr. Subramaniam, vehemently that when fresh proposals were submitted to the Government in supersession or modification of the earlier proposals the Government were bound to act only on the subsequent proposals and could not take into consideration the earlier proposals. I am afraid I cannot give effect to this argument. There is no provision of law in the Act to compel the Government to give effect to the recommendations made by the municipality. They are not bound to accept all the recommendations of the municipality in regard to the division. All that they have to do is to consider the proposals before arriving at a decision. Whatever may be the position if the Government were to act in accordance with the wishes or the resolution of the council and the resolution binding on the Government it is different when the Government have only to consult the municipality before issuing the notification. Under section 43 the capacity of the council is only advisory and it cannot insist on the Government accepting the later advice tendered by it in preference to the one that was given earlier. It is for the Government to decide whether they will accept the advice given first or that given subsequently. If the contention put forward on behalf of the petitioners is to be accepted, the position comes to this. If after passing the resolution on 23rd June the municipality again had changed its mind and submitted fresh proposals, the Government would have to give effect to the latest proposals and not to the intermediate proposals. I do not think such a position was ever contemplated by the Legislature when it enacted section 43 of the District Municipalities Act. It is not out of place to note in this case that the municipality met again on 18th August, 1952 and passed a resolution submitting proposals which are said to be completely at variance with those submitted on 23rd June, 1952. If effect is given to the argument of Mr. Subramaniam, the Government can never act promptly and expeditiously.

In support of his contention that there was no consultation by the Government as required under section 43 of the Act, Mr. Subramaniam relied on a decision of Subba Rao, J., in W.P. No. 648 of 1952. (*Pushpam v. State of Madras*¹). I do not think that the decision has any bearing on the question for consideration. There the State Government made proposals to the Municipal Council, Arupukottai, to reserve two seats for women in Ward Nos. 5 and 12. The Municipal Council expressed the opinion that the reservation for women might be made in Ward Nos. 5 and 7. The Government instead of making reservation as per the original proposal or accepting Municipal Council's recommendation made the reservation for women in Ward Nos. 2 and 12. While holding that there was consultation in regard to Ward No. 12 having regard to the fact that the original proposal of the Government included Ward No. 12 the learned Judge took the view that there was no consultation in respect of Ward No. 2. In the opinion of the learned Judge it could not be said that there had been any consultation or collaboration between the Municipal Council and the Government as regards Ward No. 2.

As I have already pointed out, the principle underlying the case has no application to this case. I think that once the Government had called for proposals and the proposals were submitted it is open to the Government to accept those proposals in preference to those subsequently made. When this is done, it cannot be said that there is no sufficient compliance with the provisions of section 43 of the District Municipalities Act. In these circumstances there is absolutely no substance in the contention that the Government disregarded relevant provisions of the Act in issuing the notification on 1st July, 1952.

I must also observe that there is absolutely no foundation for the allegations of mala fides and high-handedness made against the Government. The Government acted on the advice tendered by the municipality and it cannot be said that the action of the Government was mala fide, high-handed or arbitrary. In this connection it cannot be overlooked that the sub-Committee whose recommendations formed mainly the basis of the notification included two of the petitioners. Further in the counter filed by the Secretary to the Government, Local Administration department it is stated that the Government considered that the wards as proposed by the Council on 23rd June were equitable and approved those proposals. I do not see any reason why I should not accept this statement. Merely because the voters' list of different wards are not exactly equal, it cannot be premised that there is want of bona fides on the part of the Government. It is regrettable that mala fides should be attributed to the Government without the slightest foundation.

It was argued by the Government Pleader that even assuming that there was non-observance of the provisions of section 43 of the District Municipalities Act, the petitioners have no locus standi to maintain this application. It is submitted that the petitioners cannot be said to be aggrieved or affected by the failure of the Government to comply with the provisions of section 43 of the District Municipalities Act even assuming that there was such non-compliance. There seems to be considerable force in this contention of the Government Pleader. It cannot be said that the rights of the petitioners are involved in the failure of the Government to comply sufficiently with the requirements of section 43 of the Act. They have no direct interest in the matter. It is only the Municipality that can complain of it. The petitioners do not have any personal interest in the matter.

In this connection, I may refer to a decision of a Bench of this Court consisting of the Chief Justice and Venkatarama Ayyar, J., in W.P. No. 244 of 1952. The principle laid down there is that the right which is the foundation of a petition under Article 226 of the Constitution or a corresponding provision is a personal and individual one and it is the person whose right has been affected by any particular order that can invoke the jurisdiction of this Court under Article 226 of the Constitution. The learned Judges in that case referred to a decision of the Supreme Court in *Chiranjitlal Chowdhury v. The Union of India*¹.

In the last mentioned case the validity of the Sholapur Spinning and Weaving Company (Emergency Provisions) Act passed by Parliament was impugned by a holder of a share in the company by moving for a writ of mandamus and certain other reliefs under Article 32 of the Constitution. The Supreme Court took the view that an individual shareholder was not entitled to challenge the validity of the enactment which affects the fundamental rights of the company except to the extent that it constitutes an infraction of his rights. The observations of Fazl Ali, J., at page 32 of the report are pertinent :

"It has been held in a number of cases in the United States of America that no one except those whose rights are directly affected by a law can raise the question of the Constitutionality of that law."

I may also extract the observations of Das, J., in *In re Benwarilal Roy*² in this connection :

1. (1951) S.C.J. 29.

2. (1944) 48 C.W.N. 766.

"It is a very well-known form of process and an effective weapon in the judicial armoury for the protection of the rights and franchise alike of the Crown and the subjects."

In this connection the remarks of Wright, J., in the *Queen v. Lewisham Union*¹, are apposite :

"This Court would be far exceeding its proper functions if it were to assume jurisdiction to enforce the performance by public bodies of all their statutory duties without requiring clear evidence that the person who sought its interference had a legal right to insist upon such performance."

I therefore think that the petitioners unless they can allege that their personal rights are involved in the notification impugned cannot maintain this application. It is not alleged how the alleged unequal division has affected the petitioners personally. They do not state that this has in any way resulted in the diminution of the chances of the three petitioners who are said to be seeking election to be returned to the Municipal Council. All that is alleged in the affidavit in support of the petition is that the re-distribution of wards is not in the interest of the public.

Mr. Subramaniam cited some cases which have laid down that although a subject not having a personal right involved in the matter may not be entitled ex debito justitiæ to the issue of a writ, still it is within the discretion of the Court to issue a writ if it is established that the orders impugned are contrary to the provisions of an enactment or principles of natural justice. I do not think these decisions carry the petitioners very far assuming the dictum laid down in those rulings is correct and also that it has a bearing on the writs to be issued under Article 226 of the Constitution.

What is alleged in the present petition is that the wards are not so divided as to ensure the return of members of minority communities to the Municipal Council and that the number of voters in some wards is larger than those of other wards. It is nowhere laid down that the wards in a municipality are to be so divided as to make it easy for the members of a particular community to be returned to the Municipal Council. Nor can it be premised that there is a violation of the principles of natural justice if the wards are not so manipulated as to ensure the success of the representatives of a particular community in the Municipal election. It is not out of place to mention here that it is complained in the affidavit that one of the wards was so redistributed as to make it easy for a Brahmin candidate to be returned to the Council. There is not much force in the other complaint also. Neither under the provisions of the District Municipalities Act nor under the rules framed for the holding of elections, is it incumbent on the authorities concerned to divide the wards in such a manner as would ensure the equality of voting strength of the wards.

Even assuming that there is any force in the contention based on the disparity of votes in the matter of redistribution of wards that matter cannot be brought up for writ of certiorari. There are some decisions of the United States Supreme Court which throw some light on this issue. In *Colegrove v. Green*², there was a suit in the District Court of Illinois to have a division of Illinois State into congressional districts declared invalid by reason of inequalities in the population of the respective districts. The suit was dismissed by the District Court. While dismissing the appeal preferred against the dismissal of the suit, Justice Frankfurter who delivered the judgment of the Court remarked thus :

"We are of opinion that the petitioners ask of this Court what is beyond its competence to grant. This is one of those demands on judicial power which cannot be met by verbal fencing about 'jurisdiction'. It must be resolved by the considerations on the basis of which this Court, from time to time, has refused to intervene in controversies. It has refused to do so because due regard for the effective working of our Government revealed this issue to be of a peculiarly political nature and therefore not meet for judicial determination."

It is also stated in the judgment that in effect it was an appeal to the Federal Courts to reconstruct the electoral process of Illinois in order that it may adequately be represented in the councils of the nation. Another passage from the same judgment may also be quoted as it is relevant in this context :

1. L.R. (1897) 1 Q.B. 498.

2. 328 U.S. 549 : 90 Law. Ed. 1434.

"Nothing is clearer than that this controversy concerns matters that bring Courts into immediate and active relations with party contests. From the determination of such issues this Court has traditionally held aloof. It is hostile to a democratic system to involve the judiciary in the politics of the people. And it is not less pernicious if such judicial intervention in an essentially political contest be dressed up in the abstract phrases of the law."

I adopt the reasoning of the learned Judges in this case.

The same view is embodied in *South v. Peters*¹. The residents of the Northern Districts of Georgia filed a suit in the United States District Court for the Northern District attacking statute of Georgia which provided that county unit votes should determine the outcome of primary election, as offending against Fourteenth and Seventeenth Amendments. Under the impugned statute each county was given a number of unit votes ranging from six for the most populous counties, to two for most of the other counties and the candidates who received the highest popular vote in the county was to be awarded the appropriate number of unit votes. The ground of attack against the statute was that the votes of the residents of the most populous counties had on the average but one-tenth the weight of those in other counties and this amounted to an unconstitutional discrimination against the residents. The suit was dismissed by the Court below. On appeal this was affirmed by the Supreme Court by a majority of Judges holding that Federal Courts consistently refused to exercise their equity powers in cases posing political issues arising from a State's geographical distribution of electoral strength amongst its political sub-divisions.

In my view, these rulings embody the sound principles and I express my respectful accord with them. These decisions indicate that questions relating to delimitation of Constituencies are not justiciable, they being matters purely within the ambit of the executive power. It is for the Government to arrange the distribution of wards, taking into consideration various factors such as compactness of area, the population and the electoral strength, etc. There is bound to be disparity between one ward and another in the matter of voting strength as due regard has to be had to various other factors. The voting strength is not the sole criterion in these matters. As pointed out by Subbā Rao, J., in W.P. No. 568 of 1952 in dividing the wards the Government have to take into consideration the administrative convenience, the factor of population, the housing accommodation, the size of the divisions, the geographical position of the streets and other similar factors. It follows on this discussion that the redistribution of wards is not a matter that can be brought up for a writ of certiorari before this Court. Any interference by Courts with electoral process is not warranted under Article 226 of the Constitution.

I have to state here that just at the time of the close of his reply Mr. Subramaniam wanted to file a petition purported to be one on behalf of the municipality to come on record. I declined to grant him his request for the reason that it was too late. Further the chairman cannot come on record without the sanction of the municipality. So the request of Mr. Subramaniam for permitting him to file an application on behalf of the municipality to come on record as a party cannot be granted.

For the foregoing reasons I hold that there are absolutely no grounds for the issue of writ of certiorari and for quashing the notification contained in G.O. No. 1298, Local Administration, dated 1st July, 1952. The petition is accordingly dismissed with costs which I fix at Rs. 200.

Madras and Southern Mahratta Railway and another . . . Respondents.Railways Act (IX of 1890)—Both risk-notes "Z" and "A" executed by consignor—Claim for damages—Onus.

Where a consignor by a Railway had executed both risk-note Z and risk-note A, risk-note Z being in the general form and risk-note A is the one used in special cases where the package is defectively and insufficiently packed so as to be liable for damage, it must be held that the special contract in note A supersedes the general contract in note Z. The Railway can take advantage of either of the notes. Governor-General in Council v. Thakursi Dass, A.I.R. 1948 Pat. 45, approved.

The burden in such a case is on the consignor claiming damages to prove misconduct on the part of the Railway and not on the Railway to show how the consignment was dealt with during the course of transit.

Petition under section 25 of Act IX of 1887, praying that the High Court will be pleased to revise the order of the District Munsif's Court, Vijayawada, dated 9th September, 1949, in S.C.S. No. 73 of 1949.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff, whose suit for Rs. 113-6-3 being the value of the shortage of goods, due to him from the defendant, inclusive of proportionate freight charges has been dismissed, is the petitioner, in this civil revision petition, and the only question that arises, as the learned District Munsif has stated, is whether the defendant railway is liable for the alleged loss occasioned to the plaintiff during the transit. There was a consignment weighing 15 maunds 30 seers of textile material from Madura to Bezwada according to the railway receipt, which is marked in the case Exhibit B-5. The plaintiff as the consignee when he took delivery of the goods at Bezwada found that the quantity was short by 22 seers and he took open delivery of it. The present suit is for the recovery of the price of 22 seers of goods. The lower Court has dismissed the suit on the ground that in the absence of proof that the shortage occurred on account of the misconduct on the part of the railway, the plaintiff is not entitled to any relief.

In revision, it is argued for Messrs. John and Row by Mr. Sriramamurthi, that according to the clause in risk-note Z the railway administration shall be bound to disclose to the consignor how the consignment was dealt with throughout the time it was in its possession and control and if necessary to give evidence before the consignor is called upon to prove misconduct; but if misconduct on the part of the railway administration or its servants cannot be fairly inferred from such evidence the burden of proving such misconduct will only be on the consignor. What is contended is that in this case the railway administration has not let in any evidence to show how the consignment was dealt with during the time it was in its possession, in transit from Madura to Bezwada. If the railway had let in evidence to show that proper care was taken of the package while it was being transported both over the South Indian Railway and the Madras and Southern Mahratta Railway, then the burden shifts to the plaintiff to show misconduct on the part of the railway servants. The argument, therefore, urged is that there is no obligation on the part of the plaintiff to prove any misconduct on the part of the railway administration and if it is shown that there has been shortage during the course of transit, then the plaintiff is entitled to damages for that shortage. On the other hand, on behalf of the railway administration Mr. Sampath Kumar of Messrs. King and Partridge has put forward the contention that if the risk-note Z had stood alone, probably the plea put forward on behalf of the plaintiff might be of some avail. But, in this case, it is admitted that the consignor had executed another risk-note in the form risk-note A, which very much reduces and clinches the liability of the railway administration. Risk-note A premises by saying that it will be used when articles are tendered for carriage which are either already in bad condition or so defectively packed as to be liable to damages, leakage, or wastage in transit. Therefore, when once risk-note A is taken in addition to the ordinary risk-note Z, the inference is possible that at the time the package was tendered for transit, it was either in a bad condition or so defectively packed as to be liable to damages. Since both risk-notes have been executed, the question is whether the provisions contained in risk-note A should prevail over risk-note Z. In my view, risk-note Z is the general form of risk-note for all kinds of goods handed over to the railway administration for transit and risk-note A is the particular kind of risk-note to be used only in special cases where the package is defectively or insufficiently packed so as to be liable for damages. In view of the principle that a special contract or provision supersedes a general principle or a general contract, we have to take it that the parties have to be governed by the terms of risk-note A.

On this aspect of the case, my attention has been invited to a decision of a single Judge of the Patna High Court in *Governor-General in Council v. Thakursi Dass*¹, in which the facts are somewhat similar. There also the consignor had executed two risk-notes, risk-note A and risk-note Z. When the railway administration was confronted with a claim for damages, they choose to take their stand on the terms and provisions of risk-note A and disclaimed liability. The learned Judge, in disposing of that contention in favour of the railway administration, observed as follows:

"So much for risk-note Z. But in the present case the consignor also executed risk-note A, and thereby even further exempted the railway administration from liability. Obviously where two risk-notes have been executed limiting the railway's liability, it is open to the Railway administration to take advantage of either, and if under either it can be shown that the railway administration has escaped liability; then the suit must be dismissed, even if some other form of risk-note might also have been executed under which it might be held that liability had not been fully taken away. Risk-note A is a special form of risk-note to be used when articles are tendered for carriage which are either already in bad condition or so defectively packed as to be liable to damage, leakage or wastage in transit."

I have been asked by the learned counsel for the petitioner to dissent from the view taken by Meredith, J., of the Patna High Court. But no arguments have been advanced as to why I should dissent from that view. How and under what circumstances the consignor came to execute risk-note A has not been made clear. The fact that risk-note A has been executed raises the presumption that the railway administration insisted on its execution, because the package was either insufficiently packed or liable to leakage and damage. In this view, it is incumbent upon the plaintiff in order to mulct the railway administration with liability, to prove misconduct. He cannot sit quiet and leave the burden on the railway administration for showing how the consignment was dealt with during the course of transit and thereafter try to let in evidence of misconduct. In this case, he has not attempted to prove any misconduct trusting himself to the burden on the railway administration as contained in the clause in risk-note Z.

In addition to this, there is a further circumstance in this case that under rule 15 of the Goods Tariff General Rules, the railway administration does not admit that the weight as shown in the railway receipt has been received or that the description of the goods as furnished by the consignor is correct. The learned District Munsiff came to the conclusion that at the time the goods were accepted for transit at Madurai, there is no evidence to show that they were weighed or that the weight of 15 maunds and 30 seers was the correct weight. I am therefore of the opinion that no interference is called for in revision and this civil revision petition is dismissed but in the circumstances without costs.

Madras Buildings (Lease and Rent Control) Act (XXV of 1948), section 7 (1)—Person coming into possession as tenant setting up title in himself as owner—Decree in suit to evict on the ground of denial of landlord's title—Defendant if entitled to claim that he is "a tenant holding over" and cannot be evicted except in accordance with the Rent Control Act.

Where a person coming into possession under a lease sets up title in himself as owner and the landlord obtains a decree for ejectment on the ground of denial of his title, the person in possession cannot be evicted in execution of such decree. He will be a tenant holding over entitled to rely on the provisions of Madras Buildings (Lease and Rent Control) Act that he cannot be evicted except in accordance with the provisions of section 7 (1) of the Rent Control Act.

Even when the tenant has denied the title of the landlord and his denial has been found to be without foundation, he will be entitled to the benefits of section 7 (2) of the Act.

On appeal from the judgment and order of Krishnaswami Nayudu, J., dated 24th April, 1950, and passed in exercise of the ordinary original civil jurisdiction of the High Court in Application No. 1231 of 1950 in E. P. No. 34 of 1950 in C.S. No. 115 of 1947.

C. Srinivasachari, Raman and Raghavan for Appellant in O. S. A. No. 70 of 1950 and for Respondent in O.S.A. No. 133 of 1950.

C. Musalappa Reddy for Respondent in O.S.A. No 70 of 1950 and for Appellant in O. S. A. No. 133 of 1950.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

The Chief Justice.—These two appeals arise out of further proceedings in C.S. No. 115 of 1947, the main appeal (O.S.A. No. 102 of 1949) from which we have just disposed of. As already mentioned, in this suit Sanjeevi claimed not only possession but also mesne profits, and Rajagopalan, J., directed that mesne profits should be ascertained by the Official Referee in proceedings subsequent to the decree. The Official Referee accordingly ascertained the mesne profits and his report came up for consideration before Rajagopalan, J., who accepted the figures arrived at by the Official Referee and granted a decree to Sanjeevi for mesne profits on that basis by his order dated 2nd November, 1950. O. S. A. No. 133 of 1950 is by Chittibabu against the order. The main ground of appeal is that he is not liable in mesne profits as he must be deemed to be a tenant.

Sanjeevi filed an execution petition, E. P. No. 34 of 1950 for delivery of possession. Chittibabu raised the objection that notwithstanding the decree he was not liable to be evicted because of the provisions of S. 7 (1) of the Madras Buildings (Lease and Rent Control) Act of 1949. The Master before whom the execution petition came on for hearing first, upheld Chittibabu's contention and dismissed the execution petition. On appeal to the Judge in Chambers, Krishnaswami Nayudu, J., confirmed the order of the Master and held that execution could not issue as Chittibabu must be deemed to be a tenant entitled to the protection of the Act. O. S. A. No. 70 of 1950 is by Sanjeevi against this order.

It will be seen that the question which has to be decided before these two appeals can be disposed of is whether the provisions of the Madras Buildings (Lease and Rent Control) Act of 1949 apply to this case. In that Act "tenant" is defined as any person by whom or on whose account rent is payable for a building and includes a person continuing in possession after the termination of the tenancy in his favour. We are not concerned with the rest of the definition. Section 7 (1) runs as follows:

"A tenant in possession of a building shall not be evicted therefrom, whether in execution of a decree or otherwise and whether before or after the termination of the tenancy, except in accordance with the provisions of this section :

Provided that nothing contained in this section shall apply to a tenant whose landlord is the Provincial Government :

Provided further that where the tenant denies the title of the landlord or claims right of permanent tenancy, the Controller shall decide whether the denial or claim is bona fide and if he records a finding to that effect, the landlord shall be entitled to sue for eviction of the tenant in a civil Court and the Court may pass a decree for eviction on any of the grounds mentioned in this section notwithstanding that the Court finds that such denial does not involve forfeiture of the lease or that the claim is unfounded."

The contention on behalf of Chittibabu is that he came into possession of the building as a tenant under the lease executed by Mohanasundara in his favour on 15th April, 1944, and that though that lease expired in 1947 he must be deemed to be holding over as a tenant, since his claim under the agreement to sell in his favour had been negatived by Court. On the other hand, Mr. Srinivasachari for Sanjeevi contended that though he might have come into possession as a tenant he subsequently set up title in himself as owner and denied his title to the property. On account of this disclaimer of his status as a tenant he could not after his failure in the suit be permitted to fall back upon his original position. According to learned counsel a person who has denied that that he was a tenant could not, after such denial, be treated as a tenant within the meaning of the Act.

Undoubtedly Chittibabu denied the title of Sanjeevi who must be deemed to have succeeded to all the rights of Mohanasundara as landlord. The effect of a denial of title under the general law is set out in section 111 of the Transfer of Property Act :

"A lease of immoveable property determines,

(g) by forfeiture, that is to say

(2) in case the lessee renounces his character as such by setting up a title in a third person or by claiming title in himself, ... and the lessor or his transferee gives notice in writing to the lessee of his intention to determine the lease."

On behalf of Sanjeevi his advocate did give such notice to Chittibabu through his advocate (Ex. P-16). It was definitely stated in this notice that as Chittibabu had set up title in himself and had renounced his character as tenant Sanjeevi was giving notice of his intention to determine the lease under the provisions of section 111 (g) of the Transfer of Property Act. So it may be taken as established that under the general law the tenancy in favour of Chittibabu had been duly terminated. But the definition of "tenant" in the Rent Control Act expressly includes a person continuing in possession after the termination of the tenancy in his favour. Chittibabu would certainly be such a person. In accordance with the finding of the trial Court which has since been affirmed by us, Chittibabu did not have title to the property at any time. He must therefore be deemed to have continued all along in possession as a tenant. He would be a tenant holding over. Under the general law a tenant holding over is deemed to be governed by the same terms as the terms of the tenancy under which he came into occupation. One of such terms would be the payment of monthly rent of Rs. 25. We therefore hold that Chittibabu was a tenant within the meaning of section 2 (4) of the Rent Control Act, as a person by whom rent was payable and as a person continuing in possession after the termination of the tenancy in his favour.

Section 7 (1) expressly provides that a tenant in possession of a building shall not be evicted therefrom, whether before or after the termination of the tenancy, whether in execution of a decree or otherwise, except in accordance with the provisions of that section. This provision is a complete answer to the execution petition filed by Sanjeevi for eviction. In this view it is not necessary to consider the effect of the proviso because the procedure indicated in the proviso has not been followed in this case. That proviso contemplates first a petition before the Rent Controller himself for eviction and a denial of title in such proceeding. If the Controller decides that the denial of title is bona fide and records a finding to that effect, then the landlord will be entitled to sue for eviction of the tenant in a civil Court. But even here the decree for eviction can only be passed on any of the grounds mentioned in section 7. Though the proviso in terms will not have any application to the facts of this case; the principle of the proviso supports the view which we have already taken as regards the status of Chittibabu as a tenant under the Act. The effect of the proviso is that even if a civil Court finds that the claim of the tenant is not well founded the tenant can be evicted only on any of the grounds mentioned in section 7. In other words, even when the tenant has denied the title of the landlord and his denial has been found to be without foundation, he will be entitled to the benefits of section 7 (2).

We therefore hold that Chittibabu cannot be evicted in execution of the decree for possession obtained by Sanjeevi. We also hold that as Chittibabu must be deemed to have continued to be in possession as a tenant he would be liable only for the rent fixed under the lease in his favour and would not be liable for mesne profits. Of course, this would not prevent the landlord or the tenant from approaching the Rent Controller with an application to fix the fair rent.

Mr. Srinivasachari for Sanjeevi raised a technical objection that the plea under the Rent Control Act should have been raised in the suit. It was in a manner raised in the written statement, but was not dealt with by the learned trial Judge. But as the entire case was at large before us in appeal we see no point in this objection. It is open now to us to deal with this plea in appeal.

Another contention was raised on behalf of Sanjeevi Naidu which has no substance whatever, namely, that though Chittibabu might be a tenant within the definition in the Rent Control Act, still there is nothing to preclude the Court from decreeing mesne profits. We are unable to follow this contention. We have held Chittibabu to be a tenant because in our opinion he is liable to pay the rent as fixed under the lease deed in his favour. If that be so, how could he at the same time be made liable for a higher or different amount? The entire scheme of the Rent Control Act proceeds on the liability of the tenant to pay a definite rent. Mesne profits, on the other hand, should be ascertained from time to time and may vary.

In the result O. S. A. No. 70 of 1950 must be dismissed. O.S.A. No. 133 of 1950 must be allowed and the decree, instead of directing Chittibabu to pay mesne profits, should direct him to pay rent at the rate of Rs. 25 per month till the date of this judgment. There will be no order as to costs in O. S. A. No. 70 of 1950. In O. S. A. No. 133 of 1950, the appellant will get his costs from the respondent.

Respondents.

Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894)—Acquisition of land for irrigation channel—Validity—Public purpose—Test—Constitution of India (1950), Articles 19 (1) (f) and 31 (2)—Scope.

The power of the State to acquire property compulsorily is a power to acquire it only for a public purpose. The expression "public purpose" is not capable of a precise definition and has not a rigid meaning. The State has both the right and is under a duty to regulate the distribution of irrigation water in the interests of the public. The Government has to provide major distribution channels and smaller channels which ultimately lead the water to the several fields. An acquisition for carrying out any part of such irrigation scheme will certainly be acquisition for a public purpose which is also a State purpose. Though initially a channel for which land is acquired will serve only one part of land owned by a single individual in course of time it would also serve other lands as well, it must be held that the acquisition is for a public and State purpose, namely, extension of irrigation.

The fact that initially only one individual stands to benefit by the proposed channel would not make the acquisition any the less an acquisition for a public purpose.

Thambiran Padayachi v. The State of Madras, (1952) 2 M.L.J. 298, followed.

Petition under Article 226 of the Constitution of India praying that in the circumstances stated in the affidavit filed therewith the High Court will be pleased to issue a writ of certiorari calling for the records relating to award No. 3 of 1951 R.O.C. No. 4234 of 1951 dated 10th July, 1951, on the file of the Sub-Collector (Land Acquisition Officer), Hospet, Bellary District and quash the same.

M. S. Ramachandra Rao for Petitioners.

The Advocate-General (V. K. Thiruvengkatachari) for the Government Pleader (P. Satyanarayana Raju) and D. R. Krishna Rao for Respondents.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

The Chief Justice.—The two petitioners in this petition are the joint pattadars of S. No. 406 in the village of Kamalapuram, Hospet taluk, Bellary district. The said plot of land and other plots covered by S. No. 405, etc., belonging to the petitioners are being irrigated by water taken from sluice No. 68 in the Government Roya Channel through a main distributory channel which runs over some of the lands belonging to the petitioners as well as on poramboke lands. The third respondent is the pattadar of S. No. 404 lying to the north of S. No. 406. Though it is registered as dry, it can be cultivated with wet crops if there is adequate water supply. After obtaining reports from the Revenue Officers the Collector sanctioned a proposal for the acquisition of a portion of S. No. 406 belonging to the petitioners for excavating a field distributory channel to irrigate S. No. 404 belonging to the third respondent, provided the cost of the acquisition was met by the third respondent. Accordingly a notification under section 4 (1) of the Land Acquisition Act was published in the Fort St. George Gazette of the 31st January, 1951, wherein it was stated that an extent of 6 cents in S. No. 406 was needed for a public purpose, to wit, for excavating a field distributory channel to irrigate S. No. 404 from sluice No. 68 of the Roya Channel. After due enquiry under section 5 (a) of the Act a notification under section 6 was published on the 24th April, 1951. The petitioners challenge the validity of this acquisition on the ground that the purpose of the acquisition being solely for the benefit of a single individual, namely, the third respondent, cannot be said to be a public purpose. It must now be taken as well established that the power of the State to acquire property compulsorily is a power to acquire it only for a public purpose. Public purpose is a content of the power itself. Mahajan, J., in the recent Supreme Court decision, *State of Bihar v. Kameshwar Singh*¹ observed thus :

“Public purpose is an essential ingredient in the very definition of the expression ‘eminent domain’ as given by Nichols and other constitutional writers The exercise of the power to acquire compulsorily is conditional on the existence of a public purpose Jurisdiction to acquire private property by legislation can only be exercised for a public purpose. It may be the purpose of the Union or the purpose of the State or any other public purpose. Private property cannot be acquired for a private purpose.”

The only question, therefore, is whether the purpose of the impugned acquisition can be said to be a public purpose. There is no definition of “public purpose” either in the Constitution or any other relevant statute. Indeed, as pointed out by the Supreme Court, the expression “public purpose” is not capable of a precise definition and has not a rigid meaning.

“The definition of the expression is elastic and takes its colour from the statute in which it occurs, the concept varying with the time and state of society and its needs.” (*State of Bihar v. Kameshwar Singh*¹.)

Mr. M. S. Ramachandra Rao, learned counsel for the petitioners, contended that whatever test be applied it could never be said that when the purpose is ostensibly only to benefit one particular individual, it is a public purpose. In support of his contention he relied on two decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States.

1. (1952) S.C.J. 354 : 65 L.W. 527.

In *Missouri Pacific Ry. Co. v. Nebraska Ex rel, Board of Transportation*¹, the validity of an order of the Nebraska State Board of Transportation requiring a railroad company to surrender a part of its land to private persons for the purpose of building and maintaining their elevator upon it was questioned. The Court held that it was illegal as it would result in the taking of private property of a person without his consent for the private use of another. The principle of the decision is to be found in the following passage :

" This Court, confining itself to what is necessary for the decision of the case before it, is unanimously of opinion that the order in question so far as it required the railroad corporation to surrender a part of its land to the petitioners, for the purpose of building and maintaining their elevator upon it, was in essence and effect, a taking of private property of railroad corporation, for the private use of the petitioners. The taking by a State of the private property of one person or corporation, without the owner's consent, for the private use of another, is not due process of law, and is a violation of the 14th Article of Amendment of the Constitution of the United States."

It is important to notice that the order in question in that case was not and was not claimed to be a taking of private property for a public use under the right of eminent domain. The decision therefore is not of much assistance to us.

In *Chicago St. Paul Minneapolis and Omaha Ry. Co. v. Holmberg*², also there was no question of the State's exercise of its powers of eminent domain. A State railroad commission had, by an order, required, the construction at the expense of a railroad company and the landowner of an underpass connecting the farm lands on both sides of the railroad tracks solely for the convenience and benefit of the landowner in the use of his own property. The Supreme Court held that it was invalid as taking property without due process of law.

Learned counsel also referred us to the following passages from Willis book on Constitutional law :

" According to the newer viewpoint there is a public use if the thing taken is useful to the public Under this rule it is not necessary for the benefit to be for the whole community, but it must be for a considerable number. The fact that benefit also inures to a private individual is no objection."

After referring to instances where it had been held that there was sufficient public use, the learned text writer goes on to say :

" In these cases there is not necessarily a general use by the public, but there is a general benefit to the public. Private enterprises are thus allowed to exercise the sovereign power of eminent domain, not because they are taking the property for their own use, but because in taking the property for their use they are benefiting the public. Of course, where the taking will benefit a private person alone, there is not a public use even in this newer sense."

The learned Advocate-General who appeared for the State invited our attention to two other decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States. The first one is *Fallbrook Irrigation District v. Bradley*³. In this case an Act of California which provided for the acquisition of land whenever 50 landowners or a majority of them in a particular locality required it for construction of a water course was upheld as valid, though it was attacked on the ground that as the acquisition would only benefit particular landowners who get water from the channel and the public as such were not benefited there was no public user. The Court observed :

" To irrigate and thus to bring into possible cultivation these large masses of otherwise worthless lands would seem to be a public purpose and a matter of public interest, not confined to the landowners or even to any one section of this State. The fact that the use of the water is limited to the landowners is not therefore a fatal objection to this legislation. It is not essential that the entire community, or even any considerable portion thereof, should directly enjoy or participate in an improvement in order to constitute a public use."

In *Clark v. Mash*⁴, it was held that a statute of Utah under which an individual landowner could condemn a right of way across his neighbour's land for the enlargement of an irrigation ditch therein in order to enable him to obtain water from a stream in which he had an interest to irrigate his land which otherwise would remain absolutely valueless was valid. It is interesting to notice the reasoning of the Court in arriving at its decision. Peckham, J., who delivered the opinion of the Court emphasised the fact that the validity of a statute permitting acquisition by an individual for the purpose of obtaining water for his land may depend upon a number of considerations relating to the situation of the State and its possibilities for land irrigation, and he observed :

"But we do not desire to be understood by this decision as approving of the broad proposition . . . that private property may be taken in all cases where the taking may promote the public interest and tend to develop the natural resources of the State. We simply say that in this particular case, and upon the facts stated in the findings of the Court, and having reference to the conditions already stated, we are of opinion that the use is a public one, although the taking of the right of way is for the purpose simply of thereby obtaining the water for an individual, where it is absolutely necessary to enable him to make any use whatever of his land, and which will be valuable and fertile only if water can be obtained. Other landowners adjoining the defendant in error, if any there are, might share in the use of the water by themselves taking the same proceedings to obtain it, and we do not think it necessary, in order to hold the use to be a public one, that all should join in the same proceeding, or that a company should be formed to obtain the water which the individual landowner might then obtain his portion of from the company by paying the agreed price, or the price fixed by law."

The learned Advocate-General also cited to us passages from Nichols on Eminent Domain. The learned author attempts a definition of "public use" which is consistent with the weight of judicial authority. It is as follows :

"It is a public use for which property may be taken by eminent domain,

(1) To enable the United States or a State or one of its subdivisions or agencies to carry on its governmental functions, and to preserve the safety, health and comfort of the public whether or not the individual members of the public may make use of the property so taken, provided the taking is made by a public body ;

(2) To serve the public with some necessity or convenience of life which is required by the public as such and which cannot be readily furnished without the aid of some Governmental power, whether or not the taking is made by a public body, provided the public may enjoy such service as of right ;

(3) In certain special and peculiar cases sanctioned by ancient customs or justified by the requirements of unusual local conditions, to enable individuals to cultivate their land or carry on business in a manner in which it could not otherwise be done, if their success will indirectly enhance the public welfare, even if the taking is made by a private individual and the public has no right to service from him or enjoyment of the property taken."

He points out that it is not the number of people who will participate in or benefit by the use for which the property is sought to be taken that determines whether the use is or is not public and also that merely because the whole or part of the expense is met by those benefited it should not be held that the use for which the property was taken was not public.

The following passage in Rottschaefer on Constitutional Law summarises the effect of the decisions on this aspect of the law of eminent domain :

"It is frequently sufficient if the use to which the private condemnor is to put the property is one of widespread general public benefit not involving any right on the part of the general public itself to use the property. The adoption of this general test has expanded the scope of valid public uses to include uses by private parties in purely private activities. The public benefit that has been relied upon to sustain such exercises of the power of eminent domain has usually consisted in that derived from the development of a State's important natural resources rendered possible by such exercises of that power. It is on that basis that one private person has been permitted to condemn land for the purpose of conveying water in ditches across that land in order to properly irrigate his own, and to condemn a right of way across another's land for an aerial bucket line necessary for the working of the condemnor's mine. The same considerations are frequently invoked in sustaining the condemnation of property required by drainage or irrigation districts for the accomplishment of their objectives, and the condemnation of land and water rights to be used for developing power for general public distribution."

With this discussion of the material authorities on the question, let us examine the nature of the present acquisition. In the first place the extent of land acquired will vest in the State itself and will not be transferred to any private person. As mentioned in the notifications under sections 4 and 6 the land will be used for excavating a field distributory channel. The acquisition will not have the effect of transferring the property of one person to another person for his private use. What is acquired is acquired for the State.

The next question is, why does the State acquire it? It is here that a point is made of the fact that it is acquired for the private use of the third respondent. Prima facie this is so. But there are certain other facts which should also be borne in mind before we judge the real purpose of the acquisition.

It is now well established that one of the most important functions of the State in India is to provide for the irrigation of lands capable of being cultivated with wet crops. With this end in view the State is bound to maintain works of irrigation already existing and also to construct new works of irrigation and expand the old works. The State has both the right and is under a duty to regulate the distribution of water in the interests of the public. The Government have the right to distribute the water from Government channels for the benefit of the public subject to the rights of landholders to continue to receive such supply as is sufficient for their accustomed requirements (vide *Krishna Ayyan v. Venkatachalla Mudali*¹, *Sankaravadivelu Pillai v. Secretary of State for India in Council*² and Sundararaja Aiyangar's Land Tenures in the Madras Presidency, 2nd Edn., page 181). Any scheme under which the Government provide for the utilisation of the available water in Government sources of supply for the extension of cultivation will be a public purpose. The Government for this purpose has not only to construct and maintain the main sources of supply but also to provide for distribution of the water to the various pieces of land which could be irrigated with the available water by means of distributory channels. Such channels must necessarily be of two kinds, namely, the major distributory channels and the smaller distributory channels which ultimately lead the water to the several fields. All these together constitute a network of water supply for irrigation. An acquisition for carrying out any part of this scheme will certainly be an acquisition for a public purpose, which is also a State purpose. In the present case it appears from the correspondence that passed between the Revenue officials before the acquisition was finally sanctioned that though immediately S. No. 404 alone would be benefited by the excavation of the small field channel in S. No. 406, in course of time the new channel would also serve to benefit other lands as well. Therefore the present acquisition must be held to be an acquisition for a public and State purpose, namely, extension of irrigation. The fact that now only one individual stands to benefit by the channel proposed to be excavated on the site acquired would not make the acquisition any the less an acquisition for a public purpose. It was observed by this Bench in a recent case that :

"It is not necessary that it (property) should be available to the public as such. It might be in favour of individuals provided they are benefited not as individuals but in furtherance of a scheme of public utility." (*Thambiran Padayachi v. State of Madras*³.)

The present acquisition would fall within the category indicated in that decision.

Madras Agriculturists Relief Act (IV of 1938), section 8—Explanation I, introduced by Act XXIII of 1948—Scope—Open payments towards a promissory note—Settlement of accounts and execution of fresh promissory note for balance before 1st October, 1937—Effect—Adjustments and appropriations so made—Not liable to be re-opened. Interpretation of statutes—Amendments—Construction—Matters that can be taken into consideration.

Where there has been in fact a settlement of accounts and a fresh document executed by the debtor, that must necessarily have the effect of discharging the interest on the one hand and of appropriating the payment on the other. Such a transaction is outside Explanation I to Section 8 of Madras Act IV of 1938. Appropriations made by a debtor as part of a settlement are not liable to be reopened under Explanation I to section 8. (Case-law discussed).

To arrive at the real meaning of a statute it is necessary to consider (1) what was the law before the Act was passed, (2) what was the mischief or defect for which the law had not provided, (3) what remedy Parliament has appointed and (4) the reason of the remedy.

The Order of Reference to the Full Bench by Rajamannar, C.J., and Venkatarama Aiyar, J., dated 28th February, 1952 was delivered by

The Chief Justice.—The question raised in the appeal is of considerable importance and relates to the construction of explanation (1) to section 8 of Madras Act IV of 1938 recently introduced by Act XXIII of 1948. Our attention has been drawn to an unreported decision of a Division Bench in O. S. A. No. 17 of 1948, in which the learned Judges took the view that this Explanation would not affect adjustments and settlements already made between creditor and debtor. This decision has since been followed by a learned Judge sitting single in S. A. No. 2115 of 1947 and by another Division Bench in C. M. A. No. 180 of 1950. We are inclined to think that the learned Judges who decided O. S. A. No. 17 of 1948 have not attached sufficient importance to the word "expressly" which occurs in the Explanation in arriving at their conclusion. In the appeal now before us Panchapakesa Aiyar, J., has taken a contrary view. We think it desirable that there should be an authoritative ruling as to the interpretation of this new provision. The appeal will be posted before a Full Bench of three Judges.

Pursuant to the aforesaid Order, this appeal coming on for hearing, the Judgment of the Court was delivered by Venkatarama Aiyar, J.—This appeal has been referred for the decision of a Full Bench as it raises a question of considerable importance on the construction of Explanation (1) to section 8 of the Madras Agriculturists Relief Act, IV of 1938, on which there is a conflict of judicial opinion. The facts are that on 12th November, 1921, the respondent borrowed a sum of Rs. 2000 from one Lakshminarayana Sastri and executed a promissory note therefor Ex. D-1). Nine payments were made towards this promissory note and endorsed thereon. We are concerned in this appeal with five of them. The endorsements relating to them have been marked as Exs. D-1 (e) to D-1 (j) and they state that the payments were made "towards principal and interest." On 14th July, 1929, there was a settlement of accounts and after giving credit for the payments made, the balance found due was Rs. 1,658 and for this amount a fresh promissory note Ex. D-2 was executed. The appellant is an endorsee of this promissory note. The respondent filed O. P. No. 23 of 1943 on the file of the Sub-Court, Rajahmundry, for declaring the amount payable under the promissory note after scaling the debt under the provisions of the Act. Several contentions were raised, but only one of them is now material and that is as to how the five payments under Exs. D-1 (e) to D-1 (j) should be dealt with. The respondent claimed that being open payments they were liable to be appropriated towards the principal, while the appellant contended that those payments had been appropriated towards interest at the settlement which resulted in the execution of the promissory note Ex. D-2 and that that appropriation could not be re-opened. The Courts below held that though the payments under Exs. D-1 (e) to D-1 (j) were open payments at the time when they were made, the debtor had appropriated them towards interest at the time of Ex. D-2, and that such appropriation could not be re-opened. Against that decision the respondent preferred C. M. S. A. No. 150 of 1947 on the file of this Court and while that was pending, Explanation (1) to section 8 of the Act came to be enacted by the Madras Act XXXIII of 1948. That Explanation is as follows :

*Letters Patent Appeal No. 66 of 1949.

14th November, 1952.

"In determining the amount repayable by a debtor under this section every payment made by him shall be credited towards the principal, unless he has expressly stated in writing that such payment shall be in reduction of interest."

Panchapakesa Aiyar, J., who heard the appeal held that the payments in question should be appropriated towards the principal, as the settlement of accounts and the execution of the promissory note did not amount to an express statement by the debtor that they should be appropriated towards interest as required by the new Explanation. Against this judgment, the creditor has preferred this appeal under the Letters Patent. The point for decision in this appeal is whether on a true construction of the Explanation, appropriations made by the debtor as part of a settlement could be reopened and the payments reappropriated towards the principal.

In an old English case known as *Heydon's case*¹, Lord Coke observed that to arrive at the real meaning of a Statute it was necessary to consider :

"(1) what was the law before the Act was passed ; (2) what was the mischief or defect for which the law had not provided ; (3) what remedy Parliament has appointed ; and (4) the reason of the remedy."

In *Mayfair Property Co., In re, Bartlett v. Mayfair Property Co.*², Lindley, M.R., stated :

"In order properly to interpret any statute it is as necessary now, as it was when Lord Coke reported *Heydon's case*¹, to consider how the law stood when the statute to be construed was passed, what the mischief was for which the old law did not provide, and the remedy provided by the statute to cure that mischief."

Following these principles, it is necessary to consider what changes were effected in the general law relating to appropriation of payments by a debtor, by the Madras Agriculturists Relief Act (IV of 1938) ; what led to the further amendment in 1948 ; and what its precise effect is.

The principles governing appropriation of payments made by a debtor are under the general law well settled. When a debtor makes a payment, he has a right to have it appropriated in such manner as he decides and if the creditor accepts the payment, he is bound to make the appropriation in accordance with the directions of the debtor. This is what is known in England as the rule in *Clayton's case*³, and it is embodied in section 59 of the Contract Act. But when the debtor has not himself made any appropriation, that right devolves on the creditor who can exercise it at any time (vide *Cory Bros. and Co. v. Owners of the Turkish Steamship "MECCA"*⁴), and even at the time of the trial. (Vide *Seymore v. Pickett*⁵) That is, section 60 of the Contract Act. It is only when there is no appropriation either by the debtor or the creditor that the Court appropriates the payments as provided in section 61, of the Contract Act. That was the law in force at the time when the Madras Agriculturists Relief Act (IV of 1933) was enacted. That Act introduced a substantial change in the right of a creditor to make an appropriation under section 60 of the Contract Act, if there had been no appropriation by the debtor. Section 8 (1) of the Act provides that all interest outstanding on 1st October 1937, shall be deemed to have been discharged. On this, the question arose whether payments which had remained unappropriated either by the debtor under section 59 or by the creditor under section 60 prior to 1st October, 1937, could thereafter be appropriated by the creditor towards interest. But for the Act, they could have been. But it was held that as on 1st October, 1937, all arrears of interest stood discharged, it was not open to the creditor thereafter to exercise his right of appropriation and that all such payments should be appropriated only to the principal. Vide *Duraiswami Aiyangar v. Raghavachariar*¹. It was further held that payments made generally towards the debt or "towards principal and interest" were open payments and were liable on the above principle to be appropriated towards the principal after 1st October, 1937. Vide *Veeraju v. Rayanin Dora Garu*² and *Venkateswarlu v. Narayanaraju*³. These authorities were understood as settling the law on the subject and had been uniformly followed, until we come to the decision in *Duraiswami Mudaliar v. Md. Amiruddin*⁴. There a sum of Rs. 5400 was paid "in part payment of a decree debt in C.S. No. 500 of 1930" and it was held by Gentle, C.J., and by Bell, J., that the payment was liable to be appropriated first towards the interest due under the decree and then to the principal. The reason for the decision was thus stated by the Chief Justice :

"The principle of law which always has been observed and recognised is that when a payment is made in respect of principal and interest, there is an inference that the payment is ordinarily first allocated towards interest and thereafter any balance in respect of principal. That was recognised in the decisions under the Madras Agriculturists Relief Act, 1933, in *Ramaswami Aiyar v. Ramayya Sastrigal*⁵, and in *Venkateswarlu v. Ramaswami Iyer*⁶. In my view, the recognised and acknowledged principle regarding the utilisation of a payment which is made in respect of principal and interest has in no way been interfered with by any provision in the Madras Agriculturists Relief Act, 1938."

In the two decisions referred to in the judgment, there had in fact been appropriation of the payments before the Act came into force. The larger principle laid down in this decision was that when there was no specific appropriation by either the debtor or the creditor, an inference of appropriation would arise in law and that therefore the payments could not be re-appropriated towards principal under section 8 (1) of the Act. This of course was a reversal of the long course of authorities which had held that unless there was specific appropriation, the payments should be held to be open and that such payments should be appropriated towards principal as by the operation of section 8 (1) there would be no interest outstanding. The legislature then intervened and enacted Explanation I to section 8 by the Amendment Act (XXIII of 1948). The substance of that Explanation is that payments made by a debtor could be appropriated towards interest only if he had stated expressly in writing that they should be so appropriated. The object of the amendment was to take away the right of the creditor to appropriate payments towards interest unilaterally, as he would be entitled to under section 60 of the Contract Act; to nullify the effect of the decision in *Duraiswami Mudaliar v. Md. Amiruddin*⁴, and to give legislative recognition to a principle which prior thereto rested on a course of judicial decisions. Thus far, the scope of the Explanation is clear and intelligible.

The question now is, does it extend further and have the effect of annulling appropriations made, not by the creditor unilaterally, but by the debtor himself as part of a settlement. Before the amendment, it had been held in a series of cases that where accounts between the parties had been settled and a fresh document executed there was appropriation by the debtor and that such appropriation could not be re-opened under the provisions of Act IV of 1938. In *Venkayamma v. Ramakotayya*¹, the debtor executed a promissory note on 23rd August, 1931, for Rs. 259-9-6. Towards this note he paid Rs. 150 on 9th October, 1932, without expressly appropriating it either towards principal or interest. On 17th August, 1934, there was a settlement of accounts under which after giving credit for Rs. 150 with counter-interest the balance was struck at Rs. 162-10-0, and for that a promissory note was executed on 17th August, 1934. One of the questions raised was whether the payment of Rs. 150 on 9th October, 1932, which was an open payment when made should under the Act be appropriated towards the principal. It was held by Wadsworth and Patanjali Sastri, JJ., that there was an appropriation of the payment by the debtor on 17th August, 1934, and that it could not be re-opened. In *Vemareddi Rangareddi v. Venkataswami*², there was a mortgage in January, 1922 towards which two payments had been made on 29th January, 1934, the accounts were settled and a fresh mortgage was executed. In holding that the payments made under the mortgage of 1922 could not be treated as open and unappropriated, the court observed :

“When these two payments were adjusted to the debt in order to calculate the amount for which the later document was executed it could no longer be contended that they were unappropriated.”

The point for decision is whether by the Explanation the legislature intended to alter the law as laid down in these decisions. An examination of the scheme of section 8 does not support the contention that such alteration was intended. Section 8 (1) enacts that “all interest outstanding” on 1st October, 1937, shall be deemed to be discharged. These words pre-suppose that interest as such remains outstanding and payable on that date and it is that outstanding interest that is discharged by the operation of the statute. If in fact there was no interest payable on that date, section 8 (1) would have no application. Likewise, when the Explanation provides that the payments shall be credited towards principal, it pre-supposes that those payments are still open and unappropriated. In other words, for the Explanation to apply there must be on the one hand arrears of interest outstanding and payable and on the other, payments, open and unappropriated and the Explanation provides how in that contingency the payments are to be appropriated. Where there has been in fact a settlement of accounts and a fresh document executed by the debtor, that must necessarily have the effect of discharging the interest on the one hand and of appropriating the payment on the other. Such a transaction would therefore seem to be outside the Explanation.

It is argued for the respondent that Ex. D-2 does not satisfy the requirements of the Explanation inasmuch as it does not expressly appropriate the payments towards interest and that it should therefore be disregarded and that if Ex. D-2 is disregarded, we are thrown back on the original payments which, being open payments, should be appropriated towards principal. Ex. D-1 is for Rs. 2000 and after giving credit for the payments made towards it, the balance struck is Rs. 1658 and that is the principal under Ex. D-2. As the amount under Ex. D-2 is less than the principal of Ex. D-1, the whole of it must represent the balance of principal due under Ex. D-1 and that means that the payments had been appropriated in discharge of the entire interest due on Ex. D-1, and also a part of the principal. Clearly, therefore, there is appropriation towards interest. Vide *Venkayamma v. Ramakotayya*¹. The contention of the respondent is that the Explanation requires something more than a writing signed by the debtor from which an appropriation could be inferred, that the document should expressly state that the payments were to be appropriated towards interest and the appropriation involved in Ex. D-2 is not saved by the Explanation. But, as already mentioned, the Explanation contemplates a stage when there are open payments, remaining to be appropriated and appropriations being made in the process of scaling the debt in accordance with the provisions of the Act. But where the payments did not exist as payments on 1st October, 1937, but had become merged in a settlement entered into prior thereto, the Explanation would be inapplicable.

1. (1941) 1 M.L.J. 316.

2. (1942) 2 M.L.J. 592.

This question has also been considered in a number of cases which have come up before this Court subsequent to the decision of Panchapakesa Aiyar, J., now under appeal. In O. S. A. No. 17 of 1948, Horvill and Raghava Rao, JJ., held that the true scope of Explanation I was only to nullify the decision in *Duraiswami Mudaliar v. Md. Amiruddin*¹, and that it had not the effect of overruling the line of authorities which had held that settlement made by parties involving appropriation of payments could not be re-opened. This decision was followed by Govinda Menon and Ramaswami, JJ., in C.M.A. No. 185 of 1950 and by Subba Rao, J., in S. A. No. 2115 of 1947. We agree with the views expressed in these decisions and do not find sufficient reason for upsetting the construction which had been put upon the Explanation in a long course of decisions. We are accordingly of opinion that appropriations made by a debtor as part of a settlement are not liable to be re-opened under Explanation I to section 8.

In the result, this appeal is allowed and the decree of the Courts below are restored with costs throughout:

Practice—Appeal—Law amended by statute subsequent to suit—Duty of Court to apply—Muslim Personal Law (Shariat) Act (XXVI of 1937)—Amendment by Madras Act (XVII of 1949)—Applicability to pending appeals.

The High Court in appeal has not only power but a duty to apply the law as it stands on the date of the hearing of the appeal. But it must be noted that in applying the law so as to govern the rights of the parties that which was not law on the date of the institution of the suit but became law subsequently, Courts must take care not to disturb settled or completed transactions which certainly cannot be reopened by reason of a change in the law.

The provisions of the Muslim Personal Law (Shariat) Act (XXVI of 1937) as amended by Madras Act (XVII of 1949) abrogating custom was held to apply in the instant case in pending appeal:

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Chingleput in A. S. No. 13 of 1945 preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsiff, Poonamallee, in O. S. No. 439 of 1941

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal mainly raises the question of the scope and applicability of the Muslim Personal Law (Shariat) Application Act, (Act No. XXVI of 1937). The plaintiffs claiming to be the daughter and widow of one Fakruddin instituted the suit for a declaration that they are entitled to enjoy the properties mentioned in the plaint, manage the durgah, perform the Urs festival and receive all the incomes, endowments and perquisites thereof once in every eight years according to their turn on the ground that the properties originally belonged to four Mussalmans and they have been enjoyed from time immemorial for a number of generations in four equal shares by the respective descendants of four persons mentioned and that the plaintiffs and the defendants are the descendants of one Shaik Mohammed. Their case is that their turn comes once in every eight years. In 1926 during their turn they performed the Urs festival and in April, 1934, when arrangements were made for the celebration of the Urs festival there was objection by the defendants and therefore they sued for the declaration and injunction. Defendants denied the allegations as to the plaintiffs taking part in the Urs celebrations in 1926 and it was contended that the properties having been endowed as inams for the purpose of the maintenance of the suit durgah and rendering of religious services, the surplus income after meeting all the expenses was to be taken by the office-holder, and that the terms of the grant and immemorial custom governing institutions of this kind and the rules of Mohammadan Law governing the parties prohibited the plaintiffs who are female members taking part or participating in the management of such institutions and enjoying the perquisites of the office. Both the Courts below have found against the plaintiffs on the question of the custom pleaded and rejected their claim.

A great volume of evidence has been adduced in proof of the custom which has been elaborately dealt with by the trial Court and considered with approval by the learned Subordinate Judge who held that it has been established by unimpeachable evidence that the custom pleaded by the defendants was true. I am not persuaded to hold a different view other than that taken by the Courts below as regards the existence of the custom pleaded. Long course of events for nearly over a century and oral and documentary evidence have, in my view, established the essential attributes of a legally binding custom. But for the custom, it is not suggested that the Muslim Personal Law (Shariat) would debar the female members from taking part in the management of such institutions.

During the hearing of the appeal the attention of the learned Subordinate Judge was drawn to a piece of legislation which became law relating to Succession and Inheritance governing Muslims (viz.,) the Muslim Personal Law (Shariat) Act (XXVI of 1937). The learned Subordinate Judge disposed of the question by observing that the Act cannot apply to the present case as the suit was instituted prior to the Act taking effect. The appeal was disposed of on the 20th June, 1946, and by that time, Act XXVI of 1937 had not been amended. Section 2 of the unamended Act is as follows :

"Notwithstanding any customs or usage to the contrary, in all questions (save questions relating to agricultural land) regarding intestate succession special property of females, including personal property inherited or obtained under contract or gift or any other provision of personal law, marriage, dissolution of marriage, including talaq, ila, zihar, lian, khula and mubaraat, maintenance, dower, guardianship, gifts, trusts and trust properties, and wakfs (other than charities and charitable institutions and charitable and religious endowments) and the rule of decision in cases where the parties are Muslims shall be the Muslim Personal Law (Shariat)."

This section was amended by the Madras Act XVIII of 1949 and the amended section is as follows :

"Notwithstanding any custom or usage to the contrary, in all questions regarding intestate succession, special property of females, including personal property inherited or obtained under contract or gift or any other provision of personal law, marriage, dissolution of marriage, including talaq, ilah, zihar, lian, khula and mubaraat, maintenance, dower, guardianship, gifts, trusts and trust properties and wakfs, the rule of decision in cases where the parties are Muslims shall be the Muslim Personal Law (Shariat)."

There is no doubt that if the Act is applicable to the parties custom will cease to have any force and their personal law being applicable the plaintiffs would be entitled to participate in the management and to enjoy the emoluments of the trust properties and the prohibition of the female members taking part by reason of custom ceasing to have any effect. Basheer Ahmed Sayeed, J., in *Ayisumina v. Mayamooty Unma*¹, in a case relating to the Moplah Muslims whose rights to property were governed by the Marumakkatayam law and with reference to a contention that the Marumakkatayam Aliyasanthana Act governed the rights of the parties held that by reason of the repeal of section 16 of the Civil Courts Act by section 6 of Act XXVI of 1937 after 1937 the customary rule of inheritance by survivorship which was till then applicable to Moplah Muslims cannot be made applicable by Courts of law in this country and that all customs and usages contrary to the Muslim Personal Law became inapplicable as a rule of decision in cases where the parties were Muslims and that all customary law stood abolished and that the Muslim Personal Law took its place in all matters enumerated in section 2 of Act XXVI of 1937 and it may be added as amended by the Madras Act XVII of 1949.

The question, however, that requires to be considered is whether in respect of pending actions where the rights to properties are of the nature that are the subject matter of these proceedings the Muslim Personal Law (Shariat) which is applicable also to trusts and trust properties and wakfs and other religious institutions by reason of the Amending Act, Madras Act XVII of 1949 could be made applicable so as to govern the rights of parties. It is urged on behalf of the respondents that the Act is not retrospective in its operation and unless there is any specific provision in the enactment the further amendment should be construed only as prospective and not retrospective in effect. A passage from Maxwell's "The Interpretation of Statutes" 9th Edn., page 223, is quoted which is as follows :

"Every statute, it has been said, which takes away or impairs vested rights acquired under existing laws, or creates, a new obligation, or imposes a new duty or attaches a new disability in respect of transactions or considerations already past, must be presumed, out of respect to the legislature, to be intended not to have a retrospective operation. Where vested rights are affected prima facie, it is not a question of procedure. There is nothing intended to alter past rights which became vested before the new Act came into operation by reason of the parties acting upon and being entitled to act upon the law as it stood before the new Act came into operation."

With reference to this enactment Mullah in his "Principles of Mahomedan Law" (13th Edn.) at page 4 observes as follows :

"The Act does not purport to disturb settled transactions or to dispossess persons who have lawfully obtained possession in the past, whether it would be applied in cases which were pending at the commencement of the Act is doubtful."

Before considering whether by reason of a declaration and injunction granted in favour of the appellants, plaintiffs, the vested rights of the respondents would be affected it will be necessary to consider what the powers of an appellate Court are under the Civil Procedure Code, and whether when a suit comes up for appeal and before it is finally determined it would not be open to the appellate Court to take note of subsequent events not only with regard to the facts but also in regard to laws enacted and make them applicable to the facts coming up before the Court before a final decision is given in appeal. In *Attorney-General v. Birmingham, Tame, and Rea District Drainage Board*¹, it was held by the House of Lords that an appeal to the Court of appeal is by way of re-hearing, and the Court may make such order as the Judge of first instance could have made if the case had been heard by him at the date on which the appeal was heard. Lord Gorell in his judgment after referring to the Judicature Acts and Rules stated that the hearing of an appeal from the judgment of a Judge is by way of re-hearing and the Court has power to give any judgment and to make any order which ought to have been made, and to make such further or other order as the Court may think fit (See Order 58, rules 1 and 4). The Court also has power to take evidence of matters which have occurred after the date of the decision from which the appeal is brought (see Order 58, rule 4.) It seems clear, therefore, that the Court of Appeal is entitled and ought to re-hear the case as at the time of hearing, and if any authority were required for this proposition it is to be found in the case *Quilter v. Mapleson*². *Quilter v. Mapleson*² is a case where a new enactment came into operation after the institution of the suit and the appeal was filed and before it came up for hearing in appeal. It was held that assuming the judgment of the Court below to have been correct according to the law as it then stood, the Court of appeal could grant to the tenant the relief to which he was entitled according to the law as it stood at the hearing of the appeal, since the general orders provide that appeals shall be by way of rehearing, and give power to the Court of appeal not merely to make any order which ought to have been made by the Court below but to make such further order as the case may require. Bowen, L.J., observed :

1. (1912) A.C. 788.

2. (1882) 3 Q.B.D. 672.

"The only remaining question is, whether the Court of Appeal can give relief where a judgment has been obtained by the landlord before the Act came into operation. I think we should be misreading the judicature rules if we held that it could not when the landlord has not obtained possession. The rules were intended to enable the Court of appeal to do complete justice. If the law has been altered pending an appeal, it seems to me to be pressing rules of procedure too far to say that the Court of appeal cannot decide according to the existing state of the law. I think that such is not the true construction of the rules, for Order 58, rule 5 does not merely enable the court of appeal to make any order which ought to have been made by the court below, but to make such further or other order as the case may require."

The provisions of sections 107 and Order 41, rule 33, Civil Procedure Code, practically incorporate Order 58, rule 5, of the Judicature rules which were relied on by the learned Judges in both the cases cited. Therefore it is not only permissible but in my view it is necessary in the interests of justice to apply to the case, the law as it stands on the date when the matter comes up before Court whether in trial or in appeal and before the final determination of the case. With respect to Bowen, L.J., I agree with the observations quoted above which correctly represent the attitude which Courts should adopt in taking notice of subsequent change of events either of fact or in law. Gwyer, C.J., Sulaiman and Varadachariar, JJ., in *Shyamakant v. Rambajan*¹ and Viswanatha Sastri, J., in *Lakshmiammal v. Narayanaswami*², adopt and approve the view taken by the Law Lords in the above-cited decisions.

Therefore it goes without saying that this Court in appeal has not only power but a duty to apply the law as it stands on the date of the hearing of the appeal. But it must be noted that in applying the law so as to govern the rights of the parties which was not law on the date of the institution of the suit but became law subsequently, Courts must take care not to disturb settled or completed transactions which certainly cannot be re-opened by reason of a change in the law. In the present case, however, it is for consideration whether there were any such settled or completed transactions whereby the rights of the plaintiffs have become extinguished or properties in which they had a right have passed into the hands of third parties or are not available for them to manage and enjoy. The first plaintiff was 19 years old on the date of the institution of the suit and it is not in dispute that both the plaintiffs are the heirs under the personal law they being the daughter and the widow of Fakruddin Sahib and having become entitled in accordance with their respective shares; in the other properties excepting those to which by virtue of custom they have been considered not to be entitled to claim the right to manage the durgah, perform the Urs festival and also to enjoy the surplus income if any. It cannot be said that the defendants have acquired vested rights which require to be divested by reason of the application of the new enactment. Nor could it also be said that by reason of the new enactment any final judgments or settled transactions are sought to be re-opened. Plaintiffs as heirs of the late Fakruddin Sahib who died in 1922 have become entitled to share in his property but in respect of a particular item which was endowed for charity their right was only to manage and to participate in the surplus income. The plaintiffs who are female members by virtue of custom were excluded from the right to manage the durgah and to perform the Urs festival. There is force in the argument of Mr. Pocker Sahib, learned counsel for the appellant that the right to manage came to be vested in the hands of the defendants male members not by virtue of custom but by virtue of their being the sharers but custom deprived the plaintiffs of their rightful share to participation in the management and to their rightful share in the surplus income and since the new Act has abrogated any such custom the plaintiffs could be governed by the Act. Moreover would it be open to the defendants to contest the claim of any female member who might come forward after the enactment of the legislation under which personal law is held to override any custom and to deny such a female member her right to manage the charities and participate in the income. The only answer is there could be no such prohibition or disqualification of the female members under the existing law.

2. (1950) 1 M.L.J. 63.

It will not be open to the defendants to plead that they have acquired vested rights since the rights of the female members would not depend upon whatever rights the defendants might claim to have acquired but on the rights which they are entitled to under the new legislation. It must, however, be noted that in the present case the first plaintiff was 19 years old on the date of the suit. The suit having been instituted on 2nd April, 1937, in no view, could it be said that her rights have been taken away or have become vested in the defendants. Her claim to establish such rights can be enforced within three years of her attaining majority and the suit, having been instituted within a year of her attaining majority the defendants cannot also raise any plea of limitation or prescription. This question as to limitation was neither raised nor considered by the lower appellate Court and there is no substance in the plea of limitation.

Under these circumstances I consider that the provisions of the Muslim Personal Law (Shariat) Act are applicable to the present case and that the plaintiffs are entitled to a decree as prayed for. The appeal is allowed. There will be no order as to costs. No leave.

Companies Act (VII of 1913)—Failure to hold the annual meeting within the specified time after the last preceding one for election of directors—Directors due to retire deemed to have vacated their office—Directors' power to co-opt—Conditions necessary for the exercise of.

If in any calendar year an annual meeting is not held under an article of the company those directors who would have retired at the meeting had the same been held will vacate office on the last date of the year.

In re Consolidated Nickel Mines, Ltd., (1914) 1 Ch. 883; Morris v. Kanssen, (1946) A.C. 458; Srinivasan v. Watrap Subramania Iyer, (1931) 61 M.L.J. 724; Buckley's Companies Act (12th Edn., p. 882), followed.

There is nothing in the Companies Act or in the decided cases to support the position that the power to co-opt directors comes to an end when once an annual meeting is convened.

The power to co-opt directors by the Board of Directors of a company could be exercised even though the strength of the board has fallen below the minimum and even when there is only one director capable of acting. The words 'the remaining directors' should be read as including the case of a remaining director. The fact that a person exercising that power does not constitute a quorum is not really a relevant matter.

In re Scottish Petroleum Company, (1883) 23 Ch.D. 413; In re Bank of Syria, (1900) 2 Ch. 272; In re Sly Spink & Co., (1911) 2 Ch. 430; Channel Collieries Trusts, Ltd. v. Dover St. Margaret's and Martin Mill Light Railway, (1914) 2 Ch. 505, followed.

That the directors of a company are in a fiduciary position in relation to its shareholders cannot seriously be questioned. Forgonson v. Wilson, (1866) 2 Ch. Appeals 77; G. E. Railway v. Turner, (1872) 3 Ch. App. 149, referred to. If a co-option of a director is not made in the interests of the shareholders but for other purposes it cannot stand. Where no particular reason has been shown why a co-option should have been made a few days prior to an annual meeting convened for the purposes of election of directors and the circumstances under which the co-option is made clearly stamp it as mala fide such co-option cannot be valid and cannot stand.

Appeal against the Judgment and Order of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Krishnaswami Nayudu, dated 14th November, 1951, and made in the exercise of the Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction of the High Court in Application No. 2813 of 1950.

JUDGMENT.—The question raised in these appeals is whether the co-option of K.N. Narayana Iyer and K.C. Chandy as directors in a company called the Amalgamated Coffee Estates, Ltd., is valid. This company was formed with the object of carrying on business in coffee, tea, cardamom and other commodities and was incorporated under the Indian Companies Act in 1944. The last annual meeting of the company was held on 31st January, 1949. Article 55 of the Articles of the company provides that a general meeting shall be held within 18 months from the date of its incorporation and thereafter once at least in every calendar year at such time (not being more than 15 months after the holding of the last preceding general meeting) and place as the directors may decide. In accordance with this provision the last day for holding the annual meeting would be 30th April, 1950, but no meeting was held either on or before that date. Notices were issued by the management on 21st July, 1950, for an annual meeting to be held on 6th August, 1950. But this meeting, however, was cancelled on the ground that objections were taken to its legality. On 14th August, 1950, one of the shareholders, Mrs. A. Ananthalakshmi Ammal filed an application under section 76 (3) of the Indian Companies Act, Application No. 2813 of 1950 for an order that the Court should call for a general meeting, and in the affidavit filed in support of that application it was alleged that no general body meeting had been called after 31st January, 1949, that the directorate consisted of only three members, V. R. Veeramani, A. S. Padmanabhan and B. V. Raman while Article 75 provided for a minimum of four directors: that the affairs of the company were being grossly mismanaged and that accordingly the Court should direct that a general body meeting should be convened for scrutinising the balance sheets, appointing auditors and electing "new directors in the vacancies caused." There was also a prayer that a Commissioner should be appointed to convene the meeting and act as Chairman therefor. A similar application was filed by one of the debenture holders, Application No. 2813 of 1950 and therein Application No. 2826 of 1950 was made for an injunction restraining the management from co-opting any person as director. On 18th August, 1950, an interim injunction was issued. On 21st August, 1950, the management applied in Application No. 2954 of 1950 for cancelling the interim injunction and all the four applications were heard together by Krishnaswami Nayudu, J., who passed an order on 26th September, 1950, that the annual meeting be called on 29th October, 1950, for discussing the balance sheet and profit and loss account for "election of directors in the places vacant" and to consider the auditor's report, and that notices of the said meeting be issued in the names of the two directors, V. R. Veeramani and B. V. Raman. He also appointed an advocate, Mr. Sanjeevi Naidu as Commissioner to preside over the meeting. The injunction petition was dismissed on the ground that in view of the orders passed in Application Nos. 2813 of 1950 and 2814 of 1950 no orders were necessary. On 7th October, 1950, notices were issued for an annual meeting on 29th October, 1950, in terms of the order dated 26th September, 1950. The notices also stated that "two directors, A. S. Padmanabhan and B. V. Raman retire. The vacancies created by their retirements have to be filled. Of the retiring directors Mr. B. V. Raman offers himself for re-election."

On 9th October, 1950, two of the directors, Veeramani and B. V. Raman passed a resolution co-opting K. N. Narayana Iyer as a director in the place of one Dakshinamurthi who had resigned on 18th June, 1950. On 11th October, 1950, V. R. Veeramani resigned his office as an elected director and was nominated by the managing agents as a director under Article 82-A; and in the vacancy thus created K. C. Chandy was co-opted as a director. Both the co-options took place after the Court had passed an order on 26th September, 1950, for holding the annual meeting on 29th October, 1950, and after notices thereof had actually been issued. Thus on 29th October, 1950, the position was that V. R. Veeramani had become a nominated director ; two directors had to be elected in the place of Padmanabhan and B. V. Raman whose terms of office had expired ; and K. N. Narayana Iyer and K. C. Chandu had been co-opted as directors.

At the annual meeting held on 29th October, 1950, when the subject of "election of directors in the places vacant" was taken up disputes arose as to the number of vacancies which were available to be filled. On behalf of Mrs. Ananthalakshmi Ammal it was contended that the expression "places vacant" would include the maximum number of directors that could be elected under Article 75 and that should be determined by the general body and that further the co-options of K. N. Narayana Iyer and K. C. Chandu were invalid. The management contended that the election should be limited to the two vacancies mentioned in the notice and that the co-options of Narayana Iyer and K. C. Chandu were valid. In this conflict of opinion it was decided to adjourn the meeting and obtain from the Court a clarification of the order dated 26th September, 1950. Application No. 4025 of 1950 was then filed by Mrs. Ananthalakshmi Ammal for that purpose and on that Krishnaswami Nayudu, J., passed an order on 3rd November, 1950, that apart from the two vacancies mentioned in the notice there was also a vacancy caused by the resignation of Dakshinamurthi on 18th June, 1950, and that an election should be held to fill up that vacancy as well. On the question of the validity of the co-options he observed that it was unnecessary to go into the question in these proceedings.

Against this order the management filed O.S.A. No. 103 of 1950, their contention being that as there was valid co-option in the place of Dakshinamurthi there were only two vacancies. Mrs. Ananthalakshmi Ammal filed O.S.A. No. 110 of 1950, claiming that V. R. Veeramani was the only director validly in office, that all the other places were vacant and that the shareholders had the right to fill the vacancies up to the maximum as provided under Article 75. Both these appeals were disposed of by the judgment of this Court dated 9th February, 1951. Therein it was held that for the purpose of election of directors "in the places vacant" as provided in the order dated 26th September, 1950, it was necessary to determine the number of vacancies and that to decide that, it was necessary to decide whether the co-options were valid or not. The matter was accordingly remanded for decision on the validity of the co-options of K. N. Narayana Iyer and K. C. Chandu. There was also a direction that the Court might order, at its discretion, addition of parties for the purpose of a satisfactory disposal of the points in dispute.

In pursuance of this order of remand Application Nos. 2813 of 1950 and 2814 of 1950 came up for re-hearing before Krishnaswami Nayudu, J. The two directors, the validity of whose co-option was at issue, Narayana Iyer and K. C. Chandu, were also impleaded as parties. The whole case was reheard and on 14th November, 1951, Krishnaswami Nayudu, J., pronounced judgment upholding the co-option of K. N. Narayana Iyer and rejecting that of K. C. Chandu. It is against this judgment that the present appeals have been brought. In O.S. A. No. 120 of 1951, Mrs. Ananthalakshmi Ammal contends that the co-option of K. N. Narayana Iyer on 9th October, 1950, is invalid. In O.S. A. No. 15 of 1952, Mr. K. C. Chandu contends that this co-option on 11th October, 1950, is valid. These are the questions that fall to be determined in these appeals.

In O.S.A. No. 120 of 1951, Mr. Vasantha Pai, the learned advocate for the appellant, contends that the co-option of Narayana Iyer on 9th October, 1950, was invalid because there was only one director who was entitled to act on that date and that the power to co-opt could not be exercised when there is no Board of Directors competent to act under Article 75 ; that in any event such a power could not be exercised after an annual meeting had been called ; that at any rate on the facts of the present case such a power could not be exercised as the Court had ordered on 26th September, 1950, that the shareholders should elect the directors in the vacancies at an annual meeting to be held on 29th October, 1950, and that the resolution dated 9th October, 1950, did not comply with the requirements of Article 99 of the Articles of the company. It was further argued that even if the power to co-opt could be validly exercised on 9th October, 1950, it was not in fact so exercised as the co-option was made not in the interests of the shareholders but of the management. The management controverts the soundness of these contentions.

The position that the power to co-opt directors comes to an end when once an annual meeting is convened, is not sought to be supported by anything in the Companies Act or in the articles of the company. Nor is any authority cited in support of it. We have no hesitation in rejecting it. Nor is there any substance in the argument that the order of the Court dated 26th September, 1950, directing that the annual meeting be convened for filling up vacancies has the effect of extinguishing that power. Though interim injunction was issued against co-option in Application No. 2826 of 1950 on 18th August, 1950, that became dissolved on the dismissal of that application on 26th September, 1950. It is true that the order of dismissal was made not on the merits but in view of the orders passed in Application Nos. 2813 of 1950 and 2814 of 1950 and it must have been assumed that all the places would be filled by election, at the annual meeting on 29th October, 1950. This circumstance, though material on the question whether the exercise of power on 9th October, 1951, and 11th October, 1951, was bona fide or not, does not operate to deprive the management of its powers under Article 81. The objection based on Article 99 that the resolution dated 9th October, 1950, was not signed by all the directors but only by two of them must also be rejected inasmuch as no contention is raised by the management that the co-option of K. N. Narayana Iyer, if not valid under Article 81 could still be upheld as one passed in circulation under Article 99.

The two substantial contentions urged on behalf of the appellant are (1) that on 9th October, 1950, there was only one director competent to act and according to the articles of the company he would have no power to co-opt a director, and (2) that in any event the exercise of the power was not for the benefit of the shareholders and therefore void. With reference to the first contention it is necessary to set out the relevant articles of the company on which it is based. Under Article 75 "Until otherwise determined by a general meeting the number of the directors shall not be less than four or more than nine." Article 83 provides that "at the first ordinary meeting of the company the whole of the directors excepting the ex-officio directors, shall retire from office and at the ordinary meeting in every subsequent year, one-third of the directors (other than the ex-officio) directors for the time being or if their number is not three or a multiple of three, then the number nearest to one-third shall retire from office." Section 83-A (1) of the Indian Companies Act enacts that "every company shall have at least three directors." Turning to the facts it should be remembered that the last annual meeting was held on 31st January, 1949. Even at that time there were only three directors in office, A. S. Padmanabhan, M. S. Periasami Nadar and V. R. Veeramani. Of these Padmanabhan was due to retire under Article 83 at the next annual meeting. Periasami Nadar resigned in August, 1949, and in his place Dakshinamurthi was co-opted on 25th September, 1949. On 22nd March, 1950, one B. V. Raman was co-opted as the fourth director but he was also due to retire at the next annual meeting. The meeting should have been held under Article 55 on 30th April, 1950, at the latest. On 18th June, 1950, Dakshinamurthi resigned and it was in his place that K. N. Narayana Iyer was co-opted by a resolution of the directors, Veeramani and B. V. Raman.

On these facts it was argued by the learned advocate for the appellants that two of the directors, Padmanabhan and B. V. Raman who were due to retire at the annual meeting next to that held on 31st January, 1949, should be held to have vacated their office on the last date on which the annual meeting should have been held and that in consequence they ceased to be directors after 30th April, 1950. This contention is amply supported by the authorities. In *re Consolidated Nickel Mines, Ltd.*¹, the question arose whether two directors, Steel and Phillips were entitled to remuneration as directors. Article 101 of the company provided that at the ordinary meeting all the directors should retire from office. Section 49 of the Companies Act provided that the directors were bound to summon a general meeting of the company once in every calendar year. After 1905, no meeting was called but the two directors continued to act. It was held that they vacated the office on the last day on which the annual meeting should have been held, that is on 31st December, 1906, and that therefore they were not entitled to remuneration thereafter.

In *Srinivasan v. Watrap Subramania Iyer*¹, Cornish, J., followed the decision in *In re Consolidated Nickel Mines, Ltd.*². In *Kanssen v. Fialle*³, the point for decision was whether the allotment of shares made at a directors' meeting held on 30th March, 1942, was valid. Two persons Cromie and Strelitz purported to act as directors and made the allotment. Strelitz claimed to have been appointed as director at a meeting held on 1st February, 1940. It was found that there was no such meeting or appointment. Cromie was one of the original directors but under rule 73 of Table A of the Companies Act, 1929, which in substance corresponds to Article 83 in the present case the directors would have to retire at the annual meeting and the last day on which such a meeting should have been held was 31st December, 1941. On these provisions Lord Green, M.R., who delivered the leading judgment of the Court of appeal observed as follows :—

“Neither Mr. Cromie nor Mr. Strelitz was then (on 30th March, 1942) a director of the company. Mr. Cromie had been a director but he had vacated the office on 31st December, 1941, by reason of Article 73 of the Company's articles of association. See In re Consolidated Nickel Mines, Ltd.”²

This decision was affirmed by the House of Lords in *Morris v. Kanssen*⁴. On the point now under consideration the decision is thus stated in the head note :—

“No general meeting was held in 1941 and accordingly by the effect of Article 73 of Table A as varied by Article 22 of the Company's articles of association, there were thereafter no de jure directors.” Vide the observations in the speech of Lord Simonds at pages 467-468 and 471.

In Buckley on Companies Act the learned author commenting on rule 89 in schedule (1) of the Companies Act, 1948, which in terms corresponds to the present Article 83 states the law as follows :—

“If in any calendar year an annual meeting is not held under an article in this form, those directors who would have retired at the meeting had the same been held will vacate office on the last date of the year.” (12th edition, page 882.)

On these authorities it must be held that both Padmanabhan and B. V. Raman ceased to be directors after 30th April, 1950, and that at the time of the co-option of K. N. Narayana Iyer on 9th October, 1950, there was only one director, Veeramani who was lawfully in office.

What follows on this conclusion? The appellant contends that if on 9th October, 1950, there was only one director, then there was no board of directors as required by Article 75 and that therefore there could be no valid co-option as the power to co-opt could only be exercised by the board. The respondent relies on Article 81 which is in these terms :—

“The continuing directors may act notwithstanding any vacancy in their body; but so that if the number falls below the minimum above fixed the directors shall not, except in emergencies or for the purpose of filling up vacancies, act so long as the number is below the minimum.”

The argument is that this is a special provision made for meeting contingencies like the present and that the co-option made thereunder is valid. The contention of the appellant is that even for invoking the power under Article 81 there must be a board with the minimum strength as required by Article 75 but this is opposed to the plain language of the Article which expressly confers power on the continuing directors to fill vacancies when the number falls below the minimum and the minimum that is referred to in this Article is the minimum prescribed under Article 75.

There is also considerable body of authority in England on the construction of clauses similar to Article 81. In *re Scottish Petroleum Company*¹, the Article fixed a minimum strength of the board of directors at four and the quorum for the board's meeting at two as do Articles 75 and 93 in the present case. The strength of the board came down to two, when they co-opted another director and allotted shares to him. Article 83 of the company provided that the continuing directors may act notwithstanding any vacancy in the board. On these provisions it was held that the power to co-opt a director could be exercised even though the strength of the board had fallen below the minimum. The following observations occurring in the judgment of Baggallay, L.J., may be usefully quoted :—

“It is also contended that though by the articles two directors form a quorum when the board is duly constituted, there could not be a quorum capable of transacting business when the Board of directors was not filled up to the minimum number. I assume that the retiring directors had ceased to be directors, and if that be so, the board was not made up to the minimum number. Still I think that having regard to Article 83, the objection cannot be maintained. It is urged that this article can only apply when the number of directors is more than four, but I see no reason for adopting that view.”

In *re Bank of Syria, Owen and Ashworth's claim, Whitworth's claim*² Article 38 of the company provided that the members of the council shall be not less than three and not more than nine. At the time of the transaction there were only two directors and the question arose whether they had the power to act. Article 42 provided that “the continuing council may act notwithstanding any vacancy.” It was held by Wright, J., that under this clause the directors were entitled to act. He observed :

“I am asked to say that in as much as there were only two directors acting at that time, they had no power to bind the company. But it seems to me that I ought to hold, having regard to the authorities, that Article 42, which provides that a continuing council may act notwithstanding any vacancy, gets over the difficulty. . . . It seems to me having in view Article 42, that the principle in *re Scottish Petroleum Company*¹ applies to the present case.”

There was an appeal against this decision. *Vide in re Bank of Syria, Owen and Ashworth's claim, Whitworth's claim*².

Lord Alverston, C.J., in agreeing with the decision of Wright, J., on this point observed that even if the number of directors fell below the quorum fixed for a directors' meeting the principle laid down in *Scottish Petroleum Company*¹, would apply and that the continuing directors would be entitled to act under Article 42. That is to say the power to co-opt might be exercised notwithstanding that the strength of the directorate has fallen below the minimum required and below the quorum prescribed, by the articles.

In *re Sly Spink & Co.*³, the articles required that the number of directors should not be less than four, that the quorum for a board's meeting should be three and Article 88 gave authority to the continuing directors to fill in vacancies. From the very start the company had never a board of four directors. Only three directors were appointed and they allotted shares. The company having gone into liquidation the question arose whether the allotment of shares was valid. It was contended that the three directors had authority to act under Article 88 and that the allotment was consequently valid. Noville, J., held that Article 88 would apply only if there had been a properly constituted Board of directors in the first instance but that where there never was a board with the minimum strength, Article 88 would not apply. The following observations may be quoted :—

“It is said that they were continuing directors because they had not ceased to be directors. I do not think that is a reasonable interpretation to put upon the words contained in the articles. The expression is familiar one and it applied to cases where the number of the original board has been reduced by death or otherwise, and in such cases those who are left, subject to the provisions of Article 88, would be entitled to conduct the business of the company. With regard to that, I think the two cases which were cited—*In re Scottish Petroleum Company*¹ and In re The British Empire Match Co., Ltd., Ex parte Ross² show very clearly the distinction between the case where the directors too few in number can and cannot act as continuing directors. In one case you have a board insufficient in number from the first and notwithstanding the continuing clause it was held that the board could not transact business. In the other case you have a board which was originally competent to transact business but was diminished by retirement to a number less than that provided for by articles. The continuing clause was held to apply and those directors were held to be competent to transact the business of the Company.”

2. (1900) 2 Ch. 272.

3. (1911) 2 Ch. 430.

The company in the present case started with four directors, being the minimum strength under Article 75. Vide the allegations in paragraph 5 in the affidavit of Davar in Application No. 2954 of 1950; and therefore the continuing directors would under the decision *In re Sly Spink & Co.*³, have power to act under Article 81. In *Channel Collieries Trust, Ltd. v. Dover, St. Margaret's and Martin Mill Light Railway*⁴, the articles of the company provided that the minimum number of directors should be three: that the quorum for the board's meeting should be two and Article 89 gave power to the ‘remaining directors’ to fill vacancies. The company began with three directors, then two of them resigned leaving only one director in office and he co-opted a director under Article 81. It was contended that this co-option was invalid because the board had neither the minimum strength nor even the quorum provided by the articles. Rejecting this contention Lord Cozens Hardy, M.R., observed as follows:

“Sir John Jackson thus became sole director. What was his power? Under the Companies Clauses Act, 1845, as continuing director, he had power to fill up the vacancies on the board. The fact that a person exercising that power does not constitute a quorum is not really a relevant matter. The generality of the language used in section 99 is so clear that it is impossible for us to overlook it. Any other view on that point would paralyse many a company.”

The following observations occurring in the judgment of Swinfen Eady, L.J., might also be usefully quoted:—

“I think that the context requires that the words ‘remaining directors’ should include the case of a remaining director. It is obvious that the number of the board may, by death or resignation or otherwise, be so reduced that it may be below the quorum, as well as that there may be vacancies occurring in the board whilst still leaving a quorum, but in either case it is necessary or proper that the vacancy should be filled up. In my opinion the necessity of the case requires that ‘the remaining directors’ should be read as including the case of a remaining director, so that if and so long as there is any remaining director he may proceed to fill up the board by appointing persons when casual vacancies occur. For these reasons I am of opinion that it was open to Sir John Jackson as the sole remaining director, under section 89, to appoint duly qualified persons to be directors in the place of the two who had ceased to be members of the board.”

Applying these principles it must be held that the power under Article 81 could be exercised even though the strength of the board had fallen below the minimum prescribed by Article 75 and below the quorum mentioned in Article 92 and even when there is only one director capable of acting. The co-option of Narayana Iyer on 9th October, 1950, must, therefore, be held to be within the scope of the authority conferred on the continuing directors under Article 81.

The only question that remains to be decided is whether on the facts and circumstances of this case the co-option of Narayana Iyer is open to attack as improper and mala fide. The learned advocate for the appellant argued that the directors stand in a fiduciary relationship to the shareholders, that any power conferred on them must be exercised for the benefit of the shareholders, that the co-option of directors should also be made only in the interests of the shareholders and that Narayana Iyer was co-opted only for the purpose of strengthening the hands of the management in their fight with their shareholders and it is, therefore, invalid. That the directors are in a fiduciary position in relation to the shareholders cannot seriously be questioned. In *Ferguson v. Wilson*⁵, Lord Cairns while holding that the directors of the company were in the position of agents of the company in its dealings with the outside world, they were in the position of the trustees in relation to the shareholders. Similar observations are to be found in the judgment of Lord Selborne in *Great Eastern Railway Co. v. Turner*¹.

The position is thus summed up in Palmer's Company precedents.

"Where the directors of a company are invested by the regulations with certain powers, the authority thus conferred is to be read subject to the general rules applicable to the exercise by directors of the powers vested in them, and in particular to the rule that the directors are to exercise the powers for the benefit of the company and in the true interests of the company and according to the best of their judgment, for they stand in a fiduciary position, and must act accordingly." (Vide Volume 1, page 434, paragraph 21, 16th edition).

We, therefore, agree with the appellant that if the co-option of a director under Article 81 is not made in the interests of the shareholders but for other purposes it cannot stand.

What then are the facts? It is common ground that the affairs of the company were during this period in a very unsatisfactory condition. For want of funds the coffee and tea estates were in a state of neglect. More than Rs. 96,000 had to be paid for income-tax and the Government were taking coercive steps to recover the same. Interests due to the debenture-holders had not been paid; nor dividends which had been declared on the shares. The creditors had obtained decrees against the company and execution proceedings were in progress. These facts are stated in the affidavits filed on behalf of the appellants in these proceedings. But it also appears from these affidavits that the coffee and tea plantations owned by the company were extensive and valuable and if finance was forthcoming they could be properly worked and made to yield profits. It is clear from the records that the managing agents were making strenuous attempts to get at a financier who would be willing to advance the necessary funds for the working of the estate and at last they found him in Narayana Iyer. This Narayana Iyer was the managing director of a company called Messrs. Parkins (India), Ltd., which has under its management several plantation companies owning tea, coffee and rubber estates. He has had experience in this line of business for about twenty years and is a man of considerable worth. It cannot be doubted that it would be to the advantage of the company if he could be persuaded to join it. It appears from paragraph 3 of his affidavit that early in August, 1950, the shareholders themselves approached him with a request to join the company and advance the necessary funds. This is borne out by a letter dated 7th September, 1950, written by a director of Messrs. Parkins (India), Ltd., to the advocate for the appellant. This letter gives particulars about the status of Messrs. Parkins (India), Ltd., and of its managing director, Narayana Iyer and proceeds to state:

"Messrs. Parkins (India), Ltd., are willing and they are in a position to provide working finance and other finance required immediately to pay the pressing creditors of the Amalgamated Coffee Estates, Ltd."

A reading of this letter leaves no doubt that the shareholders considered that the accession of Narayana Iyer would add to the strength of the company and enable it to tide over its difficulties. It is admitted in the affidavit filed in application No. 2828 of 1950 that as early as August the management itself had been negotiating with Narayana Iyer with the object of bringing him in. He insisted naturally that if he should advance the necessary funds he should have a voice in the control and management of the company. The management agreed to this and co-opted him as a director on 9th October, 1950. It appears from the affidavit of Narayana Iyer that after his co-option he advanced monies to the extent of a lakh of rupees for the working of the estate and harvesting coffee. The facts clearly show that the company was in need of finance, that Narayana Iyer was co-opted for the purpose of finding the necessary funds and that both from the point of view of his experience and financial status he would be a source of strength to the company.

But it is argued on behalf of the appellant that notwithstanding the above circumstances, the co-option of Narayana Iyer must be rejected as improper and mala fide because the vacancy in which he was filled arose on 18th June, 1950, when Dakshinamurthi resigned, that the management did not choose to fill that vacancy then; that on the other hand they stated in their counter-affidavits in Application Nos. 2813 of 1950 and 2814 of 1950 that they thought it fair not to co-opt a director in view of the general body meeting, that was proposed to be convened; that an injunction was actually issued on the 18th of August, 1950, restraining the managing agents from making any co-option and though it became dissolved on 26th September, 1950, it was understood by all persons that the vacancy would be filled by the shareholders at the annual meeting and that, therefore, the co-option on 9th October, 1950, must be held to have been made with the object of depriving the shareholders of their right to elect a director.

But it must be remembered that during this period the management was on the look out for a suitable financier and that it was commendable on their part to have left the place vacated by Dakshinamurthi vacant until a suitable person could be found and to have left it to the shareholders to fill the place if their endeavours to get at a financier did not succeed. Nor can any sinister purpose be spelt out of the fact that the co-option was made after a general meeting had been called. It is admitted that the coffee crops were ready for harvesting and if early steps were not taken to gather them considerable damage would result. In paragraph 13 of the counter-affidavit filed by Davar in Application No. 2954 of 1950 it is alleged that "the coffee plantations in Palghat and the cardamom are deteriorating; crops were being spoilt and what little can be gathered from the crops would be lost to the shareholders and the debenture-holders on account of the neglect and irresponsible attitude of the managing agents."

This was in August 1950. It is obvious that the urgency must have been greater in October and the managing agents acted in the best interests of the shareholders in concluding a bargain with Narayana Iyer on 9th October, 1950.

On a review of all the circumstances we agree with Mr. Krishnaswami Nayudu, J., that the co-option of Narayana Iyer was a proper exercise of the power under Article 81. O.S.A. No. 120 of 1951 must accordingly be dismissed with costs.

In O.S.A. No. 15 of 1952 the point for determination is whether the co-option of K. G. Chandy on 11th October, 1950, was a valid exercise of the power under Article 81. The facts relating to this co-option present a picture totally different from what has been seen in the case of Narayana Iyer. No particular reason has been shown why this co-option should have been made on 11th October, 1950, when the annual meeting had been called for on 29th October, 1950. It is not stated that this co-option was made under any arrangement to advance funds for the company. That arrangement had already been concluded with Narayana Iyer. Nor does K. G. Chandy possess anything like the experience which Narayana Iyer undoubtedly does possess. He is an Advocate practising at Kottayam. The circumstances under which the co-option was made clearly stamp it as mala fide. V. R. Veeramani who was the one director who has been in active management resigned his place as an elected director on 11th November, 1950 and as part of the same proceedings he became a nominated director. It is clear that this manoeuvre was adopted for co-opting a director of the choice of the managing agents and it is open to the objection that it was made with a view to strengthen the hands of the managing agents and not in the interests of the shareholders. We agree with Krishnaswami Nayudu, J., that this co-option cannot be upheld.

It was argued by Mr. V. Radhakrishnayya the learned advocate for the appellant that the validity of this co-option cannot be gone into in these proceedings but the matter is concluded by the judgment of this Court, dated 9th February, 1951 and even otherwise the decision on the validity of the co-option is incidental to the exercise of the powers under section 76 (3) of the Companies Act. In the result the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Madras Hindu Religious Endowments Act (II of 1927), Chapter VI-A, section 78—Hereditary archakas in possession of lands belonging to deity—If can be dispossessed by Executive officer—Appropriate order.

In the interests of the general public and the satisfactory continuance of worship, it is not desirable that hereditary archakas who have been looking after the daily worship of the temple should be turned out of the lands which they had been enjoying partly in lieu of remuneration for their services and partly for defraying the expenses of the daily worship. The allotment of portion of the properties to such archakas must depend on the facts of each case. The archakas and their successors would be entitled to be in possession of the properties only so long as they performed their daily services properly and faithfully according to usages of the temple meeting the expenses of the daily worship themselves. If they failed to carry out these terms it would be open to the Executive Officer to take possession of the lands and make other managements for carrying on the worship. The archakas will not have the right to alienate the properties allotted to them.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

The Chief Justice.—The appellants are the hereditary archakas of the temple of Sri Malleswaraswamyvaru in the village of Chinnapulivaru in the Guntur District. The Hindu Religious Endowments Board notified the said temple under Chapter VI-A of the Madras Hindu Religious Endowments Act and appointed an Executive Officer. He applied under section 78 of the Act for delivery of the lands in possession of the archakas which formed the subject-matter of the suit and the appeal on the ground that the lands belonged to the deity. The petition under section 78, O. P. No. 40 of 1945, on the file of the District Court of Guntur, was eventually ordered, and it is represented that in pursuance of the order in that petition, the Executive Officer has since taken possession of the lands. While the petition under section 78 was still pending, the appellants filed a suit for declaration that they were entitled to be in possession of the plaintiff lands and were not liable to be dispossessed by the Executive Officer. Subsequent to the institution of the suit, the District Court passed an order directing the petitioners to deliver possession of the lands. Therefore there was an amendment in the plaint adding an additional prayer, namely, to set aside the order of the District Court in O. P. No. 40 of 1945. The main case of the appellants in the trial Court was that the deity had no manner of right to the lands and the lands were attached to the office of archaka.

The learned Subordinate Judge of Tenali held on a consideration of the entire evidence that the suit lands were granted to the deity and not to the archakas and the plaintiffs could not be permitted to set up a title adverse to the deity. As according to the learned Judge the plaintiffs were not entitled to be in possession of the lands, the suit was dismissed with costs. Hence this appeal.

Learned counsel for the appellants very wisely did not challenge the correctness of the finding of the learned trial Judge as to the title to the properties. It must therefore be taken as established that the properties belong to the deity and not to the appellants.

Ordinarily this finding must dispose of the case. But as pointed out in several recent decisions of this Court, in the interests of the general public and the satisfactory continuance of worship, it is not desirable that hereditary archakas who have been looking after the daily worship of the temple should be turned out of the lands which they had been enjoying partly in lieu of remuneration for their services and partly for defraying the expenses of the daily worship. In Appeal No. 285 of 1945, a Division Bench of this Court observed as follows :

"We consider that in the interests of the temple and the worshipping public and the archakas who for generations have been hereditarily looking after the worship of the temple and enjoying the temple properties in lieu of remuneration a proper arrangement would be to permit the archakas to remain in possession of roughly about two-thirds of the temple lands so long as they properly and faithfully perform the daily worship in defraying the expenses thereof and on condition of their having no rights of alienation."

Similar observations were made in a later judgment by Satyanarayana Rao and Chandra Reddi, JJ., in Appeal No. 218 of 1946.

It is obvious that while the principle is of general application the allotment of the properties must depend upon the facts of each case. In the present case, we find that the total extent of the plaint lands is 20 acres 42 cents. These lands lie in three demarcation numbers, namely, No. 55 of an extent of 6 acres 29 cents, No. 52 measuring 9 acres 32 cents and No. 45 of an extent of 4 acres 81 cents. All the lands are wet lands. Taking all the circumstances into consideration, we consider that it would be a just and equitable arrangement to allow the archakas, the appellants, to be in possession of demarcation Nos. 55 and 45. The income from the lands comprised in demarcation No. 55 may be taken by the archakas as their remuneration and the expenses of the daily worship may be met from the income from 4 acres 81 cents in demarcation No. 45. The appellants and their successors will be entitled to be in possession of the properties only so long as they perform their daily services properly and faithfully according to the usages of the temple, meeting the expenses of the daily worship themselves. If they fail to carry out these terms it will be open to the Executive Officer to take possession of the lands and make other arrangements for carrying on the worship in the temple. The archakas will of course not have any right to alienate the properties allotted to them. The extent of 9 acres 32 cents in demarcation No. 52, will be in the possession of the Executive Officer or the trustee for the time being and the income therefrom shall be utilised for the general purposes of the temple including making provision for the other servants like paricharakas. If the Executive Officer is convinced at any time that the income on 4 acres 81 cents of land in demarcation No. 45 is not sufficient to defray the expenses of the daily worship, he will be at liberty to give such further amounts as may be necessary for the same. The appeal is allowed to this extent. The decree of the Court below dismissing the suit is hereby set aside and there will be a decree in the above terms.

Learned counsel for the appellants represented to us that as the Executive Officer had taken possession of the entire lands and we have now declared that the appellants would be entitled to be in possession of demarcation Nos. 55 and 45 they would be entitled to the profits of these lands for the period subsequent to such taking over. That is not a matter, however, with which we can deal in this appeal. This is a suit for a mere declaration that the appellants are not liable to be dispossessed by the Executive Officer. The appellants will of course be at liberty to take such steps as they are advised for obtaining such relief as they are entitled to on the basis of our judgment in this appeal.

There will be no order as to costs in this appeal

Madras Estates Land Act (I of 1908), section 107—Scope of—Limitation for suit to set aside a sale—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Article 12—Applicability.

If a junior member of a Hindu joint family happens to be an officer or subordinate officer holding a Revenue sale under the Madras Estates Land Act for recovery of arrears of rent due to the landlord and the manager of the joint family purchases the interest sold at the sale, the sale is hit by the provisions of section 107 of the Madras Estates Land Act. It is only voidable, and is valid until set aside. To a suit to set aside the sale Article 12 of the Limitation Act applies. Even if such a sale is to be deemed only void the original owner lost title to the property by reason of the auction purchasers having remained in possession of the property for over the statutory period in assertion of title hostile to the real owners.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal arises out of an action brought by the appellant for partition and separate possession of his 2/5th share in an extent of 1 acre 38 cents situated in Idayakottai Zamin, Madurai district. The suit properties originally belonged to two brothers by name Vellama Naicker and Rangappa Naicker. They conveyed their 2/5th share in the family properties by two sale deeds executed in 1927 and 1929 respectively to one Koolayappa Rowther. As the vendee failed to pay the rent due to the land-holder, the properties were brought to sale and were purchased by one Muthu Naicker, the manager of the joint family of which defendants 3 to 9 were members in 1930 and possession was taken by the auction purchasers after having obtained the necessary sale certificate. In spite of this, Gulam Muhammad, son of the said Koolayappa Rowther, sold them to the plaintiff on 14th August, 1943, as if title in this property still inhered in him. On the basis of this sale deed, the present suit is filed for the reliefs mentioned above. On 16th February, 1944, the defendants 3 to 9 who were the surviving members of the family of which Muthu Naicker was the managing member, sold the property to the 10th defendant.

The suit was contested only by the 10th defendant. He filed a written statement contending that after the revenue sale, Koolayappa Rowther had no title to property and that the auction purchasers, who acquired title to this property, conveyed it to the 10th defendant and that in any event as the suit was brought more than 16 years after the revenue sale, it was barred by limitation.

The trial Court decreed the suit holding that the revenue sale was hit by section 107 of the Madras Estates Land Act and therefore, the vendors did not get any title to the property and consequently they could not convey any title to the 10th defendant. He also found that in spite of the sale, Koolayappa Rowther, the predecessor in interest of the plaintiff continued to be the owner thereof and that the sale in favour of the plaintiff passed valid title to the property. In his opinion the suit was not barred by limitation and the plaintiff could recover possession of the property at any time ignoring the sale.

On appeal, the learned Subordinate Judge came to a contrary conclusion on the effect of section 107 of the Madras Estates Land Act on the revenue sale and also on the question of limitation. In the result, he allowed the appeal and dismissed the suit with costs.

The plaintiff who is dissatisfied with the decree and judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge, has preferred this second appeal. It is urged by Mr. K. S. Ramamurthi in support of the appeal that the revenue sale is hit by section 107 of the Madras Estates Land Act and is void, and consequently, title to the property still vested in the family of the plaintiff's vendors and that the plaintiff is entitled to recover possession of the same. On the other hand it is submitted on the other side that the sale is not governed by the provisions of section 107 of the Madras Estates Land Act.

The first question I have, therefore, to consider is whether the sale is void for contravention of section 107. Section 107 of the Madras Estates Land Act runs thus :

“No officer holding a sale of property under this Act and no person employed by or subordinate to such officer shall either directly or indirectly bid for, acquire or attempt to acquire any interest in any property sold at such sale.”

It is seen this section expressly prohibits the bidding or the purchasing of the property not only by the officers holding the sale but also by a person subordinate to such an officer. In this case, it was the Revenue Inspector that held the sale and it cannot be denied that a village munsiff is a subordinate of the officer, who held the sale. The 6th defendant, who was a member of the family of which Mutha Naicker was the manager, was holding the office of the village munsiff at the time the sale was held. The point for consideration is whether the fact that one of the members of the family was a subordinate of the officer holding the sale renders the sale an invalid one.

Section 107 of the Madras Estates Land Act prohibits either the officer holding the sale or any subordinate of his from acquiring any interest not only directly but also indirectly in the property sold at such a sale. It cannot be controverted that a junior member of a joint family acquires an interest in the property purchased by the manager of the family. The intendment of the section appears to me to be that persons, who have special opportunities of knowing the details about the property, should not be allowed to bid or buy the property as they are likely to misuse the opportunities they have. If the argument that although an officer or his subordinate is prohibited from directly buying or acquiring any interest in the property brought to sale the other members of the family could bid for the property, is accepted, the provisions of the section can be rendered nugatory. It will then be open to the officer concerned to acquire the property indirectly through other members of his family. It looks to me that section 107 of the Madras Estates Land Act applies to a case like the present one. This view of mine gains support from a passage in Lewin on Trusts, 15th Edn., page 799 :

“The partner of a trustee or any other person through whom the trustee may directly or indirectly derive benefit by reason of the purchase cannot purchase the trust property from the trustee.”

The principle enunciated there applies equally to a member of a joint family of the officer holding the sale or of his subordinate. There does not seem to be any difference in principle between these two cases. It may also be mentioned that in *Veeranna v. Lakshmiopathi Somayajulu*¹, a Bench of this Court expressed the opinion that the prohibition contained in section 107 of the Madras Estates Land Act is an absolute one and not a conditional one. What emerges from this discussion is that the purchase made by Mutha Naicker was obnoxious to the provisions of the Madras Estates Land Act and, therefore, is an invalid one.

This leads me to the next point whether the sale is void or is voidable, if the sale is void, it need not be set aside and the plaintiff can recover the property from the auction purchasers or their successors in interest, ignoring the sale. In my judgment, the sale is voidable and not void and, therefore, has to be set aside, within the time prescribed by Article 12 (b) of the Limitation Act. This view obtains support from various decisions not only of this Court but also of other High Courts as well. In *Rai Radhakrishna v. Bisheshar Sahay*², the provisions of Order 21, rule 72, which contains a prohibition similar to the one in section 107 of the Madras Estates Land Act fell to be considered by the Privy Council. Their Lordships expressed the opinion that a purchase at an execution sale by the decree-holder or his agents without the leave of the Court is only voidable and not void and a suit to set it aside must be brought within one year under Article 12 of the Limitation Act. This was followed by Sundaram Chetty, J., in *Chinnakannu Padayachi v. Paramasiva*¹. There a sale was held in contravention of the provisions of section 99 of the Transfer of Property Act corresponding to the present Order 34, rule 14, Civil Procedure Code, and there was also an infringement of the provisions of Order 21, rule 72, Civil Procedure Code, for the reason that the property was purchased by a pleader of the decree-holder without the leave of the Court. The learned Judge held that the sale (which took place prior to 1908) in violation of the provisions of section 99 of the Transfer of Property Act and also of Order 21, rule 72 did not make the sale void and it was only voidable, and had to be set aside under the appropriate article of the Limitation Act.

This principle was applied by Somayya, J., in *Velliappa Chettiar v. Muthu Koundan*². In this case, the learned Judge was concerned only with the contravention of the provisions of Order 21, rule 72 which runs thus :

"1. No holder of a decree in execution of which property is sold shall without the express permission of the Court bid for or purchase the property.

2. Where a decree-holder purchases with such permission, the purchase money and the amount due on the decree may subject to the provisions of section 73, be set off against one another and the Court executing the decree shall enter up satisfaction of the decree in whole or in part accordingly.

3. Where a decree-holder purchases, by himself or through another person, without such permission, the Court may if it thinks fit, on the application of the judgment-debtor or any other person whose interests are affected by the sale, by order set aside the sale ; and the costs of such application and order and any deficiency of price which may happen on the resale and all expenses attending it, shall be paid by the decree-holder."

A case more in point is to be found in the decision reported in *Jamuna Prasad v. Motilal*³. In that case also, when the properties were brought to sale, the pleader for the decree-holder purchased the properties without the leave of the Court. It was found that the sale was hit by Order 21, rule 73 in that the pleader was an officer of the Court.

Order 21, rule 73 enacts :

"No officer or other person having any duty to perform in connection with any sale shall, either directly or indirectly, bid for, acquire or attempt to acquire any interest in the property sold."

In view of the mandatory provisions of the rule, it was contended that the sale was a nullity. This was met by the learned Judges in the following words :

"It cannot be affirmed as a proposition of universal application that non-compliance with every imperative provision of law renders the proceedings a nullity. The question depends on the nature, scope and object of the particular provision, which has been violated."

The learned Judges further observed that the rule in question was intended for the benefit of the decree-holder and the judgment-debtor and could be waived by them without any infringement of public right or policy. In the result, the learned Judges found that the sale was only voidable and it was valid till it was set aside and not void. They relied upon the decision in *Ashutosh Sikdar v. Beharilal Kirtania*⁴. In this context, the observations of Coleridge, J., in *Holmes v. Russell*⁵, may be usefully extracted :

"It is difficult sometimes to distinguish between an irregularity and a nullity but the safest rule to determine what is an irregularity and what is a nullity is to see whether the party can waive the objection ; if he can waive it, it amounts to an irregularity, if he cannot, it is a nullity."

I express my respectful accord with the principle enunciated in these cases. The provisions of section 107, Madras Estates Land Act, are analogous to those of

1. A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 1135.

2. (1941) 2 M.L.J. 943.

3. A.I.R. 1950 Cal. 63.

4. (1907) I.L.R. 35 Cal. 61.

5. (1841) 9 Dowl. 487.

Order 21, rule 73, Civil Procedure Code and the policy underlying both seems to be the same.

It follows on this discussion that although the sale in question was invalid for the reason that the provisions of section 107 of the Madras Estates Land Act were infringed, it was not void in the sense that the plaintiff could recover the property ignoring the sale but was only voidable and was valid till set aside within the time prescribed by Article 12 of the Limitation Act.

In this view of the matter, it is unnecessary for me to go into the question whether, if the sale is void, the suit will be governed by Article 142 or Article 144 of the Limitation Act and if Article 144 is applicable whether the auction purchasers acquired any title to the property by adverse possession. Even if it were necessary to decide this point, I have no hesitation in coming to the conclusion that the original owner Koolayappa Rowther lost title to the property by reason of the auction purchasers having remained in possession of the property for over the statutory period in assertion of title hostile to the real owners. On any ground, the suit is liable to be dismissed. For these reasons, I hold that the decision of the lower appellate Court allowing the appeal filed by the defendants against the judgment of the District Munsiff decreeing the suit is right and ought to be affirmed.

In the result, the appeal is dismissed with costs. No leave.

Madras Estates (Abolition and Conversion into Ryotwari) Act (XXVI of 1948), sections 53 and 12—Application to have ryotwari patta granted in respect of house sites—The sites formed part of the permanently settled estate—Effect of.

Where the estate of a zamindar was not notified under the Madras Estates (Abolition and Conversion into Ryotwari) Act, 1948, his claim to have certain sites as his own within the ambit of his estate on the ground that they were given practically free to the zamindar and must be taken to be outside the scope of the permanent settlement,

Held, that once it is granted that the sites formed part of the permanently settled estate, section 3 (a) of the Estates Abolition Act certainly gives power to the Government to take them over unless the zamindar was entitled to be granted the ryotwari patta under section 12 and similar provisions of the Act. As these lands did not fall within such provisions, the ryotwari patta in respect of them cannot be granted to the zamindar.

Petition under Article 226 of the Constitution of India, praying that in the circumstances stated in the affidavit filed therewith the High Court will be pleased to issue a writ of certiorari calling for the records in connection with the proceedings in B. R. Rt. No. 3284 (S.E.) of 1951 dated 3rd December, 1951, of the Board of Revenue pertaining to the vacant house site in the Municipalities within the Vizianagaram estate and quash the same.

P. Rami Reddi and V. Venkataramana Reddy for Petitioner.

The Order of the Court was made by

The Chief Justice.—The Rajah of Vizianagaram is the petitioner in this application. The estate of Vizianagaram was notified under the Madras Estates (Abolition and Conversion into Ryotwari) Act, 1948, in September, 1949. This application relates to certain vacant house sites in the town of Vizianagaram. These houses sites certainly form part of the estate of Vizianagaram. They are admittedly situated within the ambit of the estate and it is impossible to accept the contention raised in the affidavit that the petitioner's predecessor owned these lands before the Permanent Settlement. It is not suggested that they were parts of pre-settlement inams. It was contended that the permanent assessment was not arrived at after taking into account uncultivated arable lands and waste lands.

and these were given practically free to the zamindar without any additional assessment and therefore the vacant sites in question which fall under that category must be taken to be outside the scope of the permanent settlement. The contention is based on a fallacy. What passed to the zamindar under the sanad was not confined to the lands on which the peishcush was calculated—see *Prasada Row v. Secretary of State for India*¹. The fact that in 1802 no income accrued to the zamindar from these lands does not really affect the question. Once it is granted that these sites form part of the permanently settled estate, section 3 (b) of the Abolition Act certainly gives power to the Government to take them over unless the zamindar is entitled to be granted ryotwari patras under section 12 and similar provisions of the Act. Obviously, these lands do not fall within such provisions and the petitioner will not be entitled to a ryotwari patta in respect of them.

There is no reason therefore to quash the order of the Board of Revenue which gave effect to correct principles in directing the vesting of the sites in question in the Government.

The application is therefore dismissed.

Penal Code (XLV. of 1860), section 379—Removal of property—Intent to cause wrongful gain or loss—Absence of—Effect—Theft—Gist of offence.

Section 379 of the Indian Penal Code requires that the removal of the property from the possession of another should be with intent to cause wrongful gain to himself or wrongful loss to the other person. Dishonest intention is the gist of the offence. It is the intention of the taker which must determine whether the taking or removing of a thing is theft. When a person is prosecuted for the offence of theft it is for the prosecution to show that he was acting dishonestly. If the circumstances show that he was acting in the assertion of a bona fide claim of right, a dishonest intention cannot be attributed to him and the offence of theft would not be made out. Even where the bona fides of the claim is doubtful, the benefit of the doubt must be given to the accused and the criminal case thrown out. Such a doubt however must be a reasonable one. (Tests of reasonableness of doubt, and bona fides discussed.)

Taking by a person in assertion of a partnership and his right as a partner and claiming to be in joint possession when supported by reliable evidence as to claim of partnership is something more than a colourable pretence and justifies a doubt.
